Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Was it not really the assessor's?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Possibly.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—That is the same as the others.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, the court of revision may put on names that assessors omit, because the parties' names are known, It is the personal knowledge and acquaintance that is of very great value. The county judge, or whoever may be the revising officer, is not a party who can possess the knowledge. His personal knowledge must be confined to a few people and a very limited area, and so he stands in a wholly different position from that which the court of revision occupies in every village and in every township. Why, you take an ordinary electoral district in which there are say ten municipalities, and most of them will average more than that: How many are employed in the province of Ontario in the preparation of that list? You have the clerk and the five councillors and the assessor, seven persons in each of the ten municipalities; you have seventy persons whereas, under the Dominion system, you have one. Is there any comparison between the possibility of making a complete list under the one system as it stands compared with the other? I say that there is not.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—That one gets the benefit of the work of the seventy.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is mistaken.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—He can copy from their lists?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He can copy the assessment roll; that is all. And if the assessor should leave off a man who possesses the necessary income franchise, or leaves off a farmer's son, or an owner's son, that fact is known to the court of revision in the municipality, in the village or in the township; that fact cannot be known to the county judge unless it is specially brought to his attention. I say there is no comparison between the cheapness and efficiency which practically exist under the one system as compared with the condition of things existing under the other. Take any one province of this Dominion; will any hon. gentleman name a province where, in the preparation of the voters' lists there have been the same cost or expense incurred as in the preparation of the Dominion lists? Is there any member of the local legislature that has been put to $800 or $1,000 expense in looking after the revision of the list, and perhaps another man opposed to him politically incurring the same expenditure in looking after the list on the other side. Then you have all that to add to the cost of your revising officer, and the cost of the printing and preparation of the list. But that is not all. Under the present organization or system, you have a list that is a standing list from which names may be struck off upon sufficient evidence, upon which names may be put upon sufficient evidence, but under the provincial system you have a new list made every year, and it is far more inexpensive to prepare a new list than it is to undertake to revise the list existing. Then there are scarcely two revising officers that act precisely on the same principle. Let me take an illustration. A revising officer says to those who come before him "I will not strike off the name of any tenant on his list without you bring under my notice the evidence that his tenancy is at an end. You must subpœna the proprietor, or you must subpœna the tenant, and you must show to me that the tenancy no longer exists." Well, what is the effect of the bad adoption of that rule? The effect is that in nine cases out of ten those names stand on the list. The tenant has served his time, his tenancy is at an end; he may have moved to the United States and another tenant is in his place. You produce the assessor's roll and you show that there is another tenant's name there, and that the former tenant's name has disappeared; but the judge will tell you that it is quite possible that that tenancy may still exist, notwithstanding that a new tenant is on the property. He may have sublet it, or he may have sublet a portion of it; the result is that in many cases it would cost far more to the man who is interested in preparing a complete list to get the names of the parties removed than it would to make a new list outright for the year. Now, I am speaking of what has again and again come under my own knowledge; I am speaking of what I am conversant with practically, and I dare say every hon. gentleman who formerly sat in the House of Commons, and who is now a member here, has had experience of exactly the same kind. What difficulty can there be, then, in the adoption of the previous franchise? Surely the communities who are qualified for self-government and elect us, whether the qualification be exactly the same or not, are equally qualified to return members to the local legislature. Why cannot those representatives of the same people be entrusted to speak on this subject when they have all the machinery necessary for the purpose of preparing a list which is mutually advantageous both to them and to ourselves? We had this system for seventeen years, and no one ever complained of it; no one sitting in the House of Commons complained that it produced unsatisfactory results. No one said that the local legislatures had admitted men that were not qualified, or men that ought to be excluded from the electoral franchise, and so ought not to have the privilege of voting for members of this House. Practically, the qualifications in all the provinces are very much the same, and so no danger can flow to the constitution of the House of Commons in consequence of the adoption of this rule. Now I need not discuss the question of convenience further. I know this, every hon. gentleman knows it, that we have never had a voters' list prepared—and we ought to have one every year—at a cost of less than $300,000. In that you save an immense expenditure; you omit an immense expenditure of money made by private parties, by persons who desire to become candidates, by persons who already represent these constituencies, who are obliged to spend a great deal of time and to incur no inconsiderable amount of expenditure in order to perfect the list, so far as they can, by seeing that their own friends are put on it. Under the one system all that implies a very large expense, because there are meetings held by the judge in every township and in every group of polling divisions for the purpose of revision, and several parties are obliged to attend when that revision is made by the municipal council under municipal authority. All that waste of time and all that expenditure will be avoided, because the work is being carried on by those upon the ground who are specially conversant with the subject. Now let me call the attention of the House to the provisions of this bill. Section 5 practically brings in operation the laws of the different provinces. Subsection A provides:

> The qualifications necessary to entitle any person to vote thereat shall be those established by the laws of that province as necessary to entitle such person to vote in the same part of the province at a provincial election;

Then subsection B provides:

> The polling divisions shall be those established by or under the laws of that province for the purposes of provincial elections within the territory comprised in the electoral district for which such election is held.

Then subsection C provides:

> The voters' lists shall be those prepared for the several polling divisions so established and which on the sixtieth day next preceding the day fixed for the nomination of candidates for such Dominion election were in force or were last in force under the laws of that province for the purposes of provincial elections.

Then subsection D provides:

> Where, for any part of the province, polling divisions are not established by or under the laws of the province, but by or under such laws places are fixed where polls shall be opened and held at provincial elections and lists of the voters entitled to vote at such places at such elections have been prepared and are or have been in force, polls shall be opened and held in that part of the province at the same places, and the voters' lists so prepared and which are or were last in force shall be the voters' lists for the purposes of such Dominion election.

Subsection E provides:

> It shall be the duty and shall be within the power of the returning officer appointed by the Governor in Council to constitute polling divisions, and to appoint and fix polling places and polling stations in all cases where, under the laws of the province, it is respectively the duty or within the power of the returning officer or any other officer or person at provincial elections to do so; and the returning officer shall, in all cases, indicate such polling places and polling stations in the election proclamation.

In some provinces divisions are made in the way mentioned in the earlier of these subsections, but in some it is provided that the polling division shall be established by the returning officer. Where the provincial returning officer has the power to establish a polling division for provincial elections, the Dominion returning officer shall have the like power to establish polling divisions for a Dominion election. The provisions of the law of the provinces as to the places where non-residents shall vote, shall apply mutatis mutandi to such Dominion election, and the returning officer at such election shall have the power, and will be charged with the duties of sheriff and returning officer under these provisions. There are some of the provinces in which non-residents may vote, and so that feature of the provincial law of course remains in force in those provinces. There are some provinces where the voting is confined to the residents, and where that is the case that law will operate for a Dominion election in that province. The public opinion of the province of Ontario is very decidedly in favour of a residential vote. I know in some constituencies near the United States border that the result is that 100 and in some instances 200 or 300 persons have come from the United States, some of whom have been residents in that country for several years, some of whom have been naturalized citizens of the United States, but their names remaining upon the voters' list, for the reasons which I have already mentioned, or for other reasons, they come back and vote, and as soon as their vote is recorded, escape across the border again. That vote, in some instances, has been large enough to turn the scale of the election. I am sure that every fair-minded man, no matter what party he may belong to, will feel that a man who has cut his connection with his country, who has gone abroad, who has cast in his fortunes with another people, ought not to be permitted to come back to this country to vote. Our law has made provision against these parties being brought back at the expense of parties supplying tickets for them, and admission is practically made by these provisions of the law that it is a corrupt practice wherever such exists, but the temptation where men are opposed to each other, and where upon an examination of the voters' lists their friends find that they are persons who formerly voted with them who may be eight or ten years out of the country, but have their names still upon that list—the temptation is very great to bring these parties back again. There are corrupt practices of this kind which, no doubt, escape the supervision of the courts, which entail large expense upon the candidates and candidates' friends, and there is no way in which this abuse can be so effectively reached and put an end to as providing that the voter shall be a resident of the district in which his vote is recorded.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Some of the provinces have not gone as far as Ontario has in that regard. We do not propose by this bill to interfere with their opinions as to what is right or best in the matter by undertaking to alter or modify the law, but I have no doubt whatever that, after a common system is adopted between the Dominion and the provinces, by friendly communication with the government, reasonable views with regard to this and other matters will ultimately prevail. Section 6 provides against the removal from the list or the disqualification of parties who would otherwise be qualified because of official disability imposed upon them. Section 6 reads as follows:

No person possessed of the qualifications generally required by the provincial law to entitle him to vote at a provincial election, shall be disqualified from voting at a Dominion election merely by reason of any provision of the provincial law disqualifying from having his name on the list or from voting—

(a.) the holder of any office, or

(b.) any person employed in any capacity in the public service of Canada or of the province, or

(c.) any person belonging to or engaged in any profession, calling, employment or occupation, or

(d.) any one belonging to any other class of persons who, although possessed of the qualifications generally required by the provincial law, are by such law declared to be disqualified by reason of their belonging to such class.

Hon. gentlemen will see that, under the provisions of the law, where a province has undertaken to disqualify a party because he is a Dominion office holder, if he is qualified in every other respect, that will not prevent him from being recorded as an elector and entitled to vote at an election.

Hon Mr. PERLEY—How will you get his name on the list?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I will come to that provision later on.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Will judges be allowed to vote under this?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, because they are disqualified by the Dominion Act, and not by the provincial Act. If a man is qualified under the provincial Act he shall not be disqualified. The judges being disqualified by Dominion statute are not electors by the provisions of this Act. The question put by my hon. friend from Wolsely (Mr. Perley) is answered by the next subsection, which reads:

2. Any person possessed of the qualifications so generally required, except that his name had been omitted from the list of voters by reason or on account of some such disqualifying provision, may, nevertheless, if not otherwise disqualified, vote at a Dominion election at the place where, but for such omission, he would have been entitled to vote under subsection 1 of this section on his taking or offering to take before the deputy returning officer or other officer or person in charge of the polling place, the following oath, in addition to the oath which he might have been required to take if his name had been on the list, so far as such last mentioned oath is applicable, viz.:—

I (A. B.) do swear that I am legally qualified to vote at this election, and that I verily believe that my name was omitted from the list of voters by reason of my being at the time such list was prepared, and for no other reason.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—This man has to swear himself on the list? He takes an oath before he can vote?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, he takes an oath that he believes he is disqualified by reason of the office which he holds, but not otherwise.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—It is not fair to him that he should have to swear. I have known men who would not vote because they had to take an oath.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That cannot be helped. If a man suspects that another has been bribed, or improperly influenced to vote at an election, he may ask him to be sworn. If he thinks he has taken the oath of allegiance to some other government he may ask to have him sworn; and the man must take the oath or not vote at all, and this does not place the party who is required to take the oath in any worse position than any elector whose vote is challenged.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—In the case of a Quaker, what does he do?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He can affirm.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—It says here "swear."

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There are certain parties who, under the general law, are entitled to affirm. Then it is declared by subsection 3 of this section that certain persons shall not be affected by this Act. Then there is a clause with reference to the disqualification of criminals, lunatics and paupers, the same as is found in every statute. Then section 7 deals with the polling places. The province of New Brunswick is in a different position from the other provinces; if I remember rightly, there is no other province just in the same position, and it is provided here that where there is a large polling division containing more than 300 votes—and I understand they have 500 and 600 in some divisions—you may divide the voters' lists and have two or three voting places in the same division, requiring from A to K to vote in one division and those from K to S to vote in another, and those from S to Z to vote in a third.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Is that the law now?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is the law in New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I think it is the law in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is mistaken. In the province of Ontario, if there are more than a certain number in the polling division, it must be divided and two polling divisions established, but in the province of New Brunswick in many instances there is a polling division of several hundred, and instead of dividing the polling divisions into distinct different polling divisions as we do in Ontario, we establish different polling places in the same division.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—The result is the same.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Practically the same result. But in this case we meet the condition of affairs without in the slightest degree altering or amending the local law. The other subsections provide where the electors are to vote, and so on. Then there is provision made for cases where the polling division is not within the electoral district. You may have an electoral division—although that is very rarely the case—where the electoral boundaries do not correspond with the electoral boundaries in the Dominion, and in that case you may have a polling division that is a unit for the provincial election, which might have a part of it in one electoral division and part of it in another electoral division for the Dominion. In section 8 you have provision made for that. Section 9 provides that where the electoral list is more than one year old a new list may be made in conformity with the local law and local machinery. I do not know that I can fully go into a discussion in detail of all these different clauses, because they are matters of detail that can best be considered in committee and involve no special principle.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Will the hon. minister explain clause 19?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Clause 19 reads:

Subsection 1 of section 45 of the said Act is hereby repealed, and in lieu thereof it is hereby enacted that not more than one elector for each compartment shall at any one time enter the room where the poll is held, and each elector upon so entering shall declare his name and addition, and in the province of Prince Edward Island his qualification also, which shall be entered or recorded by the poll clerk in the poll-book provided for that purpose, which shall be kept in the form R in the first schedule to the Dominion Elections Act; and if the name is found on the list of voters for the polling district of such polling station, or if in any polling division whereby the provincial law no list of voters is required or provided such elector is found entitled to vote, or if his name is not on the list of voters, but he claims the right to vote under subsection 2 of section 6 of this Act, and takes the oath prescribed by that subsection, he shall receive from the deputy returning officer a ballot paper, on the back of which such deputy returning officer has previously put his initials, so placed that when the ballot is folded they can be seen without opening it, and on the counterfoil to which he has placed a number corresponding to that placed opposite the voter's name in the poll-book.

My hon. friend will see that that is a provision of our law as it now stands?

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Do you call that ballot secret?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly. It is not the provincial law. It is the law in force in the Dominion with regard to that particular class of cases, and my hon. friend will see that there is no departure from any rule which has not been already acted upon in the elections being held if there was no change in the law at all. So that it is not necessary for me to undertake to defend—

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—To defend what has been done in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No. My hon. friend has supported this very law.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I will give you my opinion shortly.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend thinks no good can come out of Nazareth, and he is disposed to look with suspicion on anything found in a government bill.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—There is no doubt about that. That is true.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And I can assure my hon. friend that in this case there is no occasion for this suspicion.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Are those tendered ballots counted? They are not under the old law.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I see no reason why they should not be. But this does not alter the law in that regard.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—If I understand this clause, the latter half of it refers entirely to Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It applies the existing law to that particular case. My hon. friend will see that it does not alter the law as it at present stands.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the hon. gentlemen will read the section of the Dominion Elections Act, they will find that it is word for word the same as this section. It will be observed in a subsequent section that the counterfoil is destroyed. It does not go in with the ballot.

Hon. Mr. McKINDSEY—The numbers are not consecutive?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no. It is not the local law at all.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that in this case there is a ballot with a counterfoil and the counterfoil is preserved; in our elections they are not so. The counterfoil is destroyed and so there is nothing whatever by which to trace the ballot.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In section 46 the deputy returning officer is directed first to detach and destroy the counterfoil and then he shall immediately place the ballot in the ballot box.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The question is whether the substitution of this clause for the one you have just read does not apply, the latter portion of it, to Prince Edward Island, as indicated by the hon. gentleman from Truro. You repeal that clause altogether : therefore it is no longer the law of the land ; but the clause which is substituted for it becomes the law and the question asked by my hon. friend from Truro is whether, by the wording of this clause, that portion of it to which you have referred does not apply exclusively to Prince Edward Island. That is the point to which the hon. minister's attention was called. I have compared them, and while both the hon. gentlemen who have spoken have failed to point out the difference between the two, I will do it for them. The word "surname" is left out and these are the words that are added after making that alteration. It says :

And in the province of Prince Edward Island his qualification also, which shall be entered or recorded by the poll clerk in the poll-book provided for that purpose, which shall be kept in the form R in the first schedule to The Dominion Lands Act ; and if the name is found on the list of voters for the polling district of such polling station.

Now, these are the words which are added :

Or if in any polling division where by provincial law no list of voters is required.

As is the case in Prince Edward Island.

Or provided such elector is found entitled to vote or if his name is not on the list of voters but he claims the right to vote under subsection 2, of section 6 of this Act.

That is the Act to which my hon. friend refers.

And takes the oath prescribed by that subsection.

These are the new words, and then it says :

He shall receive from the deputy returning officer a ballot paper, on the back of which such deputy returning officer has previously put his initials, so placed that when the ballot is folded they can be seen without opening it, and on the counterfoil to which he has placed a number corresponding to that placed opposite the voter's name in the poll-book.

That is applicable under the old law to all polling divisions ; is it so under the wording of this bill ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly. My hon. friend will see, if he reads this a little more carefully, that it is not confined to Prince Edward Island, that it is a general provision.

Subsection 1 of section 45 of the said Act is hereby repealed and in lieu thereof it is hereby enacted that not more than one elector for each compartment shall, at any one time, enter the room where the poll is held, and each elector upon so entering shall declare his name and addition, and in the province of Prince Edward Island his qualification also.

Now that is the only difference between Prince Edward Island and any other place.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is a further difference.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that it is simply providing for a series of contingencies and the position of Prince Edward Island is peculiar.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—I think there is a great improvement in the ballot ; I compliment the hon. gentleman in having accepted the Quebec ballot.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I do not object to the second reading of the bill. Some improvement in the election law of this country is wanted. What I am particularly interested in is the marking of the ballots. We have had some experience of the ballot in Ontario, and we find that it is not a secret ballot, but is held as a whip by the government over their employees and the holders of licenses. The hon. gentleman says that the qualifications of voters are very much alike in all the provinces. I do not agree with him. We should have manhood suffrage all through this Dominion, because every one contributes to the revenue and every man is liable to military service in time of trouble. My hon. friend says that the qualifications of voters are the same in all the provinces ; how is it in Quebec ? In Ontario we have one man one vote ; in Quebec an elector can vote wherever he holds property.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—But we can only elect sixty-five members from the province.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Why should not a man living in Ontario have as many votes as if he lived in Quebec ? In Quebec the qualification of a voter is possession of bricks and mortar and land ; in Ontario the qualification is the possession of brains. I do not mean to reflect on the province of Quebec ; I simply state a fact. The hon. Minister of Justice speaks of the expense of the present system. I admit that it is expensive, but what do the government propose to do? Instead of paying it themselves, they are going to throw the charge on the municipalities.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This bill does not impose anything on the municipalities.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—As I said before, we have had such an experience of the ballot in Ontario that we are all interested in avoiding the same evil in this measure. The object of the ballot is to protect the voter, but in Ontario every vote can be traced. That is why I have questioned the minister on the subject, because I do not wish to see the Ontario system adopted here. I am glad to hear him say that it will not be, and we will hold him responsible for that We will be able to see, when we get into committee on this bill, what sort of legislation we are getting. If it has the effect of enabling the government to trace how ballots are marked in any part of Canada, I should vote against the bill if I had to vote alone. Give us either a secret ballot or open voting. That has been the case in the province of Ontario and it is no wonder I feel tender on that point of secret ballots. The ballot works well because it gives a quiet election, and there is not that excitement in voting by ballot that there used to be when we had open voting. As I said before, I am not going to detain the House in saying anything now; I may have something to say when the House is in committee on the bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not my intention to enter into a discussion of the details of this bill at this stage. If we pursued the same course which was followed by the hon. Secretary of State in 1885, when the Franchise Bill was submitted to this House, we might dispense with all discussion upon the question. At that time the hon. gentleman, supported by those by whom he was surrounded at the time, moved the six months' hoist to the Franchise Bill, thereby recognizing the right of the Senate to interfere even with the franchise which elects the members to the popular branch of parliament. I do not say that we propose to adopt that principle on the present occasion; and, speaking for myself, for this reason I think it would be a great pity if the party opposite, to which my hon. friend belongs, should be disappointed in placing at least one of the measures which they promised to the people upon the statute-book. Despite the numerous violations of their promises they are determined to carry out this one if they are permitted to do so, and I do not know that we should take the responsibility of preventing them acting at least in one particular in accordance with the many pledges and promises they have made; not only in the legislative halls of the country, but at their conventions and to the people. I congratulate them upon being honest at least in one particular. I, however, must differ to a certain extent from my hon. friend who has addressed the House, in the views which he has attributed to those who oppose the principle involved in this bill, and that is that we are divesting ourselves of power which we should exercise. Now, I readily admit that in delegating the power we have under the constitution to another body, it is a voluntary act of our own, and consequently if we divest ourselves of it we place ourselves in the same position as we do when enacting, in any case, a law which interferes with what we consider our rights or our privileges; but what we object to more than anything else is the fact that it creates a franchise for the election of members to the popular branch of the legislature upon a system which is not uniform in its character. Take the province of Quebec, to which my hon. friend from Monck referred a few moments ago. A man holding property qualification in a dozen different constituencies is enabled to record his vote for a representative to the House of Commons in each of them. That is a recognition of the right of property. In other provinces the franchise is based upon manhood suffrage to a greater or less extent. Then it gives a voter, under certain circumstances in one province, the opportunity of recording his vote in favour of a number of candidates, providing he has the qualification, while in Ontario, where I live, I might own any amount of property and, under certain circumstances, have no vote at all.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But the same system exists under the Dominion Act. Under the Dominion Act I voted five times on the 23rd of June, 1896.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know that. I was under the impression that that is what I endeavoured to point out, that under the Dominion Act as it exists an elector can vote in each of the electoral districts in which he owns property, but under the local Franchise Act of Ontario he cannot. For instance, I was living in the city of Ottawa when I was a member of the government. I had a vote in the three ridings of the county in which I formerly lived, but in the city of Ottawa I was not upon the voters' list, and consequently under the Ontario local franchise Act I had no vote in the city in which I resided and had been living for seventeen or eighteen years, and not being a resident, under the law, in the county of Hastings I had no vote at all, while in the province of Quebec, no matter where you live, you can go and record your vote where you are on the assessment roll and represent the property you own. I commend the people of the province of Quebec for retaining that principle upon their statute-book. But that is not the case with us, hence there will be no uniformity in the future for the election of members to a legislature in which each has the same rights, the same powers, and the same privileges. Now, I am not so democratic as to believe that those who have, through industry attained a position of wealth in a country, and consequently pay the greatest amount of taxes locally and otherwise, should not have a preponderating power and a preponderating influence over those who have no status at all in the country, other than their existence. I know that is a theory that many of our friends, and more particularly my hon. friend opposite, I have no doubt, would object to.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No; I am not combating it. I am combating the application.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I believe that universal suffrage, as applicable to the Dominion Parliament, is nearer a true principle than it is when applied to the local legislatures, and for this reason: the local legislatures have the power to deal with civil rights and property, giving power to municipalities to impose direct taxation upon every individual who has to pay in proportion to the property which he owns; while the Dominion Parliament compels you to pay to the revenue of the country, only in proportion to the consumption of dutiable and excise goods. There is the difference between the two; but that is not a question that I need argue at the present moment, nor need I occupy the time of the House in dwelling upon that principle, because it is not involved directly in this discussion; but I would like to ask, while we are divesting ourselves of the power, by the present bill, of having a uniform franchise for the Dominion, whether that law is to apply to the franchise which exists in the different provinces at the present moment, or to apply with the same force in case the provincial legislatures change, alter or amend them. I take it for granted they will: so that while we are relegating our power at the present moment to the local legislatures so far as the franchise is concerned; we know that in doing that, precisely what we are losing, but we cannot know in the future what they may do or how they may amend the law.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—In anticipation of an election.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Precisely, in anticipation of an election, as we know has been done in some of the maritime provinces, and as we know was done in one case in our own province. After the lists had been revised, after everything was ready to go to the election, it was determined by the Ontario government to hold an election at an earlier period than it was necessary to hold it, and they actually passed a law to have the lists of the whole province revised, and every candidate had to travel through his whole county in order to watch the revision of the voters' lists. Why do I have a distinct recollection of that? Because in a large county like my own, which is about 30 miles wide and 100 miles deep, and has 19 municipal divisions, I had to go to each poll, or employ somebody to go to each poll to see that the voters' lists were not manipulated against myself and against the party to which I belong. Now, that can be carried to any extent by the local legislatures, and we know it has been done in the maritime provinces to the extent of disqualifying a large number of voters just before an election, and I believe after the hon. gentleman came into power in one of the province they changed it (A laugh.)—An hon. gentleman opposite laughs; that may be considered a very shrewd political trick, but I doubt whether any man would consider it a moral act on the part of a politician at least, and there should be some little morality among politicians.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I was not the party who laughed, but I wanted simply to state that the late Attorney General in the Conservative provincial government of Quebec, the Hon. Mr. Pelletier, as a private member in the Mercier administration disqualified the federal employees under the provincial law, and after he changed his allegiance and returned to the Conservative party in 1892, himself moved to wipe out the law that he had passed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not at all surprised at the acts of the gentleman to whom he referred nor would I be surprised—

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Will the hon. gentleman allow me to say a word? The law by which the employees were disqualified was passed by the government of the Hon. Mr. Mercier, and this change was made by another government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was about to say that I am not at all surprised at any act which would be committed by a member of the Mercier government. That Mr. Pelletier so far forgot himself as to join that government and become a colleague of Mr. Mercier, was a sufficient reason why he resorted to trickery of that kind. The moment he found that he could no longer, as an honest man, having any regard for his own reputation, continue his connection with that government and with that leader, he reverted, as my hon. friend says, to his former allegiance, and in doing that he accepted a more honest policy and carried it out. I congratulate him on his conversion, and I congratulate him still further in trying to undo the iniquitous acts which characterized the administration of which he had been a member. My hon. friend (Mr. Mills) in his speech in moving the second reading of this bill, will not, I am sure, object when we go into committee—at least, I hope he will not object—to have such amendments made to the bill which would not interfere to any great extent with the principles which he has laid down. I know that in the other House, when it was proposed to give the right of appeal where a wrong had been committed, the reason advanced by the premier was that it would be an interference with the principle of the provincial franchise. Now, as you have departed from that in one particular instance, where you give a vote to those who had been disfranchised for political or other reasons, you surely will not object to the adoption of the other principle by which every man can secure his right before a judge of the land. Now, I can give an illustration of my own; if we had had no appeal to the judge in the county of Hastings, I should have had no vote in the east riding of the county of Hastings. The assessor assessed me, and had done so for years, for a sum sufficient to entitle me to vote. He served me with a notice paper; I paid no attention to it, but when the list was printed I found that my name was omitted and I wrote from Ottawa to my lawyer in Belleville to ascertain how that had occurred. He went and examined the records and found that the assessor, after serving me with a notice which showed upon its face that I had been assessed for a sufficient sum to give me a vote, had actually reduced it by $50, to cut me out of the vote. I appealed at once to the late Judge Sherwin to have my name restored, and upon the facts being proved to the court, my name was restored. Now, take an instance of this kind. I am very much inclined to think that this assessor is only a counterpart of a great many others in the different parts of the country and had I not fortunately for myself—

Hon. Mr. MILLER—If you had been in Nova Scotia you could not have got your name put on.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the point I am coming to. If it had been in Nova Scotia or Manitoba, I would have been deprived of that vote. That is one illustration. There are thousands that can be given of an equally iniquitous character. I hope my hon. friend the Minister of Justice will see the force of the statement which I have made and accept the amendment, a notice of which has been given by my hon. friend from Richmond. My hon. friend talked about the expense under the present law. I have figures in my hand to show that the registration of the voters' list in this city, a short time ago, cost two or three cents per head more than it did under the Franchise Act. I have also statements of the city of Toronto to prove the same fact. Another complaint was about the printing of the lists for the whole Dominion in Ottawa, the most singular provision is this, that of all these voters' lists the type is to be kept standing in the printer's office. I have not consulted a printer, but I intend before the bill passes, to try and ascertain how many tons of type it will require to keep all the voters' lists of the Dominion standing. I have some little knowledge of the printing business, and I do not hesitate to tell my friends who do not know, that to take the voters' list of the city of Ottawa, or of Toronto, or of Montreal (my statement will not apply with so much force to the rural constituencies), the voters' lists of any city and change them after one or two years, it will cost less to set up and put in type the whole of the voters' list than it will to attempt to correct them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They have the type set up now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not talking about the law as it stands; I am talking about the law which you propose to enact. I say that in a case where the changes in the voters' list are so numerous as they are in all cities, it would be much better not to go to the expense of keeping the type standing, but to re-set it when the time came to prepare the list. I venture the prediction that you will find the expenses attending the preparation of these lists, particularly where you have a new list, to be equal to, if not greater than the old system which was in that respect objectionable. Then you must bear in mind, when we talk about the expenses attending the preparing of the last list and comparing it with the preparation of lists in the provinces, that there is no analogy between the two. I will speak of my own province and leave other members to speak of theirs. Every municipality, after the assessment is made, makes out its own voters' list, and that is printed and revised, and you can appeal to the judge. But the expense does not appear to the people of the Dominion, because that is paid by each individual municipality; but if you aggregate the total expense attending the formation of the lists of the provinces, I venture the assertion that it would be found to be much greater than the old system of preparing the voters' list for the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is not duplicated.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I knew the answer my hon. friend would advance. That may be all true, but you do not have to duplicate it under that system. I do not propose to deal much further with these points. I think the bill will be found impracticable in its working, unless amended as suggested by the hon. gentleman from Richmond (Mr. Miller), and amended in other ways, which my hon. friend will see the necessity for. We will try and make it as palatable as possible, and amend only so far as it affects the great principle of uniformity which I am very partial to. My hon. friend has referred to Sir John Thompson and his proposition to adopt the local franchises for the Dominion. That statement was also made in the House of Commons. Is that correct? All that the Hon. Sir John Thompson proposed was to take the local lists upon which to form the Dominion franchise.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Hear, hear. I quoted from Sir John Thompson's speech last session.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend from Richmond is quite correct. Had Sir John Thompson lived and remained in power, I doubt not that we should have had a much simpler system of providing a franchise law for the Dominion than we have at present. We all learned by experience that that was his intention, and taking the different local franchises as they exist, their lists were to form a basis for a franchise for the Dominion. I merely refer to that in order to show exactly what the late premier of the country intended to do, and what, I doubt not, he would have done had he lived and remained in power for any length of time.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the House goes into committee on this measure, I wish to offer a few observations upon it, and I wish to get the ear of my hon. friend the leader of the House while I point out to him some very serious difficulties which present themselves in the application of this bill to the little province of Prince Edward Island, from which I come. It is not necessary to discuss at any great length the general principles involved in the bill. I must say, however, that I regret exceedingly that we should depart from that road of improvement we have been following for a long time in the way of developing the idea of union between the different provinces of Canada. The trend of legislation ever since confederation has been to bring the provinces more together, to centralize authority, as it were, and such legislation has had a very beneficial effect in doing away with local feeling and in strengthening the idea that we are one people. I regard this measure as a retrograde step in that view. We are going back from the position we took in 1885—a position that was plainly settled at confederation, when it was provided that the local lists should remain as the lists on which federal elections should be held until the parliament of Canada should legislate upon the subject, thereby showing that the fathers of confederation had distinctly in their minds the adoption of a general federal list whenever the time would come and the parliament of the country would have time to deal with the question. We are going back on that and creating disunion. We are going in the direction of disintegration in place of consolidation in passing such a bill as this is. But that is not all. My hon. friend the leader of the House has claimed that this measure is in the interest of economy, that the expense will be lessened, and I know that in all the discussions we have had upon this franchise question, that has been the main ground put before the public in favour of going back to the provincial lists. I am very much afraid that that result will not be reached, for in addition to the facts stated by my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, in regard to the printing of the lists, it is provided in section 9 of this bill that wherever a provincial list shall be more than one year old, this government shall be at the expense of providing a fresh list, upon which elections shall be held. It may be that that may not occur very often, and it may occur quite often. It may happen that a province, seeing that they are not going to have an election, for some years, may suspend the preparing of a list for a year or two, in order to get the Dominion government to do the work for them. They have the power to do that. They may make it imperative on this government to go to work and be at all the expense of preparing lists, just as we were before. Then there is the keeping of the type standing, which will be a large item of expense. Then when we are going to hold an election, the law is printed and furnished to the election officials. I have here one provided at last general election for the use of election officers. When an election is being held the returning officer and deputy returning officer and all other officials intrusted in any respect with the conduct of the election will have to be supplied not only with our own laws, not only with the bill we are now passing and the Dominion Elections Act, but they will also have to be supplied with printed copies of the laws of all the provinces of Canada. You will then have not simply this volume, to print but you will have others ; and my own province will furnish a volume quite as large as this. It will have to be printed at the expense of Canada and furnished to the deputy returning officers in the election. And then there is another difficulty which is not altogether a matter of expense. These presiding officers are not professional men, and are not accustomed to perusing statutes, and you will have them wading through these federal and provincial statutes where they are made legislators and are required to change the form of an affidavit or a section in order to make them applicable. You will have a voluminous set of laws put in the hands of these men, and they are called upon to make these laws applicable, to change them in many respects where it would almost puzzle a lawyer to make them fit in one with the other. Such is the incongruous character of this legislation. My hon. friend the leader of the House said a few minutes ago that from 1867 to 1885, we got on very well holding our elections on the local franchises and my hon. friend seemed to infer that what we did then we can do just as well now. He appears to have lost sight of the fact that circumstances have changed very much. During these years since the passing of the Franchise Act in 1885, we have been amending and changing and re-enacting our Dominion Elections Act to make it harmonize and fit into our Dominion Franchise Act. You are now passing a bill which has not been drafted in conformity with your Dominion Elections Act, and without any or regard for the election laws of the various provinces, and in a short bill of this kind you are trying to dove-tail it in and make it work in connection with the Dominion Elections Act which was framed without any reference to it, and you will also have to work it in connection with the election law of the seven provinces of Canada, which will lead to difficulty and confusion of the most serious character. I will point out one of those difficulties in my own province, and I think when I have stated the objection and the difficulty which arises, the hon. gentleman will see the necessity of applying some amendment to this bill if he can. The elections in Prince Edward Island are held by open voting and there is no registration of votes under the provisions of our laws. This may seem to be a very extraordinary manner of conducting elections and perhaps not a good one, but it is the system we have there and we have worked our own ends with it. We have no revision or preparation of voters' lists. A man can go into a polling division on election day, take the necessary oath and record his vote. It is an open vote. If he is not qualified to vote, in the opinion of the agent or candidate against whom he is voting, an objection is made and that vote is subject to scrutiny afterwards. With regard to any votes being polled twice, there is provision for a summary scrutiny by the returning officer before the declaration is made, and in the event of the vote being a bad one, an undue return by reason of bad votes may be the subject of an election petition. We often have election trials where there is no corruption or bribery charged—simply a question of the qualification of voters. In all the other provinces you have revision before the election. We have ours afterwards, and that revision is held by the judges of the land, but only those votes that are objected to at the poll are scrutinized. The man who has the largest number of good votes is declared elected. Under the bill we are about to pass, you have a system of non-registration to be worked in connection with a ballot. The Dominion Ballot Act applies to Prince Edward Island and to every part of Canada. A man enters a polling booth and claims he has a vote. The candidate against whom he is voting is morally certain that he has no vote. But the man takes the oath. We know there are many people ready to do that, and there will be many more willing to do it, when they know that when their vote is in the ballot box, it cannot be questioned. That is what you are doing by this law. You are associating a nonregistrative election law with the ballot system, and you may have hundreds of men without lawful votes brought into the polling places and swearing to their right to vote. They must then get the ballot and it is put into the ballot box. It can never be traced afterwards and it cannot be ascertained legally how the man voted. This bill does not provide that any objection shall be noted. It would be useless to do so, because the vote cannot be scrutinized. The remedy we have in Prince Edward Island under our local law, by which bad votes can be eliminated and only good votes counted is taken away and you are going to throw the election into the power of the unscrupulous part of the community who can, so to speak, swamp the votes of good men. I point out these difficulties in connection with this bill. Of course, in the hon. gentleman's own province no such question as that presents itself, but you have this difficulty in the heart of the bill, as it applies to my province, and connected with this difficulty there are a great many other clauses in the bill which are open to serious objection. The oath to be taken is the local oath. He may swear that he has not voted in that electoral district. That electoral district means the local electoral district in the local laws. There are cases in which there are, either in whole or in part, four or five local electoral districts within the one Dominion electoral district. You impose on the election officers the duty of making an oath applicable or suitable for the purpose of the Dominion election. Supposing the presiding officer is not an honest man, or not able clearly to wade through all these statutes and find out what they mean, to go to the Dominion election law and go to the Dominion Franchise Act which we are passing, and find what they all mean when read in connection with the local law and he finds this oath the form he has to administer and he presents that oath to the voter and insists that it is right, where is the remedy? With that oath presented men may vote again and again in the same federal electoral district. Take the district of East Queen's, in which I reside myself; there are four local electoral districts embraced within that district in whole or in part. A man may own property in four places in that district and go forward and vote in each of them the local election.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He cannot do that in a Dominion election.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—He can if he takes the oath. My hon. friend says he cannot in a Dominion election, but he can only be prevented from doing so by the returning officer going over all these laws and settling in his mind the oath and making it applicable for the purpose of this election. He must alter the wording of the laws and the oath when they are presented.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend says no, and shakes his head, but when my hon. friend is as familiar with the subject as I am in my own province he will not dissent from the view I am presenting. Taken in connection with the fact that in Prince Edward Island there is open voting, and that under this bill we are passing is going to be associated with ballot voting you have danger springing up of a most serious character. In the boundary of two of the local electoral divisions in the East Queen's electoral district there is a line cutting off the ends of farms for ten or twelve miles, and owners may vote in each place and every one of those may probably vote twice in the electoral district of East Queen's. My hon. friend dissents from that. He seems to have the idea that the oath will stop it. But supposing it is not made applicable to that election which is being held, they take the oath and put the ballot in the box, and how can that be remedied?

It being six o'clock the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before recess, I was endeavouring to point out to the House, and more particularly to my hon. friends of the government, some incongruities in this bill when applied to the Dominion Election Act and to the provincial laws, and I was illustrating my meaning by reference to the laws of Prince Edward Island. The point I desire to make is apparent, or most apparent, when you take the Prince Edward Island case up. The same evils cannot arise under this bill in the other provinces because in the other provinces lists have to be made, and should persons make application and try to get their names repeated on lists, or to get their names on when they were not qualified and if the reviser should accept such names and make up a list of names in that way with repeaters on it, or disqualified persons, applications could be made to the court before the completion of the list, and the reviser could be compelled by mandamus, or some proceeding of that kind, either to add names of good qualified voters or to remove the names of those that were disqualified. That remedy arises, and is present in the formation of a list; but in Prince Edward Island there is no voters' list, and under the local law, as I have explained, there is open voting, and, consequently, when a vote is doubtful or bad, the candidate against whom it is recorded, or his agent, can mark it "objected," and then a scrutiny can be held, a summary scrutiny against repeated votes, before the returning officer, before a declaration is made and finally a scrutiny before the judges afterwards, and by means of that bad votes can be removed and the candidate who has a majority of good votes can ultimately be declared elected. That remedy exists under our local law, but when you attach a system that provides for no voters' list with ballot voting, a thoroughly secret system of ballot voting such as we have in Canada, it is possible for men to go to the polling booths and take all the oaths that are presented—believing that they are taking them honestly, or perhaps not, it does not matter what their beliefs may be—if their votes are bad and the ballot is given to them and put in the ballot box, the injury that is done is irrevocable, and the candidate having a majority of good votes may find himself at the foot of the poll and there is no remedy whatever under this legislation in order to get the man who has the majority of good votes elected. I have referred to the great difficulties which surround the adoption of this bill. The effect of attempting to engraft on the Dominion election law, which was framed for the old Franchise Act with a proper and thorough system of a preparation of voters' lists by the Dominion of Canada on a law of this kind proposing to bring in the laws of the different provinces with regard to the making of the lists and the qualification of electors, is that we bring in with us the whole of these local laws, and we bring together a most incongruous mass with which a layman will be utterly helpless as a presiding officer or a returning officer at the time of an election. I submit to my hon. friend that some remedy should be provided for this. It might be got by the adoption of the English ballot, which I think is in force in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Or by the legislature arranging their law.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes, it could be got that way if the provincial legislature changed their law, but we are providing a Franchise Act for the Dominion of Canada, and surely my hon. friend does not think we would be doing right to imperil the franchise of the people of a province, be it ever so small, and merely say that the local legislature should make that right. It is not their business to make it right.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—They have a system there that worked well for their own purposes. They have open voting and they have no lists, and the purging of the voters' list can be done in time before the declaration of the candidate's election, and in this way the will of the electors can be declared and declared properly. That is the way it works under the provincial law; but here you are engrafting a ballot system upon a non-registration plan such as we have in Prince Edward Island, and you bring in with it this difficulty, that men can go into the polling booths, take the oaths there, believing they are doing right or wrong, for that does not affect the question in the slightest degree—they can go into the polling booths, take the oaths and answer the questions and their names will be accepted, and have to be accepted; the presiding officer has no option if the vote appears at all events reasonable on the face of it, and having given them the ballot, the ballot is put into the ballot box and there is no remedy. The remedy might be found by the adoption of the English ballot under which, when a vote is doubtful a candidate believing it is recorded against him can object to it on the ground that the man is not qualified to vote, and a number would be allowed to be placed on the ballot, and a corresponding number in the poll book, and then afterwards the merits of the vote might be inquired into in court. That is what is done in England, the vote is inquired into in court and declared good or bad. If the vote is declared bad, the candidate who received that vote loses it and the election is made good in that way. If a provision of that kind could be inserted in this bill, it would provide for the difficulty that I am pointing out, although I am afraid it would bring with it some other difficulties inasmuch as if you made this provision with regard to votes that should be objected to, parties might object to votes purposely, with a view to an investigation to discover how a man voted, and an evil might arise in that way. However, I point out to my hon. friend the threatened injury that will arise from the adoption of this bill and the application of the ballot system with the voting without a list as exists in Prince Edward Island. It will be of such a nature that very great wrong may be done, and in many cases the man who is not entitled to election, through the unscrupulous character of his agents and supporters, may succeed in getting a majority of the votes when he is not legally and fairly entitled to it. I have spoken at this stage in order that my hon. friend may know the nature of the point I wish to have dealt with, because whatever the government may do, when I have put myself fairly on record, I will have done my duty in the matter. I do not feel myself qualified to suggest amendments to a bill of this kind. I know it will be a very difficult matter. Only a professional man, after a very careful examination of the different measures, could undertake to suggest an amendment that would not throw out of joint some other provisions in a bill of this character and the other laws which are to be worked with it. I have put this matter before my hon. friends, and when we get into committee I intend to bring it up, and I hope that when we reach that stage the members of the government will be prepared to submit some plan by which the difficulty can be got over. Before I sit down I wish to point out another anomaly which exists in this bill with regard to Prince Edward Island. Section 5, subsection F of this bill, reads as follows:

> The provisions of the law of the province as to the places where non-resident electors shall vote shall apply mutatis mutandis to such Dominion election, and the returning officer at such election shall have the powers and shall be charged with the duties of the sheriff or returning officer under those provisions.

It provides that the places where non-resident electors shall vote shall be as under the provincial franchise. Now we turn to the election laws of Prince Edward Island, and we find there that there is a system of special voting provided to meet the case of non-resident voters. A man may vote at one polling division for every local electoral district where he has property in Prince Edward Island, and the intention of that section must be that the same method should be applied in Dominion elections. Perhaps my hon. friend has not for himself looked at the provincial laws and inquired into the system that prevails in Prince Edward Island and which I do not know prevails anywhere else, but it has worked admirably there for nearly forty years. If absentees are to vote at all it is a system that gets rid of the great expense and the temptation to corrupt practices that exist in connection with sending voters long distances to record their votes. Under the Prince Edward Island law a schedule is prepared and a voter declares the property qualification on which he votes and intimates the name of the candidate for whom he wants to vote. It is then the duty of the presiding officer to accept these schedules, and they are forwarded to the returning officer of the constituency in which the absentee has a vote. The drafters of this bill, no doubt, had this in view, for it says here that :

> The returning officer at such election shall have the powers and be charged with the duties of the sheriff or returning officer under those provisions.

That must refer to the system in Prince Edward Island of transmitting these schedule votes ; but that too can only be carried out in connection with an open voting system. It would be very difficult to suggest how you could have separate ballot boxes and how these ballot boxes could be forwarded, although it is possible that it could be done, but it would require a great deal of consideration to do it. In Prince Edward Island it works very easily. A man when he is polling his vote for the electoral district where he resides presents a schedule describing the qualification he possesses in any other districts in which he may have property. There are forms of affidavits, and he swears to his qualification and states the candidate for whom he wishes to vote. The returning officer takes the oath ; he signs it and forwards it to the sheriff as required under the law, and the sheriff forwards it to the returning officer of the district in which he wished the vote recorded and where it must be counted for a candidate in whose behalf it is given.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—How about the federal elections ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Just the same as in the rest of Canada; we have uniformity now, but the difficulties I am pointing out to you just show what a muddle we are apt to get into by passing this bill. Here we are running against all kinds of difficulties on every hand. The correct principle would be to stick to the old form, to the making of lists for ourselves. Cheapen it, improve it ; surely it is possible to do that, but beware of getting into such a dangerous position as we would find ourselves in when we wander in the way in which we are now proposing to do. I do not intend to pursue these objections any further at the present moment, and I have just indicated two of the difficulties that are to be met with, and that will be met with, I think, before this measure can be safely made law.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—What my hon. friend practically proposes is that you should have a voters' list in Prince Edward Island, precisely the same as elsewhere ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If we had that there would be no difficulty. Turning to section nine of the bill that we are now considering, I find it is provided, as my hon. friend explained to the House, that where a provincial voters' list is more than one year old, then it shall be the duty of the Federal government, under this law, to provide a voters' list under its own auspices, for the purpose of holding a Dominion election. Now, I do not think it would be unreasonable to provide there, that not only in any province where the list is more than a year old, but in the province of Prince Edward Island, where there is no list a list should be provided. If that were done, if the proper means were devised for providing a list in Prince Edward Island the difficulties I have pointed out would vanish as far as that province is concerned, and then we should have to deal only with the general questions which have been presented to the House by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, and which have not escaped observation by my hon. friend the leader of the House in his remarks in the opening of this discussion. I think that it is necessary that this should be done. I feel that I have done my duty in calling attention to it, and I think my hon. friend, the leader of the House, will see the necessity of making some provisions that will meet the difficulties I have been suggesting. I may say that one of the strongest objections I felt all along with reference to the adoption of the provincial franchises has been got over in this bill, and that is the danger of the provincial legislatures taking away the rights and privileges of citizens for the purpose of gaining party advantages. I am very glad that that objection has been got over, for I looked upon it from the first as being the most serious one of all; and I think that, with the adoption of some other amendments, possibly the bill can be made to work less harm than we thought some time ago that a measure of this kind would inevitably work; although I still believe it will do great harm for working for disunion and disintegration, for perplexing officials in the law, and in altogether giving a great deal more trouble than we have had in the past. I noticed the observations made by hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Dandurand) in regard to the action of the legislature of Quebec in taking away the votes of the Dominion officials. He seemed to think that it was very discreditable to one public man that he had been found voting for the measure disqualifying Dominion officials, and some time later, as a member of another government, supporting or introducing a bill, restoring the qualification that had been taken away from these persons. One of the reasons why we felt in our province a great deal of alarm when this measure was first submitted was on account of the treatment that Dominion officials had received at the hands of the provincial government in Prince Edward Island. In that province, in 1893, immediately before the provincial election, a measure was introduced by the Peters's administration disfranchising Dominion officials, making a clean sweep of them, and forcing them to take an oath which no men enjoying emoluments of almost any kind to any extent under the government of Canada could take, and consequently they were disfranchised. The reason given for it was that these men were not independent, that they were influenced by the federal government, that to relieve them from the awkward position in which they were from having to vote, some of them against their consciences, this Act was passed and they were disfranchised. Years went by and the Dominion government changed hands; the same provincial government remained in power and before their elections came on they coolly repealed their own Act, and intimidation by the federal government did not seem to be so serious after all, so long as it was exercised in their own interest. But, as I said before, the clause that was inserted in the bill in the House of Commons removes that objection almost entirely, and we have now to meet the bill on other grounds, some of which are of very considerable importance, but do not lie so close to the root of the whole matter as the one to which I have referred, and which I am happy to say is now out of the way.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I do not purpose to detain the House at any length on the motion before us, but the proper time to take exception to the principle of a bill is on the second reading, and, of course, if I had any intention of moving against the second reading I would feel it my duty to give my reasons at length for doing so. But, as it is not my intention to take any such step, as I intend to allow the bill to go a second reading, I feel that I am under no necessity for going at any length into an argument on the subject, as I would be bound to do had I determined to divide the House upon the bill. I wish it, however, to be clearly understood that I am not in favour of the principle of the bill; I am opposed to the bill from beginning to end, principle and details. I think it has been very properly termed a retrograde step, and it is founded upon a principle which is altogether at variance with the intention of the British North America Act. It was never the intention of that Act, and it was never the intention of the framers of the constitution, that the franchise of the Dominion should be regulated by the provincial legislatures. It is true that in the Confederation Act provision was made for the use of the provincial franchises until the parliament of Canada otherwise provided, but the very language of the British North America Act is clear that it was the intention of the Parliament that passed it that in due time the Dominion parliament should frame a Dominion Electoral Franchise Act. That has been done. I cannot say that the attempt has been a decided success, but I am quite confident that there is enough experience and ability in the House of Commons to frame a good Dominion Electoral Franchise Act for this parliament if the attempt were made. Had the late Sir John Thompson lived, we would have received such an amendment to the present law as would have made it satisfactory to the whole country. As it is, we are now going to have a most unsatisfactory state of affairs. We are going to have a patch work franchise, such as no other country in the world, I venture to say, possesses; but as the government have decided to take that course, and as we have decided not to oppose the principle of the bill, I consider it unnecessary that I should lengthen my remarks on the subject.

When the bill goes to committee, it is my intention to move the amendment of which I gave notice to-day, and I have no doubt that every member of the House will admit the fairness, the propriety, the justice of the amendment which I desire to make to the bill with the consent of the House. I am sure there is not a man in this country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, whose sense of justice will not declare that the amendment which I desire to add to the bill is such as will improve it and render it more acceptable to all classes of the people. I am confident that I shall have the support of the House; otherwise the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island will be in a very different position from the larger provinces of the Dominion, who have the protection of the judiciary in the administration of the local laws. If we are to accept the local laws—and I do not now, of course, object, having decided not to move against the principle of the bill—we should have every guarantee that the execution of those laws will be honest, fair and impartial, and under the system which prevails in Nova Scotia that is altogether out of the question, unless we get the protection which I intend to ask the House to give us under the amendment which I have laid upon the table to-day.

There is, however, a question on which I wish to say a few words on the present occasion. There seems to be an opinion in some quarters that this question of one electoral franchise is a domestic matter for the House of Commons to deal with, and that it is a mere perfunctory performance on our part to revise or consider it in this chamber. I wish, for my own part, to say that I consider that to be a grave error. I not only think that this is not a mere domestic matter for the House of Commons, but I think it is one of the questions which it is the special duty of this House to revise and control. There is no subject of legislation in regard to which there is more danger of injustice and wrong being perpetrated by a corrupt or partisan majority in the House of Commons than this very question. It is, therefore, one of the subjects with which we have to deal, because the very moment a corrupt or partizan House of Commons came into power, they might pass a franchise bill which would perpetrate the grossest injustice in every part of the Dominion. Of course, I do not mean to insinuate for a moment that that state of affairs exists at the present time. But the principles I lay down here are sound principles, as I shall show the House before I resume my seat. We all know there are two or three instances which stand out boldly in English parliamentary annals in connection with electoral reform. The first is the great Reform Act of 1832, on which, as we are all aware, the House of Lords, perhaps the only time within the present century, risked its existence by its hostility to that measure. But I do not intend to go back over fifty years for precedents to guide the action of this House to-day upon a constitutional question of this kind. I intend to draw the attention of the House to the last great occasion upon which the British franchise was remodelled. That was in 1884, under the administration of the great statesman who has just been laid to rest in Westminster Abbey. That bill was only second in importance to the great act of Reform in 1832. That bill added to the electorate of Great Britain no less than 2,000,000 voters, and it was admitted on all sides that a Redistribution Act accompany it. It was felt by the conservative party, then in opposition, that in the Redistribution Bill the grossest injustice might be perpetrated towards that party, and they took the stand firmly that until the Redistribution Bill was submitted, such a Redistribution Bill as met their approval, they would not allow the second reading of the Representation Bill to pass the House of Lords. It is a case which clearly illustrates my point with regard to the authority of that House upon these questions which I desire to lay before hon. gentlemen, because I am surprised to find the idea prevailing anywhere that this is one of the questions with which this House has no constitutional right to meddle. Now, that great act of reform introduced by Mr. Gladstone on the 5th February, 1884, passed its third reading early in July of the same year. It was sent to the House of Lords, but the Redistribution Bill had not got through committee, although introduced into the House of Commons, and it was unsatisfactory, and the House of Lords took the stand upon that occasion that until a satisfactory Redistribution bill was laid before the House, they would not give the Representation bill a second reading. The speeches upon this occasion are most illustrative of the point that I wish now to make, that is the right assumed by the Lords in dealing with the subject as if it were an ordinary bill of another character, but as I have no desire to detain the House at any length, I will simply read the resolutions which had the effect of defeating the bill for that session. The bill was defeated on the second reading, and a special session had to be called in the autumn following, under the promise of the government that at that session a Redistribution bill, satisfactory to both parties, would be submitted before the Representation bill was again introduced. When the Representation bill came to the House of Lords, a motion was made by the Earl Cairns, and the motion was so expressive and clear, and so asserting the authority of the House of Lords in dealing with this question and exercising a controlling power over it, that I cannot in any words put the point more clearly than by reading the motion which Lord Cairns made on that occasion. The amendment was to leave out from "that" and insert:

> This House, while prepared to concur in a well-considered and complete scheme for the extension of the franchise, does not think it right to assent to the second reading of a Bill having for its object a fundamental change in the constitution of the electoral body of the United Kingdom, but which is not accompanied by provisions for so apportioning the right to return members as to ensure a true and fair representation of the people, or by any adequate security in the proposals of the Government that the present bill shall not come into operation, except as part of an entire scheme.

That resolution was on the following day passed. The result was the bill had to be dropped. Parliament was prorogued, and the government entered into negotiations with the leader of the Opposition in order to secure a fair redistribution bill. Now, on that occasion there was no intimidation of the House of Lords by ministers of the crown. There was no talk of abolishing the House for taking that high stand upon that important question, except among professional agitators, a question in comparison with which the question before the Senate to-day is trifling indeed. Mr. Gladstone spoke in the most fair and courteous way of the right of the Lords to assume the position they did, and Earl Granville did the same thing in the House of Lords. I will quote some of the latter's remarks admitting the perfect right of the House of Lords to take the action it did and agreeing after the prorogation and before the extra session in the fall, to reconsider the Redistribution bill, and come to a compromise with the opposition on that subject. I do not think anything can be plainer than the authority asserted by the House of Lords on that occasion. When parliament met next session Earl Granville, who occupied the position of leader of the House of Lords, a position similar to that occupied by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice here—a minority leader—addressed the House upon the subject, and I am sure the discussion is quite familiar to my hon. friend who is a student of constitutional history. I call attention to the tone, the style of his remarks, so deferential to the House, not questioning in the slightest degree the right of the House to do what it did, and hoping that a spirit of patriotism and common sense would bring about such a compromise as would be satisfactory to all parties. The House of Lords, as I have already stated, rejected the bill on the second reading in consequence of its not being accompanied by a satisfactory redistribution Bill. Here is what Earl Granville said:

> My Lords.—I beg leave to make a short statement on behalf of Her Majesty's government. I presume that we are all agreed that the action to be taken this week by your Lordship's House is of vast importance, affecting not merely party ideas, but interests of a national character. There is no question as to the principle of the Franchise Bill.

In that case there was no question as to the principle of the Franchise Bill, whereas here, I believe, the majority of the House differ from the government on the principle of this bill.

It is understood, and I believe not without reason, that your lordships intend to give a second reading to that bill.

The style in which the House was addressed upon the subject is most remarkable, when contrasted with that often applied to the Senate.

But I am not entitled to assume this step will terminate the difference between your lordships and Her Majesty's government. I do not propose to enter into the merits of this difference; it is sufficient for my present purposes to remind your lordships that while the procedure adopted by Her Majesty's government has been supported last summer, and again this autumn, by unusually large majorities in the House of Commons, it has been condemned by a majority of your lordships in this House. I will not now refer to offers which at different times have been made by Her Majesty's government, and which are generally known as having been rejected. I am not aware of any intimation having come from the opposition, apart from an intention to reverse in some shape or other the procedure adopted by Her Majesty's government, and supported by the House of Commons, in order to adopt that which has been favoured by your lordships. The result is a state of things which although it may be far from disagreeable to extreme politicians on both sides, is deplored by all moderate men, and, I sincerely believe, by a majority of your lordships.

There is no intimation here that their lordships had no right to have an opinion upon that bill. There is no intimation of any sort that if they did not pass the bill they would be swept out of existence, but the tone and style of the speech of Earl Granville admits clearly and unequivocally the right of the House of Lords to take the decided step they did on that occasion, of virtually rejecting the bill on the second reading. See the deferential and conciliatory manner in which the government approached the opposition on that question:

I am authorized by my colleagues to state how we would propose to meet the objections which have been raised by some of your lordships. To those, if there are such, who may desire to force on an immediate dissolution, I have little to offer, but the case is different with those who desire a settlement—a desire which we claim ourselves and with which we are quite willing to credit noble lords opposite whose objections we honestly desire to meet. I understand that the objections are principally these. Your lordships think that although you are ready to support a franchise bill, it is dangerous to do so unless you are acquainted with the character of the Redistribution Bill which is promised and which will affect its working. You are afraid that it may be of a revolutionary character, or, as some have put it, dangerous to the prospects of the Conservative party. You also fear that there may be no bill at all, or, at all events, that there may be none till the two thousand new voters have acquired the right of voting. My lords, I will now proceed to state how, in my opinion, and in the opinion of the government, without sacrificing our own object, we may best meet these objections. Our object is to secure the passing of the Franchise Bill without delay. We cannot jeopardize it. Your lordships must be aware that we could enter into no understanding or take any steps as to the immediate introduction or prosecution of a redistribution bill, or as to anything connected with it, unless we have a sufficient assurance that we should thus secure our principal object, namely, the passing of the Franchise Bill without delay—that is to say, during the autumn session.

That is, by a compromise to get the consent of the House of Lords to pass the Franchise Bill nor by coercion or intimidation

In that case I may tell your lordships that the bill will come into effect on 1st January, 1886. If we were sufficiently assured in the manner I have stated, I am not aware of any demand or suggestion that will be made with regard to the procedure affecting a Redistribution Bill to which Her Majesty's government will not be ready to accede. If we get that sufficient assurance, we should be ready to submit the main provisions of the Redistribution Bill.

If they got the assurance they would be ready to submit the main features of the Redistribution Bill in the spirit of compromise.

To make every reasonable effort for the purpose of accommodation, and any difficulties in the way of accommodation, I think I may say would not come from Her Majesty's government. We should be ready, if it is possible, and I do not see any impossibility in it, to present a bill framed in the spirit of that sketch given by Mr. Gladstone in the House of Commons and which, on the 7th of November, seemed to be received as satisfactory by Sir Stafford Northcote. Her Majesty's government will be prepared to push that bill on with all legitimate speed. Mr. Gladstone has informed me that he will be willing to undertake to move the second reading of that bill simultaneously with the Franchise Bill going into committee of your Lordships' House.

It is gratifying in the highest degree to notice the terms and the spirit of conciliation with which the great statesman met the hostility which he encountered in the House of Lords against that great measure. The other day the premier of Canada had occasion to make a speech in connection with the memory of the departed statesman, a speech which I read with the greatest pleasure and which I have no hesitation in saying is one of the finest efforts which have been made in connection with the late ceremonies, and which will be for all time an ornament to the Canadian Hansard. Having so high an opinion of Mr. Gladstone, I think our premier should follow his example, and not be disposed to carry his policy through this House, or his government should not be disposed to attempt to carry their policy through the Senate by intimidation or threats of the abolition of the House. It would be wiser for them to copy the admirable spirit of moderation and conciliation which characterized the attitude of Mr. Gladstone's government on that occasion :

Her Majesty's government are prepared to use their utmost efforts to pass the bill through the House of Commons in the early period of next year. And I am further authorized by them to state that they would consider the passing of their bill through the House of Commons a question vital to themselves. My Lords, I submit this proposal to the favourable consideration of both sides of the House. I trust that those who so cordially supported us last session will not think we have retired too much from the exact course of procedure which we had drawn for ourselves. And I do, with considerable confidence appeal to the noble Lords opposite to receive this proposition in the spirit in which we have made it. We have made it in a spirit of earnestness and of conciliation, and as tending to settle a difference which every dictate of statesmanship, and, indeed, I may say of common sense, makes it desirable, in the interests of all concerned, should be brought to final and satisfactory close.

Now, what followed? An arrangement was entered into between the government and the opposition, whereby the Representation Bill after going through the House of Commons was sent to the House of Lords. The Redistribution Bill was then introduced in the House of Commons, and the two bills were advanced step by step together, and the arrangement was carried out in such a way that the two bills passed together under the compromise entered into by the government of Mr. Gladstone and the Conservative opposition of that day. It would be difficult to get a precedent more in point and which it would be more desirable to bring to the notice of this House as showing the spirit in which the British government meets the upper chamber when a difference of opinion on great questions takes place between them. I hope the day will come—perhaps it is too soon for us to expect it to arrive—when the same statesmanship and spirit of conciliation will animate the parliament of Canada, which would elevate the public life of our Dominion and redound to the honour of our country.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—This is a very late period in the session for us to begin to discuss very important measures, such as those which are brought before us this week. We have before us now the Franchise Bill and the Plebiscite Bill, the two most important measures of the session. They have been brought down after parliament has been in session for four months, and when a great many of our members have gone home and many of those who remain would like to go away also. In justice to the country and to parliament, the government should have brought those measures down at an earlier period of the session.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They could not have been brought down much earlier.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—They ought to have been. This is a four months' session, and for all the legislation we have had before us, they might have been brought down two months ago without taxing the energy of the government to any great extent.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This bill was introduced in the House of Commons on the 10th of February, and if it has been a long time coming here it has been due to the efforts of the hon. gentleman's friends.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—It was left two months on the paper before it was touched.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Apart from that, it is the most iniquitous bill ever brought before this parliament. I do not hesitate to say that it is unworthy of the government that introduced it. The government is composed of intelligent and clever men, and they should have been able to produce a bill which would commend itself to the country. I never saw a bill hackled and condemned more, and justly so, than this bill has been in the other House ; but still it passed because the government have a majority which can pass anything. In my opinion it is a most unfair bill. The franchise should be uniform and equal throughout Canada. It is not right that a man owning property in half a dozen constituencies in one part of Canada can vote everywhere that he is assessed, while in another part of Canada a man with property similarly situated has but one vote. This anomaly is not due to the incapacity of the government, because they know better : it is a reflection on the intelligence of the country and the people's representatives to introduce a bill with such a feature. With such a franchise members will not sit in parliament on a fair and equal basis. I happen to know something about that feature of the bill in the province of New Brunswick. I was a candidate in that province for a seat in the House of Commons in 1878, and also in 1882, and was defeated on both occasions by narrow majorities. In the county proper I had a majority of the votes, but the non-residents from outside, men who had five or six votes, came in and defeated me. A clerk in the city of St. John with an income of $400 has a vote, he votes for a candidate in the city. Then he can vote for two candidates for the city and the county of St. John on the same qualification. He owns a piece of land in Queen's county not worth $25, but it is assessed for $100, and that gives him a vote there. He has another piece of property in Sunbury and that gives him a vote there. Now that man votes in the city of St. John in the morning, in the city and county of St. John five minutes afterwards, takes a steamer and votes for the candidate in Queen's county, and from there proceeds to Sunbury and votes again. I, in the county, with perhaps four times as much property, have only one vote. That is not fair and should not exist in the Dominion franchise. That system prevails in New Brunswick and this bill is based upon it. In the two elections to which I have referred, I had a majority of the resident electors in my favour, but the non-residents came in and swamped me. I was not a rich man and could not afford to charter a steamer and pay the expenses of voters up and down. The rich man was able to do so and got votes, and he got the election. Apart from that, to-morrow we will take up in this House the Plebescite Bill and if we adopt it what will be the result? In the province of Quebec which is said to be against prohibition, a man can vote in every constituency where he owns property, while in Ontario a man with similar property qualification can vote only once. There is no equality in that and it is not the way to get a fair expression of public opinion. It is unfair to the temperance people of Canada. On these grounds I would oppose this bill, but I do not want, at this late period of the session, to go further than enter my protest against it. I point out the defects and leave the responsibility with the government for putting such a bill before the country.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I am opposed to the principle of this bill. I am opposed to giving the local legislatures this power, because, so far as my experience goes, they have not discharged their duty in the past in a manner that would inspire confidence in them. I recollect when the franchise was entrusted to local authorities in this city. My name was on the assessor's lists of several polling divisions of the city, but it was not on the voters' list. That is one instance. During this last election it was miserably mismanaged. No man could tell where he should vote. If a man happened to have resided say on Queen street when the lists were made out, and removed to another street, he was prevented from voting. There was no systematic course pursued. Therefore, for that reason I do not think that this Dominion should deprive itself of the power of controlling and governing its own affairs in election matters. This is a supreme body, and it appears to me rather a mistake to transfer this power that we possess as a Dominion to an authority of less magnitude and less consequence. I have known cases in the country places where the lists have been prepared in a very improper manner, and it all goes to convince me that if you confer this power on the local authorities in the future, you will have a muddle of the worst kind. As to the expense, I do not know about that. Probably the expense under the old system was more than it ought to have been; but that could be remedied. The underlying principle in the Dominion Act passed a few years ago was a very good one, and I feel sorry that the government have taken on themselves the responsibility of changing the law. It is natural that we should like to retain this power in our own hands, particularly when I see no good cause for divesting ourselves of it. If the local authorities can do this thing for a certain sum of money, why cannot the Dominion authorities do it? But I do not think that this last election cost one-tenth of what previous elections cost. All that you require is to have the proper men to fulfil the duties and I believe they would do so more satisfactorily to the country than by entrusting those duties to the local authorities. Now we are deprived of any appeal according to this law. A man has no redress.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—As I understand it you have no appeal.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—In Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia you have, but in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba, you have not.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—If an elector is prevented from voting, there ought to be some means by which he can go before the court and show that he has perfect right to vote. Why could not these lists be posted in some conspicuous way, say a month before the election, and let a man go and examine whether his name is on them? I suppose it is the intention of the law that every man who has a vote should vote. I am opposed to the principle of one man one vote. As long as any qualification is required I think that property ought to be the one.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And vote often.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I do not care how often. As long as I am compelled to pay a penalty for owning property, I think I have a right to have more say than a person who is not so qualified. It seems to me most extraordinary that my coachman, or gardener, or any one else should deprive me of my rights and privileges, when I own property and they own none; but still owing to the law of Ontario, my employee can neutralize my vote. I do not think it is right. Of course I am an old Tory. I do not believe in the ballot. I believe in fair, open voting. We know that it is now impossible, but I prefer the old days when a man went up boldly to the table and voted like a man. We want to try to make this law as perfect as possible. If the revising barristers were not the proper men in the office, the government have it now in their hands to appoint men of different calibre to do the work in a different way; but it will be difficult to find better persons than the revising barristers.

An hon. GENTLEMAN—How do you like the Ontario ballot?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—That ballot in Ontario is a fraud of the worst kind, because every vote can be traced, and it has been stated that in this way the government knows every man who votes and they will certainly discharge any of their employees who do not vote for them. That was the course pursued during the last election. If there is a ballot at all let it be secret.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—We have it secret in Quebec.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I am talking of Ontario. It is not in Ontario; and the sooner we make it secret the better, but we cannot interfere with the law in Ontario. I think these two governments might just as well have come to terms and made one general franchise for the country. Under the Ontario law I do not care how much property one may own, he cannot vote upon it unless he is a resident. Another thing I may mention is that last year they brought men down from the shanties who had been there for years and years, took them to the hotels in the city and got them registered, and those men voted for the parties whom they were brought down to vote for. They were brought down in hundreds and thousands for the purpose of carrying the Ontario election. There is no doubt of that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hundreds and thousands.

Hon. Mr CLEMOW—I do not know how many there were—they went to the different hotels here and registered their names, and then swore they were residents of the city, and so they were. Let us try to make the law as perfect as possible. I suppose the intention is to give every man a vote who has the right to vote. I do not want any special privileges, but I want equal privileges extended to the whole country, and I think we have a perfect right to interfere in this matter to see that the rights of the unprotected people are protected. My hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Miller) who knows the law perfectly well and is well versed on these matters, has shown by his speech that we have a perfect right to interfere in this matter. I say unhesitatingly that I am opposed on principle to this bill from beginning to end, and I think the government should try to frame a measure more in consonance with the Dominion law as it existed. I do not say that we ought to oppose this bill, but let us do all we can to perfect it so that every man in the country entitled to a vote will be given the privilege of recording his vote without favour or question; and as long as we have the ballot, let it be a secret ballot. Let us have no ballot numbered, and then we will know where we are, and until that takes place I am afraid we will not have a perfect election. During the last Ontario elections we know the difficulties we experienced. We know that here it was days and days before we could find out actually the results of the elections. They posted up in different polling booths here rules and regulations. They were that people could only vote for one man, whereas we had two candidates on each side, and a great many people were afraid to vote because they were told that they could only vote for one man. All these things could be taken into consideration. We could well consider whether those men to whom the country is going to entrust this duty have fulfilled their duties in the past in a satisfactory manner; if they have not, certainly we should not rely on their doing it in the future. I know the difficulties, but every man ought to exercise his right in as perfect a manner as possible consistent with the law, and when that is so we will have pure elections. I question very much if you will have much purity so long as the present state of things continue. We were doing very well under the old law in the Dominion; it was a very good law. It may have been expensive, but I believe that that defect can be remedied by amendments from time to time. Had we continued it a little longer we would have found it very satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—The bill now before the House, commends itself to my regard in one particular, and that is that it seems to me to be the first effort that the government has made to redeem any of the pledges they made to the people when they were before the country at the last election. With that proviso, I do not think that the bill is going to commend itself generally to the members of this House. It has a very objectionable feature in so far as we are changing our policy. We are proposing to put the control of the franchise of the country into the hands of the provinces, instead of retaining it ourselves; we are proposing by this policy gradually to be governed through the provinces, instead of attempting to be governed by the direct will of the people from this parliament. Instead of making this parliament a training ground for men who will grow up with a perfect knowledge of the requirements of Canada from one end to the other, we are gradually drifting into a policy by which we bring in the members from the provincial governments, to lay down the policy to men who are only acquainted, so far as their training goes, with the narrower sphere and narrower principles they have had to deal with while in those provinces. It is that spirit I am opposing. I am a National Policy man so far as building up our country upon national laws is concerned.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I thoroughly believe that that is the only way in which we can govern this great country. It is absolutely necessary that education and experience should go hand in hand in knowing what are the principles which are going to hold this country together upon lines of justice and right principles, and I do not think denationalizing it in our franchise is going to effect that object. It is on those grounds I have objections to the bill. However, as the hon. the Prime Minister said in the other House, it is not like the laws of the Medes and Persians. If it is not found workable it can be changed, and I think it will be found necessary to change the law in the near future. There is no doubt there have been a great many complaints about the existing law, and the complaints so far have justified the government in trying to bring in a law to supply its place or to make amendments. I do not favour the amendment that has brought that peculiar feature into our franchise, that we are to submit to the various policies of the provinces as to how the franchise shall be conferred, or to put that power into the hands of the province, that any provincial government or combination of provincial governments opposed to this parliament may have, through the powers conferred upon them, the means of thwarting the will of the people through a partisan franchise. For that reason, I think it is objectionable. I do not think, however, that it will receive opposition in this House further than a proper criticism. The session is late, and as some speakers have already said, the bill will go through and will have to be tried upon its merits, and the government will have to bear whatever responsibility there may be in connection with it. I, therefore, simply desire to express my views upon the lines I have indicated and to make this short criticism.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Before the bill is read the second time, I wish to make a few observations in reply to some of the objections made to the bill, and also some remarks upon the relations existing between the government and this House. One of the objections made to this bill is the want of uniformity. I heard a great deal about uniformity in 1885, when the other bill, the law that is now upon the statute-book, was proposed. But when that bill came to be finally prepared it was found that the principle of uniformity had been departed from. You had qualifications in Nova Scotia on account of the avocations and employment of the people that you had not elsewhere. You had in the province of Prince Edward Island a recognition of the principle of manhood suffrage, because it had existed previously in that country. You had in British Columbia a recognition of manhood suffrage, because it was said to have existed in that province, and so you had in that sense a manifest and clear departure from the principle which was alleged to have justified the legislation : that is the principle of uniformity. We had in the case of the Indian population at first the proposal to put the entire Indian population, whether enfranchised or unenfranchised, on the list of electors. The rebellion had broken out in the North-west. The Indian population were in arms against the government, and so far as the North-west Territories and Manitoba were concerned, the Indians were deprived of the right of the electoral franchise, although they were allowed to remain as eligible for the voters' list in the maritime provinces, Quebec and Ontario. In the province of British Columbia, where the Indian population, perhaps, are more industrious, more active and more susceptible to the influences of our civilization, than the Indians in any other portion of the Dominion, the feeling was adverse to the enfranchisement of the Indians, and so there was a departure from the principle of uniformity there. So that when we examine the bill with care we find that all the talk of the principle of uniformity in the bill was an illusion. There was no principle of uniformity. The government were obliged to take into consideration the peculiar circumstances of every province in order to prepare a voters' list. Coming to the North-west Territories again, my hon. friend from Wolseley (Mr. Perley) to-night spoke about the principle of uniformity in the preparation of the voters' list. Why, hon. gentlemen, if we had adopted the principle of uniformity, there would scarcely have been an elector in the North-west Territories. The government were obliged to depart from the qualifications they had recognized elsewhere in order that there might be an electoral body in the North-west Territories, and so a broader franchise had to be adopted in these territories than that adopted in the provinces of the Dominion.. What does all this point to? That there is variation in the circumstances of the population, in their avocation, if the diffusion of knowledge, in the interest which they take in public affairs, which makes a franchise which would be highly proper in one province, a franchise that might not be equally wise to adopt in some other province of the Dominion. So that, in order to give to public opinion the fullest and freest expression that it is possible to give to that opinion, you allow the electorate, or the representatives of the electorate in each province, sitting by themselves, and apart from the electorate and representatives of every other province, to say what shall be the qualifications of the electors, those who shall vote at a parliamentary election in that province. Who speaks? Who expresses this opinion? Why, it is the representatives of the people, the same community, the same people, whether they are represented in the House of Commons or whether they are represented in the local legislature ; it is their opinion that ultimately in this matter must prevail. Then we are told that Sir John Thompson did not go so far as we have gone in this bill. Now, I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. The bill proposed by Sir John Thompson proposed to adopt the electoral franchise of the provinces. He may not have undertaken to make up his voters' list in the same way, but so far as the qualification of the voters was concerned, it was the qualification as fixed by the legislature of the province, that in that province he proposed to make the qualification for the election of members to the House of Commons. My hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Miller) has referred to the case of the extension of the franchise in 1884 and the redistribution of seats which accompanied that measure. I have a very distinct recollection of that measure and of what transpired on that occasion. My hon. friend says there was no threatening of the House of Lords, no proposal to abolish the upper House as there is here. My hon. friend is mistaken in that. On that occasion I happened to be in London.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—There was no threat by responsible persons.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I saw six hundred thousand people marching through the streets of London. That procession began marching twelve abreast some time in the morning. I know at four o'clock in the afternoon it was still passing, and I found it impossible to get to the other side of the street without going to St. James Park and taking the underground railway. That immense gathering was divided up into a large number of meetings, and those meetings were addressed by whom? They were addressed by some of the foremost men in public life in England. It was well known that Gladstone was favourable to the existence of two Houses; that he never for a moment entertained the proposition of abolishing the House of Lords, and I do not know that there are very many prominent men in England on either side that have, but he was anxious that the agitation should come to an end, and the House of Lords did not reject that bill. They did not propose to amend the bill. They never suggested an amendment, and Lord Granville, in the speech which my hon friend read to-night, never proposed for one moment to accept an amendment. That was not for a moment entertained.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It had to go to committee.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The House of Lords on that occasion said, not that the bill be not read a second time, but "we will postpone the second reading of the bill. We want to see what your measure of redistribution is before you shall admit to the electoral franchise two millions and upwards of the population, who were not voters before." The opposition, at that time, led in the House of Commons by Sir Stafford Northcote, and in the House of Lords by Lord Salisbury, insisted that these two measures should be combined. Mr. Gladstone insisted upon them being presented for the consideration of parliament as separate and distinct measures. The House of Lords, when the Franchise Bill came before it, postponed the consideration of the second reading, hung it up, defended themselves through the country by saying: "we did not vote against the second reading of this bill. We merely postponed it until we would see what the redistribution measure would be." There was an adjournment of the House during the summer holidays.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Not an adjournment. The House was prorogued.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Well, prorogation of the House, but whichever it was, there was a meeting subsequently of Mr. Gladstone and Lord Salisbury, and Mr. Gladstone explained to him in private the measure which he intended to introduce as a redistribution measure, that he discussed with Lord Salisbury and Lord Salisbury expressed himself satisfied. Then the House met again, the Franchise Act was proceeded with and the Redistribution Bill was introduced. There was this further difference, too, between the proceeding on that occasion and the proceeding on the present occasion, and it is an important one, because it rests upon the principle that was settled in the Reform Bill of 1832, and that is this: that the government of Mr. Gladstone, when parliament was dissolved in 1880, and Mr. Gladstone went to the country as leader of the opposition, or as a prominent member, at all events, of the opposition, there was a discussion of a number of questions, but the question of parliamentary reform, of the extension of the franchise and the redistribution of seats, were not questions that were prominently before the country nor were they discussed at the election. The House of Lords stood in this position on that occasion, and it was a different position from that which was occupied in 1832, the House of Lords in dealing with this question was not dealing with one upon which the nation had pronounced. It was not a question which was before the electors and upon which the opposition was returned to parliament. So that the House of Lords had, in the discussion of that question, a larger measure of authority in dealing with it under the conventions of the constitution—I do not say under the law, but under the settled conventions of the constitution—than they would have had upon a question on which the parties had gone to the country and upon which the public opinion had been expressed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is like the Yukon Bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend says it is like the Yukon Bill. Not exactly, because on that question the Senate did not say "we will postpone the second reading until certain events happen, or until certain information is had."

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The Senate put it off for six months.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend knows there was a marked difference on that occasion, because the House of Lords simply postponed the bill, while on this occasion my hon. friend knows that this House rejected the measure.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It was virtually the six months' hoist in both cases.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Oh, no. And what is more than that, Lord Salisbury, Sir Stafford Northcote, and every prominent member of the opposition on that occasion, in discussing the matter on the public platform throughout England and Scotland, maintained that they had not rejected the principle of the bill, that they had not expressed any opposition to the bill, but had simply declared that before they could consider it there was another measure which ought to be associated with it and the character of which they ought to know. It was a very different one from the simple rejection of the bill. My hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, stated to-night what I think was a constitutional doctrine and what I am pleased to know this House is disposed to act upon. He said the government had at last introduced one measure in fulfilment of the principles or measures of public policy upon which they had gone to the country.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—And that a very poor one.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend says it was very poor, however, it was a measure upon which they were directed. Wise or unwise it is a measure upon which they had appealed to the country and the public voice was in their favour. I say that there is a marked difference between this measure and the measure that was under the consideration of the House of Lords which the House of Lords postponed. I may say to the hon. gentleman that I would be very sorry indeed to utter any word of disrespect towards this House. I could not well do so without casting a certain amount of discredit upon myself and my colleague who sits beside me. Our fortunes, at all events as long as we are here, are associated with the character and dignity of this House; and it is not our interest—we would indeed be very foolish in undertaking to belittle this House or to deny its value as a second chamber under our system of parliamentary government. I fully recognize that. I admit it, but if my hon. friend means by saying that the Senate, the second chamber, stands upon a footing of equality with the House of Commons in regard to a measure of this sort, I say I wholly dissent from it. That is not my view. The measure before us at this moment is a measure which specially concerns the constitution of the House of Commons. It does not specially concern the constitution of this House.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Then you hand that over to the local legislature.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend says we hand it over to the local legislature. I say we retain control. We pass a measure to-day that next session we may repeal if we see that it is in the public interest to repeal it. It is not an unalterable measure—we are not placing the subject beyond our reach or control in any sense whatever. It is as much under our control as if we had proposed a measure dealing with the subject directly, without any reference to the local legislature at all. If we were to pass any measure it is out of our power to change it until parliament meets again; it is on the statute-book, just as this measure will be if it receives the approbation of this House and the sanction of His Excellency the Governor General. There is no difference between this bill and any other in that regard. I have already said all that is necessary in vindication of the practical importance of the measure and the great convenience there is in allowing voters' lists to be prepared under provincial authority rather than under the authority of the Dominion. I do not believe as my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Ferguson) intimated in his speech this evening, that a measure of this sort has a tendency to disintegrate the Dominion. On the contrary, I believe it has a tendency to bind us more closely together. My hon. friend proceeds on the assumption that the strength of the Dominion depends upon the strength of the authority exercised by the central or federal authority. I do not subscribe to that, however. That was the view held by certain Austrian statesmen that brought on the revolution of 1848, and in order to strengthen the union of the nationalities of that empire, what did they do? They established a federal instead of incorporate union, and they strengthened the empire of Austria instead of weakening it Is there a man here to-day who believes that the union of Great Britain and Ireland is stronger because it is an incorporate union instead of a federal one? Is there a gentleman in this House listening to me who does not believe that if they had Home Rule in Ireland, with a loyal and contented population, knowing that if abuses should exist in the local legislature it would be their own fault, it would be stronger than union, with Ireland incorporated and discontented? I think anyone who has had experience of the federal system in this parliament will admit that our people are much more contented, much more strongly united, much more devoted to our institutions than they would be if we had no provincial governments at all and were meeting here in a legislative incorporate union. In my opinion, what we are doing, we are doing as a matter of convenience, we are getting a list that will be prepared with little expense to those who enter public life and which will be a more complete list than the lists prepared under the old system. What was the effect of the system now in force? Why, under that system, we have never had a parliament that dared to propose to make a voters' list every year, and yet every hon. gentleman knows that at least ten per cent of the population are disqualified at the end of every twelve months. You had a list on which to vote, that excluded every man that came of age after that list was prepared. Let me ask hon. gentlemen to-day if we had an election, on what list would we vote? Upon a list of which, perhaps, thirty per cent of the population would be disfranchised.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Whose fault is that?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The fault of the system that no government of this country have had the courage to enforce, and the men who had, of all others, the interest to put that on the statute-book, whose pet scheme it was, who knew the expense which it would entail, and which would ruin the administration——

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The present state of affairs never existed under any former government.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I beg my hon. friend's pardon. My hon. friend will find that there was another occasion on which the same length of time elapsed between the preparation of voters' lists. We have had only three lists since 1885, and that is a period of thirteen years. My hon. friend will see that the men upon that list who vote or return members to parliament are not the men whom the law declares are entitled to vote. There are many who, in a revision, would have their names taken off, and there is an immense number of young men from twenty-one to twenty-five years old entitled to vote whose names are not on that list. That is a condition of things that no government ought to permit to exist. In our opinion it arose from a system that we opposed, which was introduced when we departed from a system which both parties acquiesced in continuing from 1867 to 1885. We are restoring that state of things; we are taking steps to correct the mistake of those who sacrificed the practical convenience of the country to what they thought was a system more theoretically perfect. Now, I am not making charges against anybody or the motives of anybody. I am stating facts, as everybody knows them.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Will the hon. gentleman explain this fact—that is, the expense that he complains of as far as federal lists are concerned—will it not be greater with the local lists, where one is prepared every year?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Let me say this, that the local list is prepared every year; we are not adding to the cost of the preparation of that list. It is prepared whether we use it or not.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—You have no machinery by which you can compel them to prepare the list.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We do not want to compel them. In all these matters the government meet the exigencies of the occasion. That was so here. It was so from 1867 to 1885. There will be no difficulty on that score, and my hon. friend will see that we are not adding to the expense. We are simply diminishing the expense, because we have one list where, under the exciting system, there are two. We get rid of the expense of the preparation of one, and we are content with the expense of the preparation of the one instead of two. My hon. friends will see that there is, in the very nature of the case, economy, and in the very nature of the case, from the character of our institutions, from our federal system of government, from the fact that the municipal government is a part of the machinery, there is a question of practical convenience in our proposal, which does not exist at the present time.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

THE LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved the adoption of the second report of the joint committee of both Houses on the Library of Parliament. He said: This report contains only one statement. It recommends that the correspondence with reference to the electric lighting of the Library of Parliament be forwarded to the Public Works Department, with an urgent recommendation that the advised improvements be immediately carried out. Inasmuch as the report of the committee does not involve the expenditure of any money, and simply leaves the matter with the Department of Public Works, I do not think that there can be any objection to our adopting the report forthwith.

The motion was agreed to.

IDENTIFICATION OF CRIMINALS BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (R) "An Act respecting the Identification of Criminals."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—This bill is framed, I suppose, on precisely the same lines as the law of France.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is to enable us to do what is being done in Belgium and France, and in some of the states of the neighbouring Republic under the Bertillon system.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (S) "An Act to amend the Companies Act."

(In the Committee.)

On clause 2.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Before this clause passes I should like to say just one or two words. When this bill was at its second reading I called attention to the fact that there had been instances, where the English Companies Act had been abused by companies some of whose shareholders live in this country, and that I thought it desirable that caution should be exercised in dealing with the matter. Now, it occurs to me that, under this second clause of the bill, some discretion should be given to the Secretary of State's Department with respect to the incorporation of those foreign companies, that the Secretary of State should not be bound as a matter of course to incorporate every company, which made an application for incorporation and paid the requisite fees, but that he should have some discretion to decide whether or not the charter of the company was one which could be allowed to go into operation with benefit to this country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Any company applying to register has to file a copy of the Act of incorporation in the office of the Secretary of State, and obtains no special power of any kind. The object is to enable them to get the license. Their status in a foreign country is in no way affected. The object of this bill is simply to give them the license and the license will restrict them specially to carry on mining in the Yukon district. They will not have the right to build steam boats, or work saw-mills, or go into any side industries, even if the powers of the original corporation so authorized them. Their original powers are in no sense recognized in this bill. They simply file a copy of their Act showing that they have, at all events, a right to mine, and they are given a license to mine, but there is no recognition of their powers. I have tried to restrain that point because in the issue of letters patent in recent years we have restricted powers very much indeed, and they are not given the large powers that were granted in former years. That was the policy adopted by the late government, and it has been continued by the present government.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

LAND TITLES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (132) "An Act to further amend the Land Titles Act, 1894." He said: This Act professes to amend various clauses of the Land Titles Act which was passed in the year 1894, which, as hon. members know, introduced the system that prevails in Ontario into the North-west causing real estate to be considered as personal. The experience of the last three years has necessitated certain amendments, some of them being only a word or two in a particular clause, and it would be much more convenient to go through it in committee. I would therefore ask the House to be permitted to make a further explanation in committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

INDIAN ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (144) "An Act further to amend the Indian Act." He said: The amendments in this bill are very similar to those in the Land Titles Act. They are merely words dropped or words added in several paragraphs. There is no new principle in the bill, and I therefore suggest that it be allowed to go to committee where it can be discussed much more intelligently.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

NORTH-WEST MILITIA ACT LAND GRANTS AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (133) "An Act to make further provision respecting grants of land to members of the militia force on active service in the North-west." He said: When this bill was read the first time I stated its object. There are a number of persons who, under various statutes mentioned here, were entitled to grants of land that have not yet received them, and the time in which they may receive these grants is extended by the provisions of this bill. It is a sort of residuary bill, enabling parties to accept or obtain the grants which they might have obtained under the law at an earlier period if they had acted promptly.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the suspension of the rules.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill passed through its final stages.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND FEADING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (131) "An Act further to amend the Acts respecting the North-west Territories." He said: It is provided that the words "legislative assembly" shall be substituted for the words "Lieutenant Governor in Council." This is necessary an account of the progress towards representative government in that country. Then subsection 2 of section 14 is hereby repealed. Then section 49 of the Act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

49. The court shall sit in banc at such times and places as the Lieutenant Governor in Council appoints; the senior judge present shall preside, and three judges of the court shall constitute a quorum.

Under the 49th section of the bill as it stands the court must sit in banc always at Regina. This enables them to sit in banc at any point where the Lieutenant Governor in Council may appoint. For that immense territory this is a matter of convenience.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (145) "An Act further to amend the Railway Act." He said: As hon. gentlemen are aware, the Railway Committee of the Privy Council have the right to fix the tolls that are chargeable by the railway companies. It has been found that there are many lines of steamers running in connection with the various railway companies, and owned by the railway companies, and the object of this bill is to authorize the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to fix the tolls, and to apply these clauses of the Railway Act to the steamboat companies working in connection with the railway companies, in order that they may not discriminate. Hon. gentlemen will see that, while the tolls could be kept down according to the schedule on the railway, still, if the company operating a steamboat line were at liberty to make any charge they desired, it would give the company very much larger powers than contemplated by the statute, and the object of this bill is to place the two companies, where they run unitedly, under the control of the railway committee of the Privy Council. As the railway companies desire to be heard on this measure, I propose that the bill be referred to the Railway Committee, in order that they may hear what the railway men have to say.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Hear, hear.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

DELAYED RETURNS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the House adjourns, as the hon. leader of the opposition is not in his place, I wish to call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to the fact that there are as yet four departments which no return has been received in regard to dismissals. I refer to the return regarding dismissals as a result of commissions. There is no return from my hon. friend's own department. There are four departments altogether which have not furnished any return, and my hon. friend will understand that it is desirable that the return should show on the face of it that it is complete, and that if there have been no commissions issued by any department, it should be so stated. My hon. friend's department was one, and the Finance Department another.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Governor General's office, the Privy Council, the Secretary of State, the Geological Department, and the Queen's Printer.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend the leader of the opposition had a list of them here.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not know that it was necessary to make a formal return, but I stated that no commissions had been issued in some of the departments.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There are three or four departments where no commissions were issued, and it is desirable that that fact should be stated on the returns, so as to make them complete.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I thought it would be sufficient if I made the announcement. There was no commission issued from the Governor General's Department.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No, the Governor General's Department is not one of them. I think the departments were the Finance, Secretary of State and Queen's Printer.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Secretary of State's Department, the Geological Department, the Privy Council, and the Finance Department, I think, are the only ones. I will ask them to make a formal return. I suppose a letter from the deputy head would be sufficient.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Tuesday, 31st May, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'Clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

LOAN COMPANIES BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN, from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported Bill (Q) "An Act respecting Loan Companies" with amendments. He said: The amendments are purely verbal, with the exception of two, the one which provides that a registered letter is to be sent through the post office to the shareholders, and the other an addition to the clause empowering the company to invest in bank stocks.

The amendments were concurred it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the bill be read the third time to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I was going to ask the hon. leader of the House to allow the bill to stand over for some time. It came to my notice to-day for the first time, and that is probably my fault. I do not claim any indulgence on that account. But this bill takes in not only Ontario, but the whole Dominion. I know something about a good many loan companies down in Montreal, who have never heard of this bill, and I feel very certain that they will object very strongly to many of its provisions. I would suggest that the bill be allowed to stand for some time. I think it should be laid over till next session, if possible, because while Ontario may be thoroughly acquainted with the bill, speaking for the province of Quebec, I can assure the House that they have not heard of it, and do not know anything at all about it, and it will affect them in a way that they would not like. It would be only fair to give them a chance to see the bill. If they have no objections, of course I would be satisfied.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We can take the third reading on Friday, and we can then consider the matter.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Could the hon. minister not postpone it longer than that? I would like to see some of these companies in Montreal.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If my hon. friend would send copies of the bill to Montreal he could get the information from the companies there and if they desired to have further time to consider it I shall not press it on Friday. I therefore move that the bill be read the third time on Friday next.

The motion was agreed to.

THE MILITARY SUPPLIES FOR YUKON.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I saw in the papers the other day a report of a large purchase of supplies that has been given for a portion of the Yukon district, and there were no prices mentioned for the supplies and neither was it by public tender, and I thought it fair to Ask the government for a statement of prices paid the Bate Co., of Ottawa, for the various articles of food supplies purchased of that company or house recently for the military force sent to the Yukon district, such statement to be per lb., per can, gallon or 100 lbs., as the case may be, and for each and all the supplies so purchased.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I called the attention of the hon. Minister of Militia to the item and he was unable to furnish me with a statement as he had not received the account, but I suppose the articles were tendered for and the price was fixed, so he gave instructions to have the tenders looked up and the prices ascertained. But as there is a great deal of information to be put in the form of a return, I will accept this inquiry as an address if the hon. gentleman will move in that way as it is perhaps awkward to answer it otherwise.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Hon. gentlemen, my experience in moving for returns has been rather unfortunate. I have been there once and have had to wait for a long time. If these officials of the saving departments are so very busy I am afraid that they would not have time to get this return down in time to be used this session. It strikes me quite forcibly that where a government ask for supplies they ought to know what they are paying for them. This is a very simple matter. They know they have bought these supplies and what they have paid for them, and it would be only a trifling matter to refer to the accounts in the department who brought the supplies to get the information. Therefore I feel if the hon. gentleman cannot give the information that it had better stand as it is. It is no use moving for a return and I prefer to let it go by default.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no doubt the Minister of Militia would give the instructions. I saw him just before he was going to the Commons. I will endeavour to have them for the hon. gentleman before he leaves.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think he ought to go further. I understood the Secretary of State to say that tenders were asked for these supplies.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not really know who was called on to tender. I understand that this firm was asked to make a tender, but whether there were competitive tenders or not I am not in a position to say.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then perhaps that had better be added.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will find out all the information about it.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

INQUIRY.

Hon Mr. LANDRY inquired of the government:

1. Whether the government, or any member of the present administration, has written or telegraphed, or caused to be written or telegraphed, to Mr. Charles Russell, of London, in order to be informed by this employe of the government, whether the letter published in the Minutes of the Senate, of date of 4th of May, 1898, is or not a faithful and complete reproduction of the letter which he wrote to His Eminence Cardinal Rampolla, of date the 26th of November, 1897?

2. What is the answer of Mr. Charles Russell?

3. Has the government, or any member of the present administration, written or telegraphed, or caused to be written or telegraphed, to His Eminence Cardinal Rampolla in order to be informed by the most eminent secretary of state of the Roman court, whether, at the secretariat of state, there had really been received a letter from Mr. Charles Russell, dated the 26th of November, 1897, and whether the letter published in the Minutes of the Senate of date the 4th of May, 1898, is or is not a faithful and complete reproduction of this letter written by Mr. Charles Russell and dated the 26th of November, 1897?

4. What is the answer of His Eminence Cardinal Rampolla?

5. Is the government in a position to affirm that His Eminence Cardinal Rampolla has not communicated to any of his colleagues in the cardinalate, nor to any person whatsoever, the contents of Mr. Charles Russell's letter?

6. Is the government in a position to affirm, and does it affirm, that the letter of Mr. Charles Russell to Cardinal Rampolla, written in the name of the Catholic members of the government and of parliament by an employee of the government, was a confidential letter, or even could be considered as such?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I must say to the hon. senator that I decline to answer this question or series of questions, because, in the first place, I do not know that there was any letter written to Cardinal Rampolla on the 26th of November, 1897. My hon. friend is questioning me and questioning the government through me with regard to a communication that we do not know exists, that, if it does exist, we do not know that it is genuine. My hon. friend has put a number of questions on the paper that entitle me to put questions to him with regard to these matters before he is in a position to call upon the government for any answers to the questions which he has put. In the first class, does he know that Charles Russell wrote to Cardinal Rampolla? Does he know the contents of the letter which Charles Russell, if he wrote, sent to Cardinal Rampolla? Is that letter in his possession? Upon what grounds does he hold that letter to be genuine? How came it into his possession? By whom was it stolen from Cardinal Rampolla, if it is a genuine letter? If the letter was not stolen, by whom was it purchased from some person that had access to the correspondence of Cardinal Rampolla? How came this letter into the possession of the hon. gentleman, if he has it? When my hon. friend will give to the government some account of that letter, if there be a genuine letter, how it came into his possession, how it left the possession of Cardinal Rampolla, and by what authority he refers to a document which, if in his possession, must have been purloined from Cardinal Rampolla by some one who transferred it to him—who is the party that took from the possession of the Cardinal and transferred it to the hon. gentleman—when my hon friend gives to the government the amount of information necessary to ascertain the genuineness of this correspondence, then the government will consider whether my hon. friend is entitled to an answer to those questions or not.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think I should claim from the hon. gentleman at least twenty-four hours' notice.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No. I am simply assigning to my hon. friend the reasons for not answering his question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—According to the rules of this House the hon. gentleman should give notice, but perhaps he does not know any more of the rules of this House than he knows of the letter. If he does not know anything of this letter, why does his hon. colleague say that it is a purloined letter? A letter can only be stolen or purloined if it exists. Does the letter exist?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not know.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman does not know, why was I accused of having a purloined letter in my possession?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If it was a genuine letter it must have been purloined.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Stolen?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, stolen. If it was a genuine letter it must have been stolen.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is a conclusion that the hon. gentleman has no right to draw. If he knows anything of logic, he knows that he should not give such an answer. The letter was written to Rome—can the hon. gentleman deny that?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We are asking for information.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman cannot deny it. He dare not deny it, because if he made a denial in this House it would be denying that a letter was sent to the party with whom the government have been dealing during the last six months, and if such a denial were sent to Rome it would put the government in its true position.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman says hear, hear; but that is what he fears. If he is not able to give that denial, or he does not, then why does he say the letter was stolen? The hon. minister has an employe; Mr. Charles Russell is at his service, why does he not inquire from Mr. Russell whether that gentleman wrote the aforesaid letter or not? It would have been easy for the hon. gentleman to come before this House and confound me with a denial from Mr. Charles Russell. Why did he not make an attempt to get it? He was unable. He knows the letter exists. He has not the courage to accept the responsibility of the acts of his employes, and without any notice at all he tries to question me again. I am the party seeking for information. I do not want to give mine at this moment. I will only give it when the proper time comes. Actually the duty of the government is to answer every pertinent question put to them. Their new policy, however, is not to answer questions. Do they fear that those answers will be turned against them in the future, in perhaps the coming general election? What is the cause of their fright? An accusation has been brought against me, but it will not stand, I will take the means to have that accusation proven or withdrawn. I think the dignity of this House is at stake.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And I claim that whatever accusation brought against me by the government must be withdrawn, if the government is unable to prove it and in the present instance I will certainly take the proper means to get it withdrawn. For the moment I may state that the government are unable to answer. They have an employe in their service and are unable to get from him, by telegraph or otherwise, the simple denial of the existence of that letter. All the proof that has been given, up to this day, is against the government. The silence of the government is a proof against them. They are unable to get out of the position in which they are now placed.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I should like to know how it is the hon. gentleman states that if such a letter were sent to Rome and the government denied it, it would place the government in a bad position? What has Rome to do with the parliament of Canada?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend from Stadacona will have to answer that question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. minister would answer the question I put to him I would then transfer those answers to the hon. gentleman. When I asked the government yesterday with reference to the expenses of the ministers last year in their trips to Europe the hon. gentleman gave me all the figures, except the expenses of the two ministers who went to Rome. Mr. Laurier I was told, referred me to the next Auditor General's report, which meant one year's delay. As to Mr. Fitzpatrick I was told that I would get nothing from him. Those are precisely the two gentlemen who went to Rome.

LAKE MANATOBA RAILWAY AND CANAL COMPANY AGREEMENT.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON asked:

The Secretary of State to lay on the Table of the Senate a copy of the agreement between the Provincial Government of Manitoba and the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company of Manitoba.

He said: That was the agreement filed in the Secretary of State's office in regard to the Manitoba Railway and Canal Company, and as there is a bill coming down for the Great Northern Railway which deals with a similar question, I should like to have the information.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no agreement. I presume it is the mortgage from the company to the Manitoba government that the inquiry relates to. It is a long document and they did not send us a second print. Perhaps the hon. gentleman could call at the office and see the paragraphs that he wants. The Under Secretary will show him the documents and whatever he desires will be copied.

SOULANGES CANAL CONTRACT.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Before the Orders of the Day are called I should like to ask the Secretary of State what progress he is making with the papers I made inquiries for some weeks ago regarding the Soulanges Canal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I made several inquiries, the last inquiry being made this morning, and they told me they thought they would have it completed by to-morrow or the day after.

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day being called:

Third reading Bill (S) "An Act to amend the Companies Act."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said: Since this bill was in committee, the Yukon bill has gone through, and I find the descriptive title in that is somewhat different from the title in this bill. This bill professes to authorize mining licenses to be granted in that part of the North-west Territories of Canada, known as the Yukon judicial district. In the bill which has just been passed it is called the Yukon territory, instead of the judicial district. Therefore, I move that the bill be not now read a third time, but that the words "Yukon judicial district" be struck out and the words "Yukon territory" be inserted instead, merely to have it conformed to the Yukon bill which has been passed. It is only descriptive of the area.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B. C.)—I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if it is the intention that coast towns shall issue licenses to those going in.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think so.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B. C.)—They would not do away with the issue of licenses by the town.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, this simply puts companies authorized outside of Canada to mine on the same plane as the free miner. It has no reference to the licenses at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I thought when this bill was under consideration before that it only applied to companies incorporated in the United Kingdom.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the manner, if the hon. gentleman looks at the report of the debate, in which it was referred to; that was the impression left upon the minds of the senators. I notice in looking at the provisions of the bill that it applies to all foreign companies, so that a company organized in the United States or any other country can, by complying with the terms of the Act, carry on operations in the Yukon district. Was it the intention to extend it to all classes of companies?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes, that is the idea.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I certainly did not so understand it, and my own impression is that it would be much better if it had been confined to companies in the United Kingdom. Might I ask the hon. Secretary of State whether he has ever given consideration to the fact that a great number of foreign companies might organize for the purpose of carrying on operations in Canada by reason of the fact that they can organize in a more simple way, and by an evasion of law, I might say, in a foreign country? Now, it seems to me that we are simply facilitating the evasion of our own Companies Act by permitting companies, who contemplate operations being carried on in the Yukon country, to become organized in a foreign country, obtain a license from the Secretary of State, and then occupy the same status as a Canadian company, but evading all the responsibility incident to the Companies Act, and enjoying all the advantages of the company which by the assumption of great responsibility, organized under the Companies Act of Canada. I do not know whether the attention of the Secretary of State has been called to this fact, but it seems to me that it is an anomaly of a very serious character, and legislation of some kind should certainly be introduced to provide against it. There has come under my own observation during the recent mining excitement in the Yukon country, the organization of several companies in the United States, not for the purpose of carrying on operations in the United States, but for the purpose of carrying on operations in Canada, and those companies have organized under the very wide latitude given to them in a foreign country; they have been enabled to raise considerable sums of money without assuming the responsibility that Canadians have to assume in becoming organized under our own laws, and a status under this Act is about to be given them equivalent to the status which Canadians would enjoy under the Companies Act. It seems to me this is a condition of affairs worthy of the attention of the Secretary of State, and which should be met at this particular juncture. The Secretary of State should consider this fact before asking the House to give the third reading to this bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quite aware of the extraordinary latitude that has been given by our courts for many years, running back even ten or fifteen years, to companies organized outside of Canada, having been allowed to sue and practically be sued and have exercised all corporate powers. I do not know whether the federal parliament could interfere, as the matter rather pertains to the provincial legislature. In reference to the bill before us, I was somewhat forced to introduce a measure of this kind in consequence of our mining regulations having gone abroad, that incorporated companies could take out a "free miner's license"—that was the expression—and in order to enable them to do that it became necessary for them to file their charter with the Secretary of State, and then that a license might be granted if he thought proper. In this bill it will be particularly observed that the powers given to the companies are specially restricted. They are not allowed to exercise under this bill the powers they may possess outside of mining. For instance, they are not authorized under this bill, as they are under their own charters very often, to build mills and steamboats, or to operate in any other ways that are incidental to mining. The object of this was to confine those companies strictly to operating mines. In the first place to enable them to be on the same plane as a free miner, that is, if they discover a mine that they had a right of priority for a given number of months, and that if they held a license they could explore the country, and that they were allowed a certain time within which to file the evidence that they had made this discovery—that was the object of the bill to limit it to those particular powers. I endeavoured, in drafting the bill, to confine it to those powers and not to give them under a license enlarged powers Under the bill they would simply get a license to do that—to mine and to buy and sell mines.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should like to point out the very wide language embodied in the Act, which, with all deference, I submit goes very much further than indicated just now by the hon. gentleman. Power is given for the purpose of "carrying on mining operations or of buying, selling, leasing and operating mines of all kinds, on receiving a license, etc." It is quite clear under this language that it is contemplated to permit a foreign company to carry on mining operations. As my hon. friend will doubtless know such a power as that embraces everything incident to the operations of a mine. Let us take, for instance, how broad a power that is, when exercised in connection with the Leroy mine. That certainly embraces the purchase and operation of machinery and everything incident to that, such as the erection of buildings and, in fact, operations of the widest possible latitude. In fact, no company would wish to obtain a broader power than that of operating mines, because, I think any court of law would hold that it applies to every incident relating to the operation of a mine. If, as my hon. friend the hon. Leader of the Opposition said a few moments ago, it were confined to companies organized in the United Kingdom, we could then have some knowledge of the responsibility assumed by those companies, because we know the laws of the United Kingdom with regard to joint stock companies.

Hon. Mr. DE BOUCHERVILLE—From the discussion it appears that the amendment will have an important effect, and in that case the bill should be referred back to a committee of the whole House. I ask the Speaker's ruling.

The SPEAKER—There is no doubt it would be more regular to refer the bill back to a committee of the whole House, but with the consent of the House the amendment can be made without doing so.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is constantly done on the third reading, and this is a mere formal amendment and not one to the principle of the bill. It is simply a description of the territory. I suppose it could have gone as it was, but in order to make it conform to the bill that we passed here last week, the wording should be changed. I have no desire to press on the bill unduly if hon. gentlemen have anything more to say on it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hope the hon. gentleman will let it stand until to-morrow, so that we can look into these regulations. I have not read them yet. Do the regulations which have been issued for the granting of licenses mention companies, and if so, does the word include foreign companies, or companies that have been organized under the laws of the United Kingdom? If it simply refers to companies then it would have a Dominion application only, and there could be no misunderstanding on the part of foreign companies. I am speaking now without a full knowledge as to the wording of the regulations. If the bill remains over until to-morrow we can discuss it more intelligently.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Those regulations, of course, are circulated in the United States very largely and companies have already been organized in Montana, Colorado, Idaho and other states and they have written to us to get miners' licenses. They cannot get a miner's license unless the company is first recognized in some way here, and it requires therefore, that their charter should be registered at Ottawa, and if thought proper, on payment of such fees as the Governor in Council choses to fix ; a license may be issued. We certainly will not allow the licenses to go for nominal sums.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The power given in this bill virtually incorporates, for certain purpose, by mere registration of their Act of incorporation, any foreign company organized under a foreign charter. I do not think there can be any possible misundertanding in the reading of these regulations :

> Joint stock company shall mean any company incorporated for mining purposes under a Canadian charter or licensed by the government of Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, licensed by the government of Canada.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is a company under a Canadian charter may be licensed by the government of Canada, so that foreigners could not say that they have been deceived in reading these regulations. There may be something else which I have not seen which modifies that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that the bill be referred back to committee of the whole House to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

THE PLEBISCITE BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of bill (121) "An Act respecting the prohibition, or the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors." He said :

The measure which I submit for the consideration, and I trust the approval of the members of the House, is one that has been discussed in this country for a very great many years in the press, in the pulpits and in the various assemblies of persons who are interested in supporting a prohibition law. The government introduced this measure in accordance with a pledge that they gave in 1893 to take the opinion of the people of Canada on the question of prohibition. This bill has for its object the ascertaining of what the sentiment of the people is on the subject.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Is that all the object it has?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was the pledge that was given. It will be followed by the necessary consequences, I presume, if there is a proper justification for it. More than that the government, of course, could not do. They must be the judges after the result has been ascertained. The temperance sentiment has been one of very steady and regular growth in Canada for a period of over sixty years. Canada, I believe was one of the first countries in the world to adopt prohibition on a small scale. As far back as 1864 we had on the statute-books of the older provinces, Quebec and Ontario, a law which allowed municipalities, on receiving an affirmative vote from the people, to pass by-laws practically prohibiting within the municipality the sale of intoxicating liquors. That measure was not up to the anticipations of the temperance people, and during the seventies a very strong agitation prevailved over Canada for a measure of larger proportions, and so in accordance with that request which was presented to this House by many thousands of petitions, it was my fortunate opportunity to submit to this House in 1878, a bill giving the people in electoral districts, or in a union of counties, the right to prohibit the sale of liquor on an affirmative vote being polled in favour of prohibition. That Act was pretty generally adopted over Ontario and the Maritime provinces. We all know that for a time it was hailed with very great delight, and it was hoped that good results would flow from it; but, unfortunately, the government which succeeded that of Mr. Mackenzie were not favourable to putting that Act into operation, and it therefore fell into disuse. Like any other law, it required not only a public sentiment behind it, but it required an executive officer to see to its enforcement. I had, as I thought, provided machinery within itself for enforcing the law by directing that the officers of the Inland Revenue should be officers in the several districts for enforcing the Temperance Act of 1878. The effect, however, of the Act was, in the main, good, for the reason that it was an educator for the people of Canada, and no doubt it stimulated the growth of the temperance sentiment. In addition to the Acts which were passed by the federal authorities and the Act passed by United Canada prior to confederation, the other provinces have, at various times, passed prohibitory laws—that is, they have passed local option acts permitting the people within certain areas, if they so desired, to prohibit the issue of shop or tavern licenses. The effect of that has, as I can show presently, been most marked in the diminution of licenses that has taken place in all the provinces, and the effect has been that the consumption of liquor in Canada has been very largely reduced, until this country probably stands in advance of any other country in the world in consuming the smallest quantity of alcohol per head of the population. We can well claim, therefore, that we are in the van of the temperance movement of the world. I find, on looking at the Inland Revenue returns, that the consumption of spirits in 1872 was 1·723 gallons per head of the population. In 1873 it fell a little; in 1874 it rose to nearly two gallons. Since that time it has been steadily falling until 1897, when it was about three-quarters of a gallon per head of spirit. The consumption of beer, however, has increased rather than diminished. In 1872 it was equal to two and three-quarter gallons; in 1897 it had increased to three and a-half gallons. The proportion of wine consumed per head has, however, fallen very considerably—from 1·15 to ·84. That shows that the temperance sentiment in Canada has been growing.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Has the consumption of light wines diminished?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is under the head of wines generally.

Hon. Mr. WARK—Does that include domestic wines?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would not include home-made wines.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Does it include native wines?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, not native wines. The proportion of native wine has increased greatly of late years, particularly in the county of Essex. In confirmation of that statement which I have submitted, I find that so high an authority as Mulhall gives figures that correspond with our own furnished by the Inland Revenue Department. He compares the consumption in various countries and his comparison bears out completely the statement I have made, that Canada is well in advance of any other country in the temperance movement. In the United Kingdom the consumption of alcohol —that includes the alcohol in ale—was, according to the latest return I can find, 1·92 gallons; in France it was over two gallons and in Germany over one and a-half gallon.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does that mean beer?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. In Mulhall's statement they take the proportion of alcohol in the beer; it is all put under that head. In Belgium the consumption was two gallons, in Denmark two, while in Canada it was less than three-quarters of a gallon, so that our own returns are confirmed in that respect. Then I find, as another evidence of the effect of the temperance movement in Canada, taking particularly the province of Ontario, that the number of tavern licenses has fallen, although the population has largely increased. In 1874 the number of tavern licenses was 4,793, while in 1896—that is the last return I have—it had fallen to 2,747, about one-half, although the population had increased.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Has the revenue fallen in proportion?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think not; I think they have put up the license fee, though I cannot speak positively of that. Shop licenses have dropped from 1,307 to 323. Wholesale licenses have fallen from 52 to 26, so it is perfectly evident that the temperance movement has resulted in a very considerable diminution of the licenses and, as I have shown, it has also resulted in a very considerable reduction of the consumption of liquor.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Why not let well alone?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If that argument had been used thirty years ago, probably we would not have made the movement, but we have been gradually enacting prohibitory laws. For instance, in the province of Ontario—and I might apply the observation to some of the other provinces—we prohibit the sale of liquor between seven o'clock on Saturday evening and six o'clock Monday morning; we prohibit the sale of liquor to minors and on election days and at country fairs, and in many other ways the legislature has already exercised the power of prohibition over its sale so that it is practically carrying it one step further over a larger area. My own view is that had the Canada Temperance Act been sustained in the different provinces, and as it was extended over a majority of the municipalities had been enforced, it would have been easy to extend it to the province itself, because practically now, under the recent decision of the Privy Council, a province can prohibit. It can prohibit the manufacture even for local purposes. It cannot prohibit the importation nor can it prohibit the manufacture for exportation, but for all practical purposes in sales of less quantities than what are called wholesale packages, the province would have full power to prohibit within its own area, and that would have been the easiest transition to the adoption of a prohibition measure. Until recently in Prince Edward Island the Canada Temperance Act did prevail in all divisions of it, and I think it is to-day in existence—whether it is enforced or not, I cannot say—throughout Prince Edward Island, except Charlottetown, and it would have seemed an easy transition from local option to provincial prohibition under the Canada Temperance Act. However, in accordance with the demand made by the temperance people at the meeting of the Liberal party in 1893 this resolution was adopted:

> That whereas public attention is at present much directed to the consideration of the admittedly great evils of intemperance, it is desirable that the minds of the people shall be clearly ascertained on the question of prohibition by means of a Dominion plebiscite.

Plebiscites had previously been taken by many of the provinces—in the province of Ontario, where of the vote recorded a majority of, I think, 80,000 was in favour of prohibition. In the province of Manitoba it was very much the same as in Ontario. we all know that in the maritime provinces the question of prohibition, or the non-issue of licenses, has taken a very strong hold on the people, if I am properly advised. In the province of Quebec, although the public sentiment has clearly been against any prohibitory law generally, yet it is a fact that in very many of the counties of Lower Canada, not even a single license exists. There are whole counties in the province of Quebec, where there is neither a shop license or a tavern license, so that it must be admitted that all the provinces of the Dominion, except perhaps British Columbia, have made extraordinary progress in the temperance movement. The bill that the government submit for the approval and consideration of parliament is very simple, and one that does not require very much explanation. It provides that the vote should be taken in electoral districts, that is the districts that elect members to the House of Commons, and the proclamation announcing the time shall be made by the Governor in Council and ample notice shall be given of the date at which the vote will be taken. No time has yet been fixed, and of course the public will be fully advised of the period when the vote is is to be taken.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no provision of that kind in the bill.

Hon Mr. SCOTT—The time is not fixed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Nor for the notice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Dominion Election Act and the Franchise Act, which is now before this House, will apply, and it is to be hoped the vote will be taken under the improved Franchise Act. The vote will be by ballot, and the question will be put into the simplest and most curt form : "Are you in favour of the passing of an Act prohibiting the importation, manufacture or sale of spirits, wine, ale, beer, cider, and all other alcoholic liquors for use as beverages ?" And the answer to be given will be either in the affirmative or negative, "yes" or "no." The government will appoint returning officers in the various districts and the ballots will be furnished from Ottawa with the lists, I presume—if the Franchise Bill is carried, with the lists that shall be prepared under that measure. The Act contains the fullest provisions for having a fair vote and the advocates of prohibition and those who are opposed to it will each have the right to name one or two agents to be present at each polling subdivision, in order that a fair vote may be recorded, that there may be no personation, and that no improper conduct may take place. It will be the duty of the returning officer to swear the individuals who are appointed as agents, and they are then to be admitted within the polling booths. At the end, the report is to be made to the Governor in Council, and the action that will then be taken will, of course, depend entirely on what the rest will do. I cannot foreshadow what the action will be. It would be premature to do that, there are so many circumstances and considerations that will have to be discussed, because the position of Canada and the different provinces is somewhat diverse. Take, for instance, the province of British Columbia, where probably the vote may be largely adverse : that will have to be considered. There are very many questions that necessarily will have to be considered that cannot be anticipated, and therefore it would be quite impossible for the government to forecast what their policy will be after the vote has been declared.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Why does the hon. gentleman attribute more common sense to British Columbia than to any of the other provinces ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not attribute more common sense. The suggestion was that they were not as far advanced.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think we should have a little more information before passing the second reading. I do not think there is any desire on the part of any hon. member of the Senate to oppose the bill. I need scarcely say that my own views as to the principle of a plebiscite are already upon record, and therefore I shall not waste the time of the House in discussing it further than to repeat that I think the whole scheme diametrically opposed to the principle which governs this country : that is the principle of responsible government. I look upon it as—I do not like to use the word "shirking," but that is what I mean—avoiding on the part of the government the responsibility which should, and does, devolve on them under our system of government. Beyond that, having repeated at greater length on the debate upon the address from the throne at the opening of parliament my views on that point, I do not desire to elaborate them. But what I would like to ask my hon. friend is whether they have considered the effect which this vote is to have, providing it has a majority in its favour, of prohibition, on what we term the provincial rights in respect to the licensing and selling of spirituous liquors?

I know the hon. gentlemen opposite upon other questions have been great sticklers for provincial rights. The hon. Minister of Justice perhaps holds a great deal stronger view on that point than most of his colleagues, and I should like to know from him whether he considers the Dominion would have the power and authority to carry out the provisions of this law by prohibiting the importation, the sale, and the manufacture of the liquors referred to in the bill, including cider; and if so, whether he thinks it would be advisable to place a law on the statute-book which would only provide for the prevention of the importation and the prohibition of the sale of spirituous liquors, and malt liquors as is mentioned here in those portions of the Dominion, in which a large majority were in favour of it, as was the case in the provinces of Ontario and Manitoba, and leave it open for the local authorities to deal with the question in the two provinces to which he has referred, providing the provinces of British Columbia and Quebec should record their vote against the principle of the bill? I think also that we ought to have some information as to what the government intend to do in case a large majority, or any majority, is recorded in favour of the principle of the bill. My hon. friend says these are questions which would have to be taken into consideration afterwards.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In placing a question of this momentous character, which is to affect the social habits of the people of the Dominion, and also the revenue, to the extent of from seven to nine million dollars, in addition to what it will cost to enforce the law, the ministry of the day, who are submitting this question to the people, should have come to some decision as to the course they will follow in such an event. Looking at the statements which have been made in the other House upon this question, and which have been repeated to a certain extent by the hon. Secretary of State, the conviction is forced on my mind that it is a broad farce, to say the least of it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The government has a policy or it has none. The government should have a policy to carry out its pledges, and that policy should be to carry out the pledge which the premier of this country gave in various sections of the country during the last election, and also where he has been delivering speeches since, as well as the principle which was laid down at the conference held in Ottawa before the elections, in which this plebiscite was made a plank in their platform. If it means anything, if it is not a delusion, if it is not a snare, if it is not an attempt to humbug the people, then they should be prepared to say distinctly and positively, that, if the majority of the people decide in favour of the prevention of the importation, and the manufacture, and sale of the different beverages mentioned in the bill, we intend to enforce the law with all the power that is at our command. Strange to say, the premier put the matter in a little more ambiguous manner than the hon. Secretary of State when he was answering some questions in the House of Commons on the 25th of this month. During the debate upon this bill he gave this answer:

> The people may pronounce a verdict for or against prohibition.

That is not a very great deal of information, I must admit.

> If they pronounce against it the matter ends at once, and therefore there is no occasion to trouble ourselves with the consequences of such a contingency.

In that respect I think we all agree. If the majority is against the principle of the bill, then the agitation so far as Canada, and so far as their pledges are concerned, must cease. Now, logically, we must take the other deductions to be drawn from the fact of a majority being recorded in its favour. But what does the Prime Minister say :

> But if there be a majority for prohibition, whether large or small, then it will be the duty of the government to consider whether the time has arrived for the Dominion parliament to place certain enactments on the statute-book.

If there is a majority against it the hon. gentleman is quite safe in saying that the matter must drop. If there is a majority in favour of it, then this responsible government is to take into consideration whether the time has arrived for placing a prohibitory law on the statute-book.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Notwithstanding the fact that the vote of the people has affirmed that it should go on the statute-book. What is the plebiscite for, but to ascertain if there is a majority in favour of prohibition, and if there is a majority in favour of prohibition then should not the government enact a law to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicants of all kinds?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That is the logical conclusion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can they not say so, just as well as they can declare that if the vote be recorded against prohibition, then the matter drops and the responsibility ends? There can be no logical conclusion drawn from these statements other than that if there is a majority against it, the responsibility ceases. If there is a majority for the measure, whether it be large or small, according to the doctrine laid down by the premier, who speaks for the whole cabinet, then forsooth they are to take into consideration whether the time has arrived for passing a law and affirming the principle in a bill which the people have said should be passed. That is the position the government occupies. If they have no opinion on this question, if they have formed no policy upon it, they should not submit the question to the people unless they are prepared to carry out and affirm it if approved by the electors. I confess that it is one of the most anomalous positions that, in my experience in parliamentary history, or in reading, ever existed under the constitution of Great Britain. Then there is another point upon which I would like to have some information and to see settled: At what period is this question to be submitted to the people? Are we going to have a continuation of the farce which has been going on during the last fifteen or twenty years on this great question? My hon. friend says he does not know when it will be submitted to the people.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In a reasonable time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the question is not submitted to the people so as to enable ministers to form an opinion as to what course they should pursue, or, in other words, to make up their minds in the language of the premier, as to whether the time has arrived for enacting a prohibitory law, even though the majority be in favour of the principle, before the next session of parliament, then it will go over for consideration till the following session of parliament, and that will be the last session that will be held before an election takes place. Is the government desirous of placing itself in the position of being enabled to say "the majority have declared in favour of prohibition, but we will not come to a decision as to whether prohibition is proper or not, or whether the principle would be affirmed or not, but we will go to the people with the majority in our favour and emblazoned on our banner, we will carry out this law some way or other if you return us to power." It seems to me there is a great deal of force in that reasoning. If they are desirous of having this question settled, let us place on the statute-book a period as nearly as possible, giving plenty of time, to have the vote taken before the next session of parliament.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And in order that they may be enabled to make up their minds when parliament assembles in this city for the next session. My hon. friend says, hear, hear. I am glad to hear that. I hope he will add to one of the clauses of the bill that such vote will be taken not later than a certain period. There would be no difficulty then with the people, they would know when they would be called on to record their votes, and it would remove the suspicion which attaches to the speeches made in reference to the testing of the question by the people, and then in making up their minds as to the policy which they will pursue. This is no small matter. Here are the supplementary estimates, which were brought down yesterday, and over $250,000 is asked to cover the expenses of submitting this question to the people. We are to spend over a quarter of a million to ascertain the opinion of the people, and the Prime Minister tells us, at the same time, in the same session, and almost in the same breath, that whether the majority be great or small in favour of the principle of prohibition, that then will be the time to consider whether such a law shall be passed. Now, if they have not made up their minds as to the course they are to pursue, surely the people of Canada should not be asked to submit to an expenditure of over a quarter of a million—I see in this estimate, besides the $250,000, there is $6,000 for some other purpose, which makes $256,000. Whether that will cover all the expense, I do not know. But I submit that with these facts before them we should know, before the people are asked to cast their votes yea or nay, whether the government intend, as they pledged themselves to the people—but which they refused to do in parliament—to carry out the will of the people. The principle having been affirmed of the plebiscite, although I think it is wrong, by the parliament of Canada, the ministry have taken the responsibility of adopting that course upon this particular question. I hope no member of the Senate will do anything to frustrate this bill; but, on the contrary, that all will assist to make it as clear and workable as possible, so that when the people cast their votes and spend their money they will know that when they affirm the principle, the principle is to be followed by a statute, or not go either to the expenditure or to the trouble and annoyance which attend all elections and squandering—because it is nothing more nor less than that—a sum of over a quarter of a million dollars without any definite object in view other than to ascertain what people think; and then the government of the day, forsooth, who are resposible for this enactment, are to decide and come to parliament and say, "Well the majority is pretty large, it is very large, but it does not embrace the whole electorate of the country, and therefore we do not feel bound to pass a prohibitory law." The principle laid down in reference to voting is that those who neglect to vote are in favour of it, so that if you have a large majority and then add to that the large number that do not vote, one would take it for granted that there was almost a unanimous vote. There has been another thing suggested. I have heard it mooted that those who are opposed to the principle of prohibition do not intend to make any fight on the question, but let it go by default, in the hope and belief that under those circumstances the vote cast will be a minority vote of the whole; and that under such circumstances, therefore, the government will take shelter under that plea, and say, "Well, prohibition should not be enacted." Now I would not like to insinuate anything, but I have heard it mooted, very uncharitably, that the government and those who are opposed to prohibition have entered into a league to accomplish that purpose. No one, of course, would believe that, but people will talk, and people will insinuate, and unless there is a distinct and positive declaration on the part of the hon. gentlemen opposite—I desire to be as respectful as possible—I think they are shirking a responsibility which devolves upon every government. If I am not in error, I hope I am, I can only look upon the course which the government is pursuing upon this question lately, and particularly the position that is taken by the government of to-day, as one, if not designed to humbug, which will deceive the people and will prove to be one of the most gigantic frauds ever perpetrated upon a free people.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Although I maintain that this Senate has a perfect right to interfere with this bill, and even go to the extent of rejecting it, still I think that, as a matter of policy, it is well for us not to do it, considering that this is a measure, which purports to be a direct appeal to the people. It is, however, a proper occasion to express our views on this matter. I for one am opposed to the principles of this bill. I am opposed to prohibition in itself. Although I sympathize very earnestly with those who are trying to promote amongst our people temperate habits, still I think they are making a mistake in having this measure forced upon the people. I believe it will be found an impracticable measure. I am opposed also to the way in which the government is bringing down this measure, employing what is called in other countries the referendum. I do not desire to discuss here whether that institution is a good one or not, but I say that we have not in this country such an institution as the referendum. Consequently, the attempt that is made in this instance to have a reference to the people, as if we had such an institution, is bound to bring us to no practical results. In other countries, where the institution exists, it is provided what kind of measure is to be submitted to the people; it is provided also for the mode in which the referendum is to be taken, and also for carrying out the will of the people. Here we have nothing of the kind. Upon this measure in particular, the government does not pretend even to be governed by the future verdict of the people. It is an imperfect measure, and I think up to the present we have had nothing that would warrant a resort to such a measure. For these reasons I am against the bill and against the policy involved in that bill. This measure could be very well characterized by three words: it is an evasion, a delusion and a useless agitation. It is an evasion of the ministerial responsibility; it is a delusion to the temperance people, and it will be followed by deep and useless agitation, since the government does not show any intention of being governed by the will of the people.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I hardly think it necessary to make many remarks on this question after the able speech made by the hon. gentleman from Belleville (Sir Mackenzie Bowell). However, I might say that I noticed a very striking contrast in the earnestness of the two hon. leaders of the government in the Senate in the way in which they presented the bill yesterday and to-day. Of course, I can quite well understand that. The hon. gentleman yesterday was advocating a bill that the life of his party to a large extent depends upon, and the other hon. gentleman to-day is advocating a bill which will have a tendency to kill his party, and therefore, in my opinion, he is not so strenuous in his efforts, because he knows very well that the government would like very well for the Senate to throw the bill out, and I suppose if the Senate would defeat this bill they would really give us absolution for the votes we gave on the Yukon bill. But I do not propose, hon. gentlemen, faulty as the bill was yesterday and faulty as this one is to-day to vote against them. Both of the bills are unworthy of the government of Canada, for neither one of them is a bill that should emanate from a class of statesmen in a country like Canada. Although I may be willing to accept local franchises, the idea of giving one man half a dozen votes and another man, with equal qualifications, only one vote, is not the true principle on which to elect a parliament. I am not going to say more on that just now. The bill which is now before us is faulty in many particulars. It is not such an outspoken and pronounced measure as it should be. We, the temperance people of this country, should know, because those gentlemen got the votes of the temperance people at the last election by the pledges, the insinuations and the announcements they made to the people that they would favour prohibition. It is well known that the Right Hon. Sir John Thompson told the people his views in plain English. These gentlemen saw an opportunity to make political capital and prepared that ingeniously worded resolution that they would take a plebiscite. What does that infer? It infers, if anything, that if a plebiscite was taken and the people declared in favour of prohibition it would be reasonable and right to give prohibition. In the short session of 1896 I had the pleasure of attending a meeting of the temperance delegation which waited upon the premier and some of his colleagues. The delegation was so large that it was found necessary to hold it in the railway committee room of the House of Commons. My hon. friend the hon. member for Sarnia, was chairman of that meeting on behalf of the temperance people. The object of the temperance people on that occasion was to make a demand upon the Prime Minister for his government to introduce a plebiscite bill that session. The hon. gentleman told them in my hearing that it was impossible to do it; that that session was called for a specific purpose, simply to vote a supply bill, that he had not time to do it, that the next session—that was the last session of parliament—he would come forward with a plebiscite bill and take the vote whether the people were in favour of prohibition or not; and he declared there, in plain and positive terms, and he recited the very incident that the hon. Secretary of State has mentioned to-day in proof that prohibition could be carried out if they wanted it; and he said there were several sections in Quebec in which they had prohibition, and if that was the case there why could it not be the case in every part of the country. He said in plain and unmistakable language to that delegation that he would introduce a measure to take the vote last session but did not do it. I will excuse him, for my part, for that; but he said he would take the vote on the question and if the people declared in favour of prohibition at the following session of parliament he would come down with a prohibitory measure. There was another voice, that of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, who congratulated the temperance people on having a government who were in favour of prohibition, and who, he said, would give them prohibition if they wanted it. It may be that the people will not vote for prohibition. The temperance people are a very creditable class in the country, and worthy of fair treatment, and they will not be humbugged or fooled. They want to know, if they go to the polls and deposit their ballot what effect it is going to have. In this bill you cannot tell a thing about it. Why cannot the government say in this bill that they will carry out the wishes of the people if they express themselves in favour of prohibition.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—What will be a majority?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—This is to be voted upon on the same principles that elections are held—a majority of the votes. They do not say so, they do not say whether it is a majority of the whole electorate or a majority of the people; and we ought to know that, and the temperance people would then know how to act, and if it is to be a majority of the whole electorate the temperance people will put on their armour and go to work and get a majority of the whole electorate. Under the Dominion Election Act a majority rules in this country, and why should it not be the same here? I think it should, and I say that although I ordinarily would not vote for a bill which bears humbug on the face of it, I am going to vote for this bill and the Franchise Bill and the government shall have the full responsibility whatever the result may be. I think also, hon. gentlemen, that the time has come when the government, although they rejected it in the other House, should tell the temperance people what vote they have to poll in order to carry prohibition; and they should also tell the temperance people whether they are going to give it or not, or whether they will put it up for a year or two in order to test the laws. The hon. Minister of Justice on that occasion which I have referred to—came into this delegation after the other ministers had spoken, I think it was arranged that he should do so, that is my humble opinion, it struck me so just then, and they asked him for a speech—said: "Gentlemen I am a temperance man, I believe in prohibition, it is a good and commendable thing;" and he made quite a good temperance speech, but he said this prohibition is a very grave question.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This was not the present Minister of Justice?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The hon. gentleman ought to know that he was not the Minister of Justice then. "Now," said he, "we have to consult the Finance Minister to see how he is going to make up the deficiency of revenue of eight or nine million dollars—that is a very difficult problem. Then there is," said he, "another question, a question of vested rights, vested interests. What are you going to do with those men who have capital invested in this business? That is another very difficult problem. Then there is another question: suppose any one province did not vote for prohibition and all the other provinces did, how are you going to operate the law in that province?" And then he came to a climax and said: "the next question is whether it is practical or not." That, I think, was the question, and that is a question that is evidenced in this bill. The government have not said whether it would be practical politically or not; and the temperance people of this country have a right to know what the result is going to be if they vote for prohibition; and then we will know how to work. We are appropriating two hundred and fifty thousand dollars to take this vote, and nobody knows what it is for. As to the question of deficiency of revenue, that is easily made up, to my mind. To judge from the supplementary and increased estimates I think there could be a good paring down in that particular. There are very many ways in which the deficiency of the revenue could be made up, and if the government will only carry out the pledges they made when they came into power, I am sure the revenue is safe notwithstanding the loss that may result from prohibiting the importation and manufacture of intoxicating liquors. It is not creditable for the government to have a bill pass this House when there is any doubt about it. It is their duty to give the people of the country the fullest information on all these matters so that we may know what is coming. This country does not belong to the government but to the people, and if they do what I have said they will reflect credit on themselves and give satisfaction to the people of the country.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—This bill is what I call political legislation. The premier was waited upon by the temperance people and gave a pledge that he would bring in this legislation. Pressure from a certain portion of the community has brought it about. The result we have seen. I said yesterday that the introduction of the Franchise Bill was in order to carry out one of the pledges made by the government before their election, and this is a second attempt of that kind. I am very pleased indeed to congratulate the government in that respect; but as to the principle of the legislation, both in its character as a plebiscite bill, which has no statutory effect, and also on the principle of what I call sectional legislation in this country, it is certainly objectionable. The temperance people, I suppose, as an organization, does not amount to more than twenty per cent of the whole population; that is to say, one-fifth of the population have brought their influence to bear on the government in order to enforce legislation which affects four-fifths of the population. But that twenty per cent of the temperance people are not a unit in favour of prohibition. They do not believe that prohibition is the most effectual method of bringing about the happy results when the hon. Secretary of State has shown us in regard to the advance of temperance sentiment in this country. Now I may remark, why not let well alone. The lines that the temperance people have been working on for a number of years have been very successful. They now propose to step out of those lines. They say "our efforts that we put forth in order to secure this temperance sentiment in the country generally are too onerous and we propose to make a short cut and by legislation we are going to cut off the supplies." Now, I do not think that that is a sound principle to work upon. In the first place, according to my idea, it is impracticable; that it is utterly impossible to put prohibition in force in such a way that nobody in the country is able to obtain alcoholic or other beverages, that that is a practicable impossibility; and in addition to that you are throwing a burden upon four-fifths, or three-fifths, whatever you choose to call it, of the population what the temperance call a sin in drinking beverages of any kind mentioned in this bill, you are throwing the additional burden upon them of breaking the law because they do not think the law is the right one.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—We are not discussing prohibition at all to-day.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—This is prohibitory legislation. It is a plebiscite to ask what the votes of the people shall be. I am only discussing it on the lines laid down by the Secretary of State, when he introduced the measure.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—He did not touch upon the question of prohibition, he touched upon the plebiscite and what led to it.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—He spoke of the advance of temperance, of the Scott Act which had been put in force, and regretted it had been abolished, and spoke of the good results of temperance legislation in Nova Scotia. Now I am not prepared to accept his statement with regard to the good done Nova Scotia. They certainly have had the Scott Act in force, and there are certainly counties where there are no taverns.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is not the Scott Act, but a provincial Act.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I have the word of one of my colleagues in this House, who is a temperance man himself, that while there were no taverns of any sort or description in the country the temperance people would not permit to be expended from the public chest one solitary penny to enforce the law. Those who desired to break the law were at liberty to do so. There was no attempt to enforce the law. Then I heard from another gentleman, who is travelling very largely in the maritime provinces, that in one town down there of three thousand inhabitants there were fifty-three places where liquor was sold, in a prohibition town, and that there was no revenue obtained from that in any shape or form, that periodical visits were made to the large hotels and fines extracted some three or four times a year where they had something they could get hold of, but those were very minor incidents, that in the great bulk of the places where liquor was sold there was no attempt made to collect fines from them because there was nothing to be got from them.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—What town was that in?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—North Sydney.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—That is in Cape Breton.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I can find half a dozen more, I have no doubt, of the same character. I cross-questioned the gentleman I am speaking of very carefully, because I knew of this legislation and I did not like to make any figures that I could not be sure of. He said evidence can be found down there any time, and I have practical evidence, so far as being able to get what I wanted myself. That is practical evidence we have to deal with where prohibition towns are concerned. I am not arguing against temperance; my sympathy is with the temperance people and anything that will improve the morality and character of the people I am prepared to stand up for. But I am not going to put a heavier burden on the shoulders of those who think they are unfairly dealt with, and I do not think a minority of the people should bring pressure on the government in order to bring about that result. If they were to continue in the steps in which they are already walking and bring about the happy results shown by the comparative figures furnished by the Secretary of State this afternoon, they are doing good, and the day may come when the universal testimony of the people of Canada may be in line with the temperance people, but at the present moment that is not the case, and I do not think it is wise for us to take a vote at this time which is very dubious in its character when it is concluded, that is to say, the people may vote with the temperance people in order to be on the moral side without knowing what its effect may be politically or financially, and in that way there may possibly be a vote in favour of this measure. So far as this bill is concerned, or the question is concerned, the logical consequence is that you shall grow no apple tree, no vineyards, none of these things which through the blessings of God we have for our use and not to be abused, because they contain alcoholic beverages. We have only to take the surplus apples as is done by every farmer in the country, and press them, and cider flows. It is a useful beverage, but keep it for a year or two and it becomes alcohol. Are you going to deprive a farmer and the people of Canada of that beverage? Are you going to close up orchards and vineyards, are you going to say to the people you shall not produce fruit of this kind? That is the logical consequence of this class of legislation. Now, I do not propose to go further than to criticize the measure in the way I have done. If I were disposed to move an amendment to the bill, I should move an amendment to strike out all those words after "spirit" and make it read "the importation, manufacture or sale of spirits, except by the government of Canada." I should be very glad indeed to see the government control the sale of alcoholic spirits instead of the distillers, as at the present moment. It is by steps of that kind that wholesome legislation will be put upon the statute-books. I only hope that the people of the country will view this question in the right light and see the impracticability of carrying out such legislation if it is put upon the statute-book.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I took the liberty of calling my hon. friend to order for discussing a subject which is not before this House at the present time. The bill which is submitted for our consideration, upon which we are called to pass our judgment, it is not a bill for the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors, it is a bill simply for submitting to the people a question as to what their view is upon the enactment of that measure. We do not touch at all the question itself. I can meet every one of the assertions which my hon. friend has made. I can show how faulty his reasoning is and how incorrect his statements are. I have been fighting this battle for fifty-eight years and am well up to all the arguments which can be brought against prohibition and can estimate at their proper value the statements which are made against the course which we seek to pursue. I intend to direct my attention wholly to the question which is before the House—this bill. With reference to it I must remark on what my hon. friend the Secretary of State has said with reference to its origin. Of course, I was not a member of the convention which met here in 1893, and where it seems this measure originated. I notice the hon. gentleman's statement that it was asked for by the temperance people. I presume that in that audience there were a good many temperance people, men influenced very strongly almost exclusively, perhaps, by political principle who were anxious to do that which would bring their party to power. Their views on this question were so far subordinated to other views for the benefit of the party that they were willing for the time being not to advance so earnestly and strongly as they would upon an ordinary platform the claims of the prohibitionists. But I would remind my hon. friend that, large as that convention was, it did not represent the temperance people of Ontario, by any means. I contend most strongly that a large majority of the temperance people of this province of Ontario, did not then, and do not at this hour, approve of the second submission of this question to a plebiscite. What had taken place shortly before that convention? Had not the question of prohibition been submitted to the people in the various ways in which it could possibly be done, quite independent and apart from all political questions? There had been votes taken in Manitoba, Nova Scotia, Ontario and Prince Edward Island, and although not expressly taken in New Brunswick, the effect of a recent provincial election was similar. What was the result of that vote? Such a vote has never come out on any political question in the country. The vote was two to one in favour of prohibition. The whole vote of the plebiscite taken in these provinces was 266,000, and of these 198,000 were for prohibition, and 67,380 against it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Give it to us by provinces.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—In Manitoba the vote was taken on 22nd July, 1892, and it stood for prohibition 19,637, against prohibition 7,115, majority for prohibition 12,522. In Prince Edward Island the vote was taken 14th September, 1893, and the number of votes cast for prohibition was 10,616, against 3,390, majority for prohibition 7,226. In Ontario the vote was taken 1st January, 1894. The vote for prohibition was 192,489, against prohibition 110,720, total majority for prohibition 81,769. Did you ever get a vote like that for any political question? In Nova Scotia the vote was taken 15th March, 1894; the vote for prohibition was 47,356, against it 12,355, majority for prohibition 31,401. The figures are remarkable, showing the extent of the feeling prevailing and showing what an absurd statement the hon. gentleman from Marquette made when he said that only about one-fifth of the population desire prohibition.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—What did the hon. gentleman say?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I said that twenty per cent of the people belonged to the temperance organizations.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—What is the proportion of those who voted to the total vote?

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I do not know. I know in my own county it was a larger vote than ever came out in any political contest. What it was in other counties I do not know. I contend, therefore, in view of what has taken place, that the temperance people generally outside of that convention did not consider that it was necessary to go to the country again, to put the country to the expense and trouble of taking a vote for the purpose of ascertaining whether they were to have a prohibitory law, and they do not at this moment consider it necessary.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Who is forcing this bill on the attention of the country?

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—It is not the temperance people who are bringing it on. It is not a measure that the temperance people ask for. They ask the government to take the responsibility resting on their shoulders, and offer a prohibitory bill to parliament. We have not asked for a plebiscite. The plebiscite is given to put us off from the great measure which we are seeking to have enacted. I contend that it is not a measure which the temperance people ask for, desire or think at all necessary; but, of course, when the question is presented to us it becomes our bounden duty to do all we can to obtain as large a vote as possible. I believe, speaking for myself, and I believe many of my fellow-workers entertain the same sentiments, the only good results that will flow from this plebiscite—and I think a great deal of evil will result from it—is the educatory influence it will have upon the people. It brings up the question and it will be well discussed and thrashed out, and the more the principle is discussed the better our sentiments are understood, and the principles on which we act are investigated and proved to be correct, the stronger will we grow, just as we have grown from day to day through these years until, largely through our influence, Canada occupies that high position which the hon. Secretary of State alluded to when he said that we are, as a people, consuming less alcohol in proportion than any other people on the face of the globe. To what is that due? Is it due to the moderate drinkers? No. As far as any influence of that kind is concerned, they have been rather the opponents of those who advocate prohibition.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—It is not due to prohibition.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I do not say that it is. I say it is very largely due to the efforts of the temperance workers. To the total abstainers we are indebted for the great moral improvement in this country. The fact cannot be disputed. This being the case, and this being my view of the bill, while I do not think it is at all necessary to oppose the bill I do think that it requires amendment, and I trust this House will make amendments to the bill and singularly, notwithstanding the difference between the opinions of the hon. gentleman from Marquette and myself, he has voiced the proposal that I would make in committee to strike out certain words from the Act.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Strike out the word "cider."

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—More than that I will move to strike out all the specific drinks which are mentioned after the word "spirits" and leave it "spirits and all alcoholic beverages." That covers everything. It is unnecessary to put in ale, wine, beer, cider—

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Native wines.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I do not make any distinction at all. So far from those words in the proposed ballot having a tendency to elicit an expression of the people's opinion on this question, they will have the effect of keeping hundreds of temperance people at home. Why? Because, in the first instance, in our part of the country and all the southern part of Ontario, immense quantities of non-intoxicating wines and cider are made. Men have learnt how they can preserve the juice of the grape without alcohol and keep it for years.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—What about cider?

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I will come to that presently. I wanted to show you that putting in the word wine would have the effect of deterring hundreds of temperance people from voting for prohibition. They would say, "I am asked to vote against what I consider a good and wholesome beverage." My hon. friend from Marquette spoke as though we were going to neglect the gift of God in these matters. I do not know how he connects the name of God with alcohol in any shape. Death and incipient decay must come first before you get alcohol. You cannot get it out of any living thing. Apart from that, the manufacture of home wine is very largely conducted in our part of Ontario and keeping in that word is misleading. The whole matter is covered when you say "all intoxicating beverages." That covers wine which has alcohol in it. It does not include wine which has no alcohol in it.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—There is no such thing as wine without alcohol in it.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—Possibly the hon. gentleman, with his long experience, has recipes for putting certain compounds together and producing a very fine wine that has not a particle of grape juice in it. That is wine.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—You are just like all the crazy temperance people.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—My point is clear. There is a large quantity of wine which is preserved without alcohol and should not be included in this clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would not be included.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—It is included in it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is your reading of it.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I am only speaking of the effect of these words on the people of this country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It means anything fermented.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—It does not make it clear. What is the objection to striking out the specific terms if you say all intoxicating beverages? Take ale, for instance. Ginger ale is not intoxicating. I know it is largely used by temperance people, and they do not consider it intoxicating. People will say, "I cannot vote for that, because it will prevent me from using ginger ale." The same with beer. Root beer, I am told, is not intoxicating. Cider in just the same way; there is the pure apple juice, which is not intoxicating until it ferments. It can be preserved for a long time without fermenting. There are plenty of recipes for doing it. Those words in the bill are misleading and will have the effect, not of drawing out the sentiment of this country on prohibition, but of keeping back people whose views are sound on this question, and who, by the insertion of those words, will be prevented from voting for prohibition. I say taking them out will help the bill. I am not opposed to the bill. I want to help it, and my suggestion is to make it operative and what the government expressed a desire it should be a bill to ascertain the honest opinion of the people on the subject of prohibition. I contend that any amendment which is offered in that spirit and with that view, should be adopted, and, I trust, will be adopted by this House, for I am quite sure that if the result of our making the amendment would result in its defeat in the other House that to the Senate would be given the credit, as credit is given us now for having done things for which some partisans want to have the Senate abolished. There are other matters connected with the bill which I think have a tendency not to draw out the vote as it should be drawn out. These have been already spoken of, but I may briefly allude to them again. The very fact that the bill itself does not fix the time for the taking of the vote is a very serious omission. The date should be fixed in order that the people may know when the vote will be actually taken. Of course, we cannot put anything in the bill which would tie up the government to bring in a prohibitory bill, whether the majority should be small or large.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—We might make it "two months."

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—That is a detail which might be arranged. I contend that it is desirable that the bill should specify the time. I do not say that a particular day should be fixed. A week might be named, but it should be something definite so that the people will know that the vote is going to be taken and not put off to suit private whims and fancies. There are one or two other slight amendments which should be made to the bill which are not worth mentioning now, but which I will call attention to when the House goes into committee on the bill, and if thought desirable they can be adopted by the other House and in this way it will make the bill more acceptable to the largely spread temperance sentiment of the country and it would be satisfactory to the Commons because I believe they have an honest desire to ascertain the will of the people on the subject. It will have the effect of bringing out the fairer judgment of the people on the great questions involved in the prohibition of the liquor traffic. I know it has been said the country is not fit for it. My impression is—and the vote which has been taken is my authority for it, and the position I have held for many years in connection with the Alliance enables me to be a fair judge of it—that the country is ready for it, and the more it is discussed and attention is drawn to it and the difficulties pointed out, the better for the cause of temperance and the stronger will be its hold on the minds and consciences of the people. I say every argument which could be brought against it can be shattered to atoms in the face of the truths existing in its favour. No measure I care not what it is, that could be introduced into this country and carried into law would have a more immediate and beneficial effect on the peace and happiness and general well-being of the community than the putting on our statute-book of a prohibitory law such as we have for so many years been contending for. I believe the result would be something marvellous, and as to the trouble about the cost of it and the loss of revenue, a great deal could be said about that. I am not discussing that question now, but I could say some very impressive things about it, not only giving my own judgment, but the judgment of men admitted to be the highest financial authorities the world has ever seen on that question. I am quite prepared not only to support the bill, but to do anything in my power to make it really what it professes to be, in order to accomplish what is designed by its introduction.

Hon. Mr. REESOR—This question is probably one in which the people of Canada feel as strong an interest as in any question that has been debated during the present parliament. I cannot say that I am extremely confident as to what the result of the reference to the people will be. The government have not stated what course they will pursue if the plebiscite should favour prohibition. If the majority is large enough to make it a proper thing for the government to introduce a bill, the bill should be strong enough to carry out the object in view; otherwise it would do more harm than good. Ontario is a well governed province in regard to licensing and the sale of liquor, and public opinion stands as high in Ontario as the public opinion in any province in favour of temperance and the opposition to intemperance. Some years ago the Dunkin Act, a prohibitory law, was introduced in Ontario. At that time I had been in a municipal council for several years, and I had very grave doubts as to whether it would be carried out. Even although a majority of the votes cast were in favour of the adoption of the measure, I had very grave doubts as to whether the popular feeling was strong enough to permit of the measure being carried out for any length of time. My doubts were confirmed, and the effect was that the cause of temperance was in a worse position three or four years after the bill became law than it had been before. The license laws of the province had done a great deal to lessen the sale of liquor aided by the influence of temperance advocates, but after we got the Dunkin Act, there seemed to be a certain class who took a particular delight in breaking the law and, of course, in many ways they were able to get liquor. Later on the Dunkin Act was repealed. After the Scott Act was passed a few years ago, our friends said that it was a better Act, and that was tried, and after three or four years was repealed. So that I am perfectly satisfied, knowing what I do of public opinion, and of the carelessness of the masses of the people, that after you give them a law you must have a strong public opinion in its favour in order to keep it up properly. I am convinced that there is great danger of our being put in a worse position after passing a prohibitory law for the whole Dominion, unless there was sufficient strength of public opinion to compel its enforcement. As to the question of taking the opinion of the people by the plebiscite, I think it is pretty generally accepted by both parties that it would be more satisfactory to have this test before a prohibitory law is passed for the Dominion. I feel no doubt on that subject; but the government having been asked what they would do if the majority were in favour of it. The jury might as well ask a judge if they brought a man in guilty what the sentence would be. Then it may happen that undue influence will be used by one party or the other in various ways. Of course strong organizations will be got up and undue influence may be used upon the one side or the other, and if the passage of this measure is effected by undue influence, it will be a serious question whether the government should pass a prohibitory law. Of course it would be well if we could restrict as far as possible, the sale of intoxicating liquors. The government are asked if a majority of the votes cast should be in favour of the bill would they make it so and so? We have no right to ask these things in advance. If the government are honest in what they say—and they ought to be—if the vote is in favour of prohibition they will pass a prohibitory law. I certainly think this bill should be passed in a reasonable shape, either as it is, or with an amendment. I am judging of course, from the experience of Ontario more than any place else. The license law in Ontario has worked well. Probably the Ontario license law would accomplish as much good as a prohibitory law. I doubt very much whether the prohibitory law would benefit Ontario in any degree. The plebiscite may be carried by a good majority, but I think you can hardly obtain a large majority, because you cannot get enough people to come out to vote. We should have a law which will make things better than our present law. A great deal has been accomplished in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, probably as much good has been done according to population as in Ontario, and therefore they have done as well as they have done in Manitoba. All these provinces I have named have accomplished a great deal, and for my own part I should be satisfied to let them go on and work on their present lines, and they could do as much, and possibly more than they could accomplish if the prohibitory law were passed for the Dominion. I simply wish to place myself on record before the public and to state the position I take upon this question, and I do so because the temperance people have asked for this measure. I would like to have confidence that the law would be properly carried out if it were passed. When we undertake to pass laws for the different provinces upon a question of this serious character, interfering with their habits and their beverages where a majority are against prohibition, we will not make them any better. If any of the provinces should desire such a measure we could let them adopt it as a province; it would be pretty hard for us to pass it for them. I believe they have measures in some of the provinces now which, if continued, would prove a great success.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—My hon. friend from Sarnia took objection to discussing prohibition on this measure. I think it is quite impossible to separate the two, and the hon. gentleman himself could not refrain from bringing up the subject of prohibition when speaking on this bill. However, I will leave that as it is. I was very much surprised indeed to hear the opinion of the hon. gentleman. Here we have the government bringing forward this bill and the hon. gentleman from Sarnia, who is one of the great apostles of temperance and knows the feelings and pulse of the people throughout the whole country, tells us that the temperance people do not want a second plebiscite on this subject, that a vote has already been taken in several of the provinces, and that the temperance party was quite satisfied. It is a strange thing for the government to press this on, considering what the temperance feeling throughout the country is as expressed by my hon. friend from Sarnia. Now, if the hon. gentleman will move the six months' hoist I shall be glad to second it, but I do not suppose he will do that. He will not accept my challenge. The hon. Secretary of State told us that the sale and manufacture of spirits is within the right of the provinces. If such is the case, why was not this question left to the provinces? What a wise thing it would have been! The government would have escaped claims of damages for injury to vested rights; they would have escaped the loss of revenue to provinces as well; but taking it out of the purview of the provinces they make themselves liable if they pass a prohibitory liquor law, to pay for vested rights and to pay the provinces for the loss of revenue, as well as the loss sustained by the Dominion at large. Now my opinion of this bill is that it is evidence of great weakness. It shows a weakness on the part of the government to have made a promise of this kind, a promise, the logical sequence of which is an impossibility it cannot be carried to a logical conclusion if the people decide in favour of prohibition. It is a thing that the government cannot possibly carry out. In addition to the loss of revenue what a sum it would take to guard a frontier of four thousand miles, and a seaboard of fourteen thousand miles. It would take an enormous amount of money. Whether they will put such a law in force or not I do not know, but that would be the logical conclusion of a vote favourable to prohibition. The temperance people are deceiving themselves in this matter by forcing this measure on the country. I gave them full credit for their good intentions, for their desire that people should be sober and industrious and leave off the evil habit of drinking, but if the temperance people themselves reason and argue on the lines of common sense, they will see that their contentions cannot be carried out in this country. If the republic to the south of us were a temperance country, then we might possibly do so. As it is, with the manufacture and sale of liquor in that country, it would be perfectly impossible to keep spirits out of Canada. Not only that, but it would lead to the greatest immorality in this country in smuggling, in running private stills, and in other ways; so that it would not be possible, by legislation of the kind before us, to make the people sober. Of course this bill is not going to be opposed in the Senate. This House is perfectly willing to let the government have the full benefit or the full injury of it, and to permit them to carry out a promise which was made in a moment of very great weakness. I was present when a deputation interviewed Sir John Thompson a number of years ago. The deputation was composed of ladies and gentlemen and he told them distinctly there and then that he would make no promise. He explained that this is a far-reaching question, a question affecting revenue and vested rights, and very many questions hinge upon it, but, he said, we will take the matter into our consideration. I believe after that a commission was appointed to go into the question. If the premier of this country had had the courage to tell the temperance people the same thing, that he would not make a promise, that it would be considered, and he would see what could be done, that would have been a wise and prudent course. Now the country is going to be involved in a scheme which can never be carried out. It would be perfectly impossible to make up the lost revenue without direct taxation, and all the direct taxation is absorbed for municipal and provincial purposes. So that if direct taxation were resorted to it would crush the whole country and people.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I presume the hon. gentleman is going to vote against the bill.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B. C.)—We have taxation enough now, I hate to vote for anything that is in the nature of a humbug or an impossibility, but such a large body of people in this country are asking for this legislation that we should put our own feelings to one side and let the bill pass.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My own position is that of a life-long total abstainer, and I am also a believer in prohibition. I have not, however, since I have been in public life, on this question made it a rule to obtrude my opinions and my views upon other people. While I have my opinions very strongly I leave other people to follow the dictates of their own judgment. I am a believer in prohibition in principle. I think we have nearly all of us recognized in our parliamentary duties that the principle is right. We prohibit the sale of liquor to minors and Indians, we prohibit the sale of it on the Sabbath; we prohibit the sale of it on election days; and we have given the power to the counties or municipalities to prohibit, and have thus admitted the principle in all these various ways. Very few hon. gentlemen in this House will venture to say that the principle of prohibition is not a correct and proper principle. The difficulty lies entirely on the practical side—how far is it possible to carry it out? Although I believe in the principle of prohibition, I do not agree with the extreme men who, because they cannot get prohibition, will not give their sanction to any other good law that has a repressive influence. I do not think that the choice should be absolutely between prohibition and free rum. If absolute prohibition cannot be got, then I support the next best repressive measure which the public opinion of the country can support, and which you can get legislative authority to back. It is a question of practical politics. That is my own position with regard to this question. I must say, however, that I regard this method of submitting the question to the people as likely to be very unsatisfactory, and as exhibiting a great degree of weakness on the part of the administration.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—What about the commission which was appointed when the hon. gentleman was a member of the government that appointed it?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend always takes this ground; if he is caught in a corner doing something cowardly, or anything wrong, he tries to point to somebody else, who did something bad at some other time. The appointment of a commission may not have been the most manly or courageous way of dealing with the question, and I was not a member of the administration which pursued that course, but certainly, upon the very face of it, the attempt to collect information and to get the result of the application of prohibition in other countries was intelligence itself compared with this course which the government is pursuing with regard to a Dominion plebiscite. I remember quite well in 1893, when a political convention was held in Ottawa, which the hon. Minister of Justice, I suppose, remembers all about it, the premier on that occasion made a very strong speech and when I read that speech over—and I refreshed my memory by reading it over to-day at lunch time—he reminded me very much of a bully who had taken off his coat and thrown it on a bush and called out to the bystanders "hold me or I will hurt somebody." He complained that the government in power at that time had locked up this question by appointing a commission, and it was impossible for him to interfere in the interest of temperance until after the result of this commission would be ascertained. Well, the commissioners reported a long time ago. We are now nearing the end of the third session of this parliament. The premier gave a solemn pledge that when his party came into power, they would take a plebiscite vote on this question. We are now reaching the end of a third session and at last we have reached the point of having this bill submitted to parliament for the purpose of taking a plebiscite. But the hon. premier and his friends are not outside of the lines of Terres Vedras even yet, because, although they did bring the bill down they do not fix a time when this vote is to be taken; and judging from the fact that it has taken three sessions to bring down this measure, it is quite reasonable to conclude that, if left to their own sweet will, it will take them some years to muster up courage to refer the question to the people. I think, therefore, that it would be no harm at all to quicken their zeal in the temperance cause by amending this bill in such a way as will bring on the vote before long. Even then, however, there is no assurance that a prohibitory law will be introduced. My hon. friend from Sarnia (Mr. Vidal) was quite right in saying that the temperance people did not demand a plebiscite. The temperance people took the ground that public opinion on this question was in favour of prohibition, and that a prohibitory law should be passed. A compromise course was submitted, "Oh we will take the voice of the people, and we will be guided by that,"—I think that was said then. An hon. gentleman, speaking in their interest, says that it would be very unreasonable for them to say that now. However, they are not yet sufficiently far advanced outside the lines of Torres Vedra to let us know when this question should be submitted to the people nor that they will act on the popular verdict. Altogether I think on this question they have been exhibiting very great weakness, I believe in prohibition, and will support the principle in legislation just as strongly and just as far as public opinion goes and will sustain it, and as far as you can get executive authority behind that law in order to put it into force. If you pass a prohibitory law there should be a majority of the people who believe in the principle and a great many more who, though not believing in the principle, will respect the law of the country and support it, even though it is not altogether according to their views. A great many will take that position, but that is not enough; you must have a reasonable amount of executive authority behind the law, although you may have a strong public opinion in favour of it. That was where the Scott Act was defective. It gave the power to municipalities or counties to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors within their boundaries, but it did not provide executive authority for the purpose of enforcing that law.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It did. The authority was placed with the government of the day, through the Inland Revenue Department, and the Inland Revenue Department was bound to see to the enforcement of the Act, but did not do it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But that section of the Act was found to be a dead letter, a sum would have had to be put into the Estimates to clothe the Minister of Inland Revenue with power to act at all. That was never done.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no sum put in the Estimates for prosecutions or other infractions of the Inland Revenue law; the officers are often prosecuting for other infractions.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I scarcely expected that my hon. friend would have pointed to that section the Inland Revenue Act as a proof that there was executive authority behind the Scott Act, for it is notorious that that executive authority has not been exercised in support of the Scott Act. The only attempt to do so was in the Liquor License Act of 1884 known as the McCarthy Act, a measure which we remember a little about. It was passed by the parliament of Canada and provided for the issuing of licenses in counties where the Scott Act was not in force, and made particular provision for the enforcement of the Scott Act where it had been adopted by the people. I know in my own province the forces brought into play were very useful and very effective and had it not been for the contest that was kept up in the courts as to the validity of the McCarthy Act it would have been found a very great help indeed. They found it a very great help as it was, and it would have made the Scott Act a much better law if those provisions had been kept in force. While I am a believer in the principle of prohibition, whether it be total prohibition or a repressive measure coming as near to prohibition as it would be possible to get the sentiment of a country to carry out, I believe that none of these laws will be good and effective unless they are supported by executive authority in the way they ought to be. It is a great moral reform that is sought to be promoted by prohibitory legislation, and although in this plebiscite the majority of votes is recorded in favour of the prohibitory measure, and that majority is quite decisive, and a prohibitory law is passed, yet unless the government of the day will make effective provision behind that law to make it workable, it will be a farce and will never be carried out. All that will be involved and should be considered in dealing with the question. That the temperance people did not demand an appeal of this kind is quite evident from the Liberal convention held in Ottawa in 1893. When that resolution was submitted I noticed Mr. Spence, a leading temperance man and a leading liberal as well, opposed it. He did not finally record his vote against it, but he entered his protest against the necessity of that appeal. He said that already there had been expressions of opinion, if he had spoken later he could have pointed to others, but I am not one of those who believe that the result of an election held in that way will be as strong an evidence of public sentiment as you can get in a great many other ways. I have serious doubts on that point. Unless the election is contested and the opponents of the measure hold meetings, a small vote will likely be polled and people will not be actually brought up to the point of considering the question sufficiently serious to induce them to record a vote on it An instance of that kind occurred in Charlottetown in 1893. The provincial government caused a plebiscite vote to be taken, and an overwhelming majority of votes in Charlottetown favoured prohibition, as the hon. gentleman from Sarnia read to us, which I believe to be the views of the majority of the people of Prince Edward Island, but not at all so overwhelming as that vote would indicate; Only a month afterwards a very vigorous campaign was held over the repeal of the Scott Act, in the same city and in the very same constituency where they sustained prohibition by about five to one, there was only a majority of fourteen votes in favour of the Scott Act, showing that when a contest takes place and when men are put on their mettle and settle down to work, you will find a different result to that to be found when a vote of this kind is taken. All this should have been considered thoroughly. The government was pledged to take a plebiscite vote. I have no doubt, from what has taken place, that the members of the government are not taking the matter very seriously and do not seem to be supporting even this bill as strongly as other government measures. There can be no doubt that they are committing the country to an expense of $250,000 and there will be large private expenditures in addition to that. There will be time lost, there will be expenditure of money on the part of temperance people, and if the other side make an effort at all, there will also be an expenditure of money by them. Altogether it is going to cost the country a great deal and I am satisfied, from the manner in which the government have treated it from the first and the manner in which they are treating it now, and from what I know of the lack of earnestness with which people will go into a question of this kind when there is no real discussion got up about it, that the result will not be worth the money it is costing the people of this country in the way of affording a solution of this question. I will not oppose the measure. The government have sought this method of getting an expression of the opinion of the people upon it. Let them go through to the end and if they follow up the result of the vote, and pass a prohibitory liquor law, I am one of those that will support them and sustain that law in every way I can as a citizen of this country.

It being six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The manner in which this bill has been received by the House I think must strike any hon. gentleman as being, to say the least, a little singular.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—In what way?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman asks in what way? I shall try to indicate. The hon. leader of the opposition, and one or two other hon. gentlemen, dealt with the matter as though it were a purely political act on the part of the government, an act done simply with a view to party advantage. Now, hon. gentlemen, I hardly think that any member of the House who has given the matter any consideration could look at it in that way. Certainly he could not, after listening to the discussion this afternoon, and I probably should not have said anything if I had not been very much impressed by the tone of the discussion. It recalled to my mind what happened with respect to the Canada Temperance Act. Mr. Mackenzie's government took action in 1878 in the direction which was wished by the temperance people of that day, and introduced a measure which was understood to be at any rate calculated to promote the cause of temperance in Canada, and the bill was supported by the temperance advocates in this House and the other House. I do not think that the government of that day, who lost a good many supporters by their action in introducing that measure and passing it, secured one-twentieth of the temperance vote by that legislation and the indications are that the bill which is now before this House, which is more searching and thorough in its character a great deal than the legislation introduced by the hon. Secretary of State in 1878, is not likely to secure the government any temperance votes, any more than the Canada Temperance Act. We have had the hon. gentleman from Wolseley (Mr. Perley) denouncing the government and the measure which they have introduced. The hon. gentleman from Sarnia (Mr. Vidal) gave the House to understand that this is not the sort of measure that the temperance people wished—in fact the temperance people thought no such appeal as this necessary. Then we had the hon. gentleman from Marshfield (Mr. Ferguson) who announced himself as a total abstainer, but who thought the bill was altogether the wrong kind of measure. On the other hand, we have the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Mr. Macdonald) who does not profess to be a temperance man, because it was a measure that he disapproved of, a kind of measure that in his opinion parliament should not pass. As far as I remember, no hon. gentleman on the other side of the House had anything to say in approval of this bill. Under these circumstances, seeing that the people who are opposed to prohibition condemn the government for introducing this measure and seeing that the gentlemen who are loud in their professions of love for prohibition and temperance also condemn the government, it is pretty clear there is not very much political or party advantage to the government for introducing the measure.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—It must be a very bad measure.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Does the hon. gentleman say that we do not support the government in this measure?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The government are taking their lives in their hands for the purpose of carrying out a pledge made on their behalf, and I think one hon. gentleman said he gave them a little credit for doing that?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I congratulated them for it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That was the only good word said about the bill during the discussion. The hon. gentleman from Shell River did give the government a little credit for it.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—You can give them a little credit for it now.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Hon. gentlemen say they are going to vote for the bill.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—We are going to support the measure.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is one of the characteristic features of the position. The advocates of temperance say this is not the sort of measure that they want, that it is not a measure which ought to be passed and that it deserves the condemnation of temperance people; and hon. gentlemen opposed to temperance condemn the measure as being an objectionable one and one such as should not be passed by parliament, but all are going to vote for this objectionable measure.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—How do you know?

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is what they tell us. One after the other told us they did not approve of the bill, but were going to vote for it. Naturally they think they have the government in a hole and are going to keep them there. That is the real English of it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—They got into the hole themselves.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Let them wriggle.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Now, so far for the spirit in which this measure has been received by the House——

Hon Mr. McKAY—There is to be no spirit in it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Two or three hon. gentlemen referred to the cowardice which the government had shown in dealing with the matter, and the great length of time they had taken. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield (Mr. Ferguson) was simply shocked, and his moral sense was outraged by the long delay on the part of the government in introducing their measure, and the hon. gentleman laid considerable stress on the fact that we were now near the close of the third session since the government had come in, and it was only now the measure had come down. The hon. gentleman did not advert to the fact that the government have yet been in power only twenty-one months.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is too long.

Hon. Mr. POWER—And everything considered, I think they are making very good time. Now, compare their conduct with that of the late government. I know the hon. gentleman from Rideau division (Mr. Clemow) does not like to have attention called to the late government.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I did not expect anything from them.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The temperance people, like my hon. friend did not expect anything from the late government and they were not disappointed. The late government had a Minister of Finance who was a most conspicuous apostle of temperance, and several members of the government were also professional temperance men, and they were in power for eighteen years. They came in and found this imperfect measure generally known as the Scott Act on the statute-book, but they never did anything to improve the temperance legislation during the whole eighteen years that they were in. But they did something; in 1891 they appointed a royal commission composed of vigorous supporters of the government, who received considerable sums of money for producing four enormous volumes which nobody read, and which, as far as I know, had no effect.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. POWER—The commission was issued in 1891, and nothing was done. The government remained in power for five years afterwards, and nothing further was done. This tub which was thrown to the whale was supposed to be sufficient for the remaining term of office of hon. gentlemen opposite; and temperance men who had been supporting them appeared to think this was quite a sufficient tub. The hon. gentleman from Sarnia (Mr. Vidal) took the ground that there was no necessity for the plebiscite, that a provincial plebiscite had been taken, and that this should have satisfied the government as to the feeling of the people through the country. Now, dealing with that, which is a substantial and serious argument, I may say this: I did not take any active part in the campaign in Nova Scotia when the plebiscite took place there, but I know that there was a feeling in Nova Scotia and, I presume there was a similar feeling in the other provinces, that a provincial plebiscite really was not going to settle anything; that the province might decide to go in for prohibition, but as long as the importation of intoxicating beverages into the country was recognized by law, and as long as the manufacture of spirituous liquors in the country was allowed, prohibition by a province could mean nothing. So that the provincial plebiscites were not to be taken as indications of the real strength or the real trend of public feeling in connection with the matter. I know that in the province to which I belong the temperance feeling is so strong, and the drinking of intoxicating liquors is so unpopular a thing, that numbers of people who were very decidedly opposed to prohibition did not care to go and register their votes against it. When it comes to be a question such as is to be put before the people now, when if a substantial majority of the people decide in favour of prohibition, prohibition has to go into operation, the vote will be, I fancy, somewhat different. People will feel that it is a serious matter and will give it their consideration, and those who are conscientiously opposed to prohibition will, in much larger numbers than they did at the provincial plebiscite, go and register their votes against the measure. As to what the fate of the measure may be, I do not know.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—That is all in the future.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is all in the future. I do not know what the result of the vote may be, but I do not think the action of the government deserves to be condemned by both sides—by the temperance people and by the people who do not believe in prohibition—and I do not think they can be fairly charged with cowardice. They are doing what the former government never ventured to do—perilling their existence for the purpose of carrying out the pledge given with respect to this measure; and if we are going to pass the bill, as the House undoubtedly is, I think if we cannot say anything friendly about it, we might pass the bill in respectful silence, and not with jeers and flouts as we have been doing.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—The hon. gentleman from Halifax, if he would excuse me for saying so, seems to pose as a candid friend of the government, but in this case he has shown himself more than ordinarily candid, because he has shown to us that this measure is such a lame one in every way that it neither meets with the approval of the prohibitionists nor the approval of those opposed to prohibition.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In this House.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—And that a certain number of people in the House think they have got the government in a hole and will keep them there. I do not think that is a fair criticism of the bill. I do not think the hon. gentleman from Sarnia (Mr. Vidal) was quite right when he interrupted the hon. gentleman from Marquette (Mr. Boulton) in his few remarks with respect to the general question, because I do not see very well how one can make up one's mind and say they are going to vote either for or against this bill without, to a certain extent, considering the consequences likely to flow from it, and if one values consistency, he would like to so far put himself right, that if we felt under the circumstances, we had to vote for this bill we should at least clear ourselves from any imputation that we considered the measure was a good or sound one in any way. I suppose almost every individual member of the House, no matter which way his convictions go, on the question of prohibition will probably vote for the bill. I shall certainly not vote against it, but I wish to guard myself in this way that I do not vote for it because I think the measure is a good one. I am perfectly willing to acknowledge that if, by passing this bill and taking a general vote of the people, it should happen that the majority are in favour of total prohibition, and the government thereupon introduce a bill to carry out the decision of the people, if I say the effect of such legislation to put an end to the misery and wretchedness which undoubtedly arise from intemperance, the loss of credit, the sacrifice of many bright hopes which have been brought about over and over again by intemperance in drink, then it would be well for this country to make any sacrifice, no matter how large it might be, in order to bring about such a desirable state of things. If I thought that that would be the result, then I for one should not grudge the burdens which this measure would entail upon the country if carried out, but in spite of what was said by the hon. gentleman from Sarnia as to the statements which were made by the hon. gentleman from Marquette with respect to the inefficiency of prohibition legislation, I can state from my own personal observations that in some of the states and in this country where prohibition acts were in force that they were openly violated, the law was not observed and over and over again I saw, as I said before, at hotels and otherwise where a little tipping would get whatever you wanted notwithstanding a prohibitive law was in force and I do not believe if a prohibition act was passed to-morrow that it would be possible in a large city for instance, by any such means to put an entire stop to the sale or use or manufacture of spirituous liquors. When, therefore, we are contemplating the possibility of these results following the passing of an Act of this kind, if we do not think that it is likely to produce the good effects which are hoped for by the prohibitionists, then we have a very good right to look at the other side of the question and consider what such a measure is going to entail on the country, in the way, first of all, of the loss of revenue. We begin with a pretty large sum for carrying out this vote, $250,000 or something of that sort.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—$256,000.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—But in addition to that, there is the enormous loss of revenue which will ensue and, what has been alluded to already in the course of the debate, the almost impossibility of guarding the enormous frontier we have both by land and water, and the annual expenses which would be entailed by any thorough system, at all events, of preventing the introduction of spirituous liquors at different points along our frontier. I say that if we conscientiously believe that the passing of the Act is not going to be as effective as our prohibitionist friends believe, in the way of putting an end to drunkenness and intemperance, then it is well that the consequences otherwise should be kept in view, and although I am perfectly willing to give every possible opportunity to those who conscientiously think that a prohibitive act of this kind will result in the greatest moral benefit to the country in putting a stop to drunkenness and intemperance everywhere, while I am perfectly willing to give them every opportunity of working out by any means that they may suggest, ends which are so desirable, yet I do not wish it to be understood that I vote for this measure, or that I am willing to allow it to pass this House, so far as my vote is concerned, without at the same time expressing my conviction that if it should result in favour of passing a prohibitory bill that the bill will in any sense effect the results which our prohibitionist friends so fondly expect.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I do not look upon it that the question of how prohibition would work is before the House. The hon. member from Halifax (Mr. Power) says that we are opposed to the bill, but will vote for it. I believe that a large majority of this Senate would consider it unjust and ungenerous if this question were not left to the people of Canada to decide what they should do about it; but we are not going to throw up our hats in favour of the government because they are submitting the question to the people. They have been complimented on carrying out their pledges to the people of the country; we will see how they will carry out their pledge on this question I am in favour of submitting the matter to the people; I do not say what I shall do when it is before the people. It is for the electors to say what they want and for the government to bring in legislation to carry out the wishes of the people. It is for the government to say how they are to make up for the revenue that will be lost by adopting prohibition. So far as the revenue is concerned, if we could do away with the evils of intemperance we should be able to make up easily for any loss of revenue. Any one who has seen the results of intemperance among the people, will believe that we could easily make up for any revenue that would be lost by doing away with intemperance. If if it is going to improve the morality of the people, prohibition should prevail. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman from Halifax when he says that we are all opposed to the measure. When he assumes to speak for all he includes me, and I say that he does not correctly represent me. If the government are carrying out their pledges they are doing what is right. If a majority of the country vote for prohibition, then the government, in all fairness and justice, should carry out the expressed wish of the people. I do not know whether I shall favour or oppose the measure that they bring down; it all depends upon what sort of a measure it will be. The hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Allan) says that we could not enforce such a law because of our long line of frontier that we would have to protect. I will not discuss that now, but I say this—I will allow no man to state that I am against submitting this matter to the people. We are all willing that the people should have a chance to say what they want, but I should like to have a decisive majority in favour of prohibition before the government attempt to legislate—not merely a majority of the votes polled, but a majority of all the voters of the country, even in the province of Quebec where one man may have half a dozen votes. I do not agree with those who say that the government are in a hole, they are a good way from a hole yet, but they will be in a hole by and by if they do not carry out their pledges to the people of this country.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think my hon. friend from Monck (Mr. McCallum) did not hear the speech made by the hon. leader of the opposition. My hon. friend who leads the opposition in this House informed us that the government had adopted a very erroneous principle in submitting such a measure to parliament; that the government ought to have assumed the responsibility of dealing with the matter without a reference altogether. My hon. friend from Monck (Mr. McCallum) is in favour of a popular reference.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend the leader of the opposition is not, and so my hon. friend who leads the opposition and my hon. friend from Monck take opposite views on this question.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Give us your view on this matter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman from Monck has a right to think as he likes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly, and I have also a right to call the attention of my hon. friends present to the difference of opinion between the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. gentleman from Monck. Nevertheless, I have no doubt whatever that the two hon. gentlemen, when the matter comes to be voted upon, will not differ so widely in their votes as they do in their opinions. My hon. friend who leads the Opposition says it is contrary to the principles of responsible government to refer a matter of this sort to a popular vote. I do not quite agree with him in that view. Ordinarily the work of legislation ought to be carried on by parliament, and the government ought to assume the responsibility of determining what they propose, because in a great many instances the questions that, as a Government, they are pledged to and that they are called upon to deal with are questions that have been before the country for some time and in most instances are questions with reference to which the elections have turned. Now this is not an ordinary question of legislation, and no question relating to a sumptuary matter can be, because it is not what is best in the abstract, but it is what the people are ready to sustain that you are bound to determine. Ordinarily you determine what you believe to be best, what as a matter of public policy will be to the advantage of the country, but you have here to consider not only whether the measure is one sound in principle, but you have also to consider whether, if it be sound in principle, it is of such a character that the people will sustain it when it becomes law. Here you have a question of that sort, and my hon. friend from Sarnia (Mr. Vidal) says that the temperance people did not require this. Well, if they did not, they have a curious way of showing their indifference, for there have been many meetings and several deputations, all pressing upon the government the duty of carrying this plebiscite measure and referring the question to the electors. They seemed to think that it was of importance that this should be done. That the government will gain much support from those who are of the political faith of my hon. friend I never for a moment supposed. We had an experience of this before. I remember that the government which preceded that of Mr. Mackenzie in office had a member who was prominently associated with the prohibition movement, the Hon. Mr. Tilley. Now, Mr. Tilley appeared before the country frequently on the public platform as an advocate of total abstinence and prohibition. Mr. Tilley became a member of the government in 1867 and continued a member of the administration until near the close of 1873; and, so far as I know, he never took the first step towards proposing in parliament a measure to give practical effect to those opinions which he had so frequently advocated. Now, when we came into power our temperance friends throughout the country pressed us much more actively and energetically to deal with the subject of prohibition than they had pressed those who preceded us. I remember a vote that was proposed in the House of Commons, I think, by Mr. Schultz, then a member from one of the Manitoba constituencies, and the next year after that vote was proposed the government introduced the optional act which bears the name of my hon. friend, Mr. Scott. That measure was supported by a large number—by a vast majority of the temperance people throughout the country. It was framed to meet their wishes. It did meet their wishes: it was supported I think by my hon. friend from Sarnia (Mr. Vidal). but I do not think, when we went to the country. that my hon. friend gave us the slightest aid in the elections which followed because of our support of this measure. I know many of our friends who supported it in parliament were actively opposed by those who pressed this measure upon their attention. There was a Mr. Watson, who I think was in the civil service in the city, who had taken an active part in favour of prohibition, who had gone upon the public platform and denounced those who were engaged in the liquor traffic and who spoke of the blessing that Providence would bestow upon those who favoured a measure such as that which the government were asked to support and which they did support and carry into effect. I remember, after the elections were over, when we were defeated and were succeeded by my hon. friend and those who were associated with him—that, I think was his first entrance into the government—Sir Leonard Tilley returned and became a member of that administration, and there was a large deputation of those who had pressed the question of prohibition upon us, at whose instance we had acted, whose views we had carried practically into effect, that deputation headed by Mr. Watson waited upon Sir Leonard Tilley, congratulated him upon his return to office, and spoke of the great advantages which the cause of temperance would derive from his return to power. Now the hon. gentleman was in office a great many years again, and so far as I know, the Act which we put upon the statute book was an Act that was new. There was nothing specially to guide us. We were called upon to walk in an untrodden way and it was natural to expect that when the Act came to be put into operation many defects would be discovered. We had an Alliance that met here in this city; we had a member at that time, one of the members of Lanark who afterwards became a judge, and is a judge still—that member posed in the House as a special advocate of prohibition, but when it was proposed that it was the duty of the government to take into consideration the defects in the Canada Temperance Act and to make those amendments which experience pointed out to be necessary, an amendment or a resolution that was very nearly in the words of the resolution which had been moved by Dr. Schultz some years before, that hon. gentleman said "I am devoted to temperance, but I am still more devoted to the administration;" and the hon. gentleman did not support that amendment but voted against it. I never heard any of my hon. friends who are politically opposed to us, but who are devoted to the cause of temperance, ever complain of the conduct of that hon. gentleman, or of the conduct of any of those associated with him. They regarded the political exigencies as a sufficient justification of the course that had been taken.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is the hon. gentleman certain of the correctness of the statement in reference to Judge Jamieson—for I presume he means Judge Jamieson?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, I mean Judge Jamieson, in reference to the resolution which I myself had moved.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Was it Committee of Supply?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I cannot tell my hon. friend.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are you sure that he voted against it?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am sure; I remember the speeches that were made, and I believe the hon. gentleman made a speech in harmony with the vote, and while the Alliance approved of the resolution of Dr. Schultz, the Alliance depreciated my resolution because they were not in sympathy with us politically.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think that is so; and so the hon. gentleman will see that the government, in this matter, are not bidding for popular support, and when my hon. friend the Senator from the North-west

Territory (Mr. Perley) who spoke this evening and denounced this measure, and when my hon. friend from Sarnia (Mr. Vidal) said he did not approve of it, and my hon. friend who is just sitting opposite, from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Ferguson) declared his devotion to prohibition and his opposition to this measure in principle, I was quite well satisfied that these hon. gentlemen may very well be taken as the exponents of prohibitionists generally who belong to the conservative party. The views which the hon. gentlemen expressed show that whatever may be their devotion to the question of prohibition, their devotion to the party is still stronger ; and so the question of party will always with them be paramount—

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—That is for yourself.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend knows that I am speaking the truth in sober earnestness.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am afraid my hon. friend is not at all satisfied with the composition of the temperance party of the country.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am pointing out to my hon. friend that we are not acting in this matter with the expectation that we are going to derive any great benefit.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You have given an exact picture of your own party, painted to life.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend knows that it is an exact picture of the hon. gentleman and those who are associated with him.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I I know how they treated me. I seconded that motion for prohibition, moved by Dr. Schultz, and I know when I went back to my constituency the whole temperance party voted to a man against me, and voted for a man that was drunk seven days out of the week, and who afterwards died from the effects of intemperance.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Then the hon. gentleman has given us his experience that the friends of total abstinence and the friends of prohibition in the constituency from which he came were opposed to him, and when it was a choice between my hon. friend, who is known to be a polite and straightforward man (although a strong party man) and a man who was a habitual drunkard, they chose the habitual drunkard. It was a case again of the choice of Barrabas.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.—Let me tell my hon. friend another fact. When the question of the Scott Act was submitted to the county of Hastings, my old constituency carried it by a majority of three or four hundred, and the Grits again voted on party lines.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that, after all that, perhaps the only way the country can obtain a true opinion on this question is by disassociating it from the existence of the parties and putting it before them as a practical and direct question ; and so on that my hon. friend has testified in favour of the course which the government have taken on this bill and in justification of the observations of the hon. gentleman who immediately preceded me. I think my hon. friend who sits to my right here (Mr. McCallum) has made a convert of the hon. leader of the opposition.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not so far as the plebiscite is concerned.

Hon. Mr McCALLUM—Perhaps my hon. friend would allow me to say a word ; the government bring in a measure of prohibition and because they do so they think we ought to support them in all the evil things they do. What I say is, if they are going to carry out this let them have a fair chance.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Does my hon friend think we are doing a fair thing for the country? If he does he ought to support us. If he does not he ought not. My hon. friend from York (Mr. Allan) made a speech, and I did not very much dissent from it, but holding the views that my hon. friend does, I do not see how he can find fault with the government, or regard this as in any degree an improper or unwise measure, or an improper course to pursue, for my hon. friend has said "if you think you can accomplish anything in this way, if the people approve of a measure of this sort, since excessive drinking is a great evil, they ought to have an opportunity to try the reform. Now, there are many things to be considered. There are a great many people in favour of a reform that costs them nothing. And there was one observation addressed by the hon. senator that I did not quite agree with, and that is that we would be imposing a very large burden on the country if we carried this measure. It is true we would wipe out between seven and eight millions of public revenue, but that revenue is paid by somebody now. As it is, it is a burden on somebody. The advocates of prohibition in this country admit that that burden falls on the wrong parties, that it is a burden that these parties less qualified than perhaps than any other portion of the community to bear, because they spend a great deal of their time in drink and spend very little time in earning the money that they spend in drink, and so leave a great many in want, and they are the least qualified to bear the burden. Now, what the prohibition people propose to do is to shift the burden and put it upon other shoulders—to take it themselves—yes, and I hope they will not shirk the burden when the time comes. Perhaps, if I were disposed to follow my own private view in the matter, I would have been inclined to have proposed a perfected measure providing for the taxation necessary, so that no further legislation would be required after the vote was taken. I expressed that opinion before I became a member of the administration and we saw—I did, and I am sure a great many others did—what the expression of opinion was on that view by the advocates of prohibition. I do not know whether my hon. friend (Mr. Vidal) would have favoured it or not, I do not know whether he would like a perfected measure.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I would have considered it perfect if the measure had provided that prohibition should be granted if the people expressed themselves in favour of prohibition.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman proposes that we shall take two bites of the cherry ; first ascertain whether there should be prohibition or not, and after you have ascertained that fact let some one come forward and sacrifice himself in order to determine how the money shall be raised. Now I say this, there is no doubt, when the time comes for a vote on this question, that all its financial as well as its social features will be considered. It is important that they should be considered, and I am perfectly sure that no one who regards drunkenness or drinking as a very serious evil and who insists on legislation on this subject, can desert those that he calls on to take their lives in their hands in order to carry through a measure by which that object will be attained. If we are to substitute eight millions of taxation in some other form in the place of that which is now raised on alcohol, if we are called on to devise some means by which the loss to the public revenue is to be made good, those men who have asked us to repeal that tax to establish prohibition, cannot, without dishonour, desert the government in carrying the measure consequent on the vote which they give.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—No matter what means they take?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We have to take some means or other. It is always possible, if we propose a means and it proves not to be the best, to amend it at any time; but if the excessive use of alcoholic drinks is the great evil that is spoken of, then the mere question as to whether the tax should be on tea, or sugar, or coffee, or upon all or a part of the municipal tax, or a poll tax, it is a question altogether subordinate to the question upon which the reference is made to the electorate of the country.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Certainly, if the results are successful.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see you cannot tell whether the results will be successful till the experiment is tried. These gentlemen who asked for this vote hold that it will be successful. They hold that a large number of the crimes and a great deal of the misery existing in the community result from the excessive use of alcoholic drinks. Abolish that use, put an end to that drinking habit, and men who now spend their time in idleness will become sober and industrious, and the whole community will gain substantially by the change. I say then that I cannot admit for a moment that the government are put in a hole by this vote. The government have acted upon the advice of a large and influential section of the community, a section at which the vast majority of the clergymen of this country are at the head, and these men are asking us to take our lives in our hands, to take the risk of defeat on a measure which they think is in social consequence altogether paramount far above any other measure. That being so, they are bound by every principle which can animate honourable men to stand by those they have asked to carry out such policy. I say then that we submit this measure to ascertain whether there is the strength of public opinion to sustain the government if they put such a measure on the statute-book.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—That is putting it on party grounds, is it not?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No. My hon. friend will see it is not on party grounds in any other sense than this, that it is a measure taken up and sustained by the government, but it is at the instance of a large number of men who are of both political parties. My hon. friend here asks us to do this; my hon. friend asks us not to simply make the reference, because he wanted the vote without the reference, but he wants the vote, and if we pass that measure of prohibition my hon. friend is as much bound to sustain us by every consideration which ought to govern a public man as any man devoted to the government apart from this question is bound to sustain us. That is my position.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I think your premises are wrong because you made that a plank in your political platform before you were elected to power.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes. And it was at the instance of the men I have spoken of, and not at the instance simply of the men belonging to the Liberal party, because there are a great many men of the Liberal party who do not favour absolute prohibition. I am speaking now of those who are committed to this one question. I say then that I regard this measure as one of importance. My hon. friend opposite has spoken as if it was the duty of the government to commit itself in advance to what it would do in a certain event. I say we are not committed in advance to state what action we would take.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I thought you were taking your lives in your hands.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—So we do if we introduce such a measure, but we are taking the vote for the sole purpose of ascertaining whether the public will sustain such a measure or not.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Save our lives or not.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Save our lives or not—why, hon. gentlemen, in the case of the plebiscite vote in the province of Ontario, we had hotel keepers who voted for prohibition in large numbers. Why? Because they thought it would contribute to the defeat of Sir Oliver Mowat. They said just what some hon. gentlemen said this evening, they are putting Sir Oliver Mowat in a hole, and my hon. friend has referred to this question, but he knows right well that that vote was no test, after all, of the sentiments of the country upon this question.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I want to ask the hon. gentleman just one question. Supposing my hon. friend's government introduce this prohibition measure and have to go to the country, will they expect all the temperance men to vote for them supposing they are wrong on twenty other different things—on their railway or fiscal policy, say? Am I bound to sacrifice my principles on these other questions because they introduced prohibition?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Is my hon. friend bound to sacrifice his principle on the question of prohibition for the sake of party? Now my hon. friend has been doing that for twenty years—

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—No, siree.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I want to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to a fact that he must have forgotten. When the vote was taken in Ontario, it was taken on that question, apart altogether from politics, and it was not even associated with municipal elections nor with political questions; hence it must have been an expression of opinion and not, as the hon. gentleman has just stated, useless. I want to mention one other point: the hon. gentleman pretends that the Conservative party were favourable to this measure, and have been for years, and have sacrificed it whenever it came to a question of election. Does the hon. gentleman forget the action of the whole temperance party in the county of Haldimand, a few years ago, when they appointed a committee to wait on the two candidates. Mr. Henderson, the Conservative candidate, who now represents that constituency, pledged himself when they asked him to pledge, and Mr. Waldie, also a temperance man, refused positively and distinctly, and they went afterwards and passed a resolution to support Mr. Waldie, and the whole of the tavernkeepers and the liquor influence went for Mr. Waldie, because he refused to pledge himself, and he won the election, but was turned out immediately by the courts for corruption.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have to apologise to the House for making any remarks to the House on this subject, the hon. Minister of Justice having possibly considered that he closed the debate. The hon. Secretary of State, however, introduced the bill, and consequently that is my explanation for attempting to make a few remarks after the Minister of Justice has expressed himself on this bill. I, however, never hear my hon. friends on the opposite side of the House discuss the question of temperance, or of morals, but I am reminded, and reminded very forcibly, of the scriptural incident of the two men who went up on one occasion to the temple to pray, and especially of the one who thanked the Divinity that he was not like other men. It has ever been the theme of my hon. friends upon the opposite side of the House that they have an absolute monopoly of virtue, and that all the vice in the world must be attributed to their opponents in politics. Now, it seems to me that in the discussion of this bill the question of prohibition is not involved. There is a more important principle, to my mind, involved in the consideration of this question than simply the measure of prohibition. The Liberal party for many years have been posing as the custodians, so to speak, of temperance principles within the Dominion of Canada, and have entirely ignored the promotion of moral sentiment in this particular direction fostered by the Conservative party. In the very statistics advanced to-day by the hon. Secretary of State I think it is established beyond all peradventure that, during the eighteen years of the administration of the Liberal-Conservative party, the moral sentiment of this country has largely tended in the direction of progressive temperance. If there is anything which the Secretary of State did establish by those statistics to-day, it is that during the tenure of office of the Conservative party there has been a steady diminution in the consumption of liquor, and I submit with all sincerity to this House that the policy which has been pursued by the Conservative party has not been one of simple profession, but has been consistent in all the ramifications of government with which they had to do in regard not only to this question of morals, but in regard to all other questions of a similar nature with which they have had to do. I accuse and charge the present government with insincerity in regard to this particular measure. If ever a moral measure was stamped with the brand of insincerity and hypocrisy it is this measure which is submitted to us and which is called a plebiscite, and which is advanced before the country on the pretention that it is to advance the cause of total abstinence. The principle of the referendum has been made use of on this occasion, but I submit it has been prostituted for the purpose of deceiving the public, prostituted in such a way that many who have not given deep consideration to this measure will be deluded into the idea of believing that it really is a plebiscite bill and that the present government are the promoters, not only of temperance sentiment, but of prohibition sentiment throughout the entire country. I know that in 1893, when the Liberal party held their convention in the city of Ottawa, and adopted a platform or policy upon which they went to the country during the last election, one of the principal planks in their platform was that a prohibition measure would be introduced—that a plebiscite would precede that, but when they made use of that term plebiscite it was a well-known term. It involved a well-known principle or system of government, and the people of this country and this House had a right to expect that the essentials of a plebiscite bill would be embodied in an Act which would enable a true referendum or plebiscite to be taken by which the sentiments of the people of the Dominion could be intelligently secured on this question, and by which the judgment of the people would be crystalized in a bill which might be introduced into parliament and carried, providing the sentiment of the voting public of the Dominion went in the direction indicated in the plebiscite. Now I do not know, hon. gentlemen, that there is anything within the four corners of this measure which has been submitted to the House on this occasion to bind the government to introduce a prohibition measure in accordance with the public will, and which is believed to be the policy of the government in submitting this measure. There is not a word of committal in this whole measure by which the public, after they vote on the measure, can say to the government "you have submitted a plebiscite which has been carried and now we ask you to fulfil the promises you have made and carry out the guarantee you have given." I pronounce this to be innocuous in every sense of the term ; it would be impossible to present anything more emasculated in its character than this. Let us assume there is a majority for this question. Does my hon. friend, the Secretary of State, say, in the event of there being a majority vote on this question, that the government will be bound to carry out the will of the people ? One of the first expressions used by the hon. gentleman in introducing the measure was that the government reserved to themselves the right to be the judges as to whether a prohibition measure will be introduced or not, even in the event of a majority vote being given on this plebiscite. If the prohibition party are satisfied with such a measure as this, then they leave an impression on the public mind of being very easily satisfied, humbugged by the promises of political parties on this particular question. Now I point out to the House the futility, so to speak, of submitting such a measure as this and considering for a moment that the government will be bound by reason of the pronouncement of public opinion on it. My hon. friend the Secretary of State has stated that the government will consider themselves to be the judges as to whether it will be incumbent on the government to introduce a prohibition measure upon a majority vote being favourable to such legislation. Now we have a very distinct recollection of how the present government has treated the expression of public opinion on all measures, notwithstanding their professions in regard to such measures. We have a very distinct recollection that our hon. friends went to the country distinctly professing to the people that in the event of their being returned to power a policy of free trade, such as exists in England, would be at once introduced into this Dominion. The public did pronounce in favour of the present government, but did our hon. friends opposite consider it incumbent upon them, notwithstanding that pronouncement of opinion, notwithstanding that majority vote which they secured, to carry out this profession and introduce a policy of free trade ? Not at all. We find them exactly where their predecessors were upon the question of the fiscal policy. We very well remember that those gentlemen advocated, at the time of the Liberal convention to which I refer, and also immediately previous to the last general election, that the annual expenditure of this country should at least be kept within thirty-three or thirty-four million dollars. Where do we find them to-day ? Notwithstanding the expression of public opinion on that question we find them bringing down estimates over $40,000,000. In that matter did they consider the expression of opinion of the people of Canada ? I think not. We find these gentlemen, prior to the last election, appealing to the public upon the Manitoba School Question and declaring that separate schools should be restored in Manitoba in the event of their return to power. Do we find, notwithstanding the expression of public opinion on that subject, that they carried out that pledge ? Not at all. These hon. gentlemen have cast to the winds their former professions on all those important questions, and so will we find them casting to the winds their former professions on this great question. If they were desirous of demonstrating to the public their sincerity upon this question of introducing a prohibition measure in deference to the expression of a majority vote on this question, they would have embodied in this bill their committal to that policy, and that would at once have stamped them with consistency, sincerity and adhesion to the policy which they had long professed. But we find nothing in the four corners of the bill to ensure to the public the introduction of such a measure as has been promised. And, furthermore, I would submit to this House that there is a very serious omission in the bill, and that is, that no period of time has been fixed within which they should submit the question to the public. We all know that evasion has been reduced to a science in the matter of government, and it would be the easiest thing in the world for the government to keep postponing for an indefinite time the submission of this measure to the public. If the government had been sincere in this matter they would have embodied a date in this bill at which it would be submitted, so that the public would be sure of the fact that at an early day the expression of the public will upon this question might be had, so that at an early day a prohibition measure might be framed in accordance with the pronouncement of public opinion on this question. These are a few evidences which must indicate to this House, beyond all controversy, the fact that although this bill has been brought in, it has not been introduced for the purpose of really testing the public opinion of Canada on this question, but simply to evade a responsibility which hon. gentlemen opposite had taken on their shoulders and which to-day they are not prepared to carry out.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The statements made by the hon. gentleman from Calgary are rather startling. Because I showed that in the last eighteen years there had been considerable improvement in the temperance movement in Canada, that less liquor was being drunk year by year, he gives to the federal parliament in the last eight en years all the credit. He entirely ignores the legislation which has been going on in the provinces and to which really the improvement is due. There is where the change came in, and I think, if the hon. gentleman will inquire into the history of the last eighteen years he will convince himself that his premises are entirely erroneous. He says that this bill is not carrying out the pledge that we made. The government made no pledge to bring in a prohibitory law. I have in my hand the only pledge that was given, the resolution which was adopted at the Ottawa conference. The hon. gentleman will see, if he looks at it with any degree of fairness, that it entirely sustains the bill which is now submitted for the consideration of this House. It says that whereas public attention is directed to the admittedly great evils of intemperance, "it is desirable that the minds of the people," not the policy of the government, "should be clearly ascertained on the question of prohibition by means of a Dominion plebiscite." Can anything be fairer than the bill we have submitted on the present occasion? Can you point out any improvement on that bill? The hon. gentleman says it ought to have included a time. That would have been very unfair to the temperance people.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—For this reason: you might have the vote taken on a list five years old, when a considerable number of those who are in favour of prohibition to-day, the young men who have grown up under happy influences, would not be able to vote, then the votes of a considerable number of those who have gone out of the country would be counted against the majority. We have to obtain a list first. If this House passes the Franchise Bill that is now before it, without mutilating it in any way, there is no doubt that the plebiscite will be submitted within a very reasonable period.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—How long?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Well, most certainly before the end of this year if there is a proper Franchise Act. If, however, this Senate were to disturb in any essential part that Franchise Bill, it would be a matter of grave consideration for the government as to the course to pursue. It would be idle to ask for a vote on the present list. Hon. gentlemen will see that. It would be unfair to the temperance people, because there is a large proportion of the temperance young men of this country that would be entirely deprived of their votes. So that it would be idle to say that it would be at all a fair basis upon which the views of the people could be ascertained. The hon. gentleman is, therefore, not warranted in making the statement he did, that this government is in any way shirking its duty. Up to the time I felt the wet blanket that was thrown upon this bill when it came into this chamber, I was of opinion that the bill entirely met the approval of the temperance sentiment of Canada. It was very well known that there had been a discussion as to how the question should be submitted. Very many persons were of opinion that the consequences should be submitted; that the people should be warned as to the effect of it, that if eight or nine millions loss of revenue had to be supplemented in some other way, it was only fair to the people that they should be advised of the necessity for raising that and their attention called to it, so that they could consider it in all its phases. The temperance people thought they could not get as large a vote, and the government were anxious to gratify the temperance sentiment. We therefore asked, "How do you want this question submitted?" They said, "In the baldest way possible. We simply want the question put: 'Are you or are you not in favour of prohibition?'" Therefore, we have submitted it in the very terms of the temperance people, contrary to the opinion of very many persons of good judgment in this couutry, who thought it was not a proper question to submit, that the consequences ought to be there, that people ought to know what the effect would be, and should be informed that a sum of eight or nine millions had to be raised in some other way than it is at present made up. So that the hon. gentleman is not justified in making the charges he does. Then, the hon. gentleman takes advantage of the opportunity to dash off and charge the government with not having carried out any of their pledges. Now, we carried out one of our pledges yesterday by presenting the Franchise Bill, which is one of the most important, and one on which the people of this country had been agitated for some time. We certainly had a revision of the tariff. Would the hon. gentleman have thought it wise and prudent to have made such a revision, a reduction in one year that ought to have been extended over twenty years? That would have been a suicidal policy certainly. It would be destructive of the industries of this country.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The government should not have told the people they would do it, if they did not intend to carry out their promise.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We did not tell them. We told them we would make a revision of the tariff, and we were fair and just and fulfilled our pledge. We were fairer than the late government in their dealing with the tariff and we gave a very substantial revision. We did not propose to ruin the industries of the country. We would be charged with ruining the industries if we had made a sweeping revision. But it is all coming. We had a reduction of twelve and a half per cent this year, and we will have twenty-five per cent next year. I think I have shown the wisdom and propriety of the course we have marked out for ourselves, and it will be followed very closely. The hon. leader of the opposition said that we were interfering with provincial rights and assuming to take away the jurisdiction from the provinces.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I gave no such opinion. I said that had been the contention of the hon. gentlemen opposite, and asked them what they proposed to do. I did not lay down the principle.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is quite open to the provinces to adopt any prohibitory law to the limit of their power. They could practically prohibit within the provinces. They cannot prevent the importation, nor can they prevent the manufacture if it is for exportation, but they can prevent the manufacture for local purposes, and they can prevent the sale of liquor in less quantities than what is called wholesale—five gallons—and one would suppose that if the temperance sentiment was so strong, taking the province of Prince Edward Island, that the natural sequence would have been the provincial legislature to the extent of its power would have declared in favour of prohibition there, and the same way in the other provinces where the temperance sentiment prevails to such a degree. How were they in those provinces? Were they sincere?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There was a Liberal government in the province and they were just doing as you are doing.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the temperance people were sincere why did they not press the Liberal government to pass a prohibitory law? It leads one to the conclusion that the temperance sentiment was not as strong as we are led to believe by the figures produced. The hon. gentleman from Sarnia (Mr. Vidal) condemns this bill, and also the hon. gentleman from Wolseley (Mr. Perley). The hon. gentleman from Wolseley said it was an evil bill, and the hon. gentleman from Sarnia said we should introduce a prohibitory measure. The figures would not justify this government or any other government in introducing a prohibitory law. The vote of this country is about 850,000, probably nearer 900,000 votes. The whole vote, as announced to-day by my hon. friend, was about 400,000 —about one-half—and of that vote 266,000 odd were for prohibition. Would this government be justified in introducing a prohibitory law with the vote of one fourth of the electors? I think not. I do not think it would be in the interest of temperance to propose a law of prohibition where it was not asked for by more than one-fourth of the electors. Do hon. gentlemen mean to say that the government would be justified, even supposing there was a bare majority? I am not prepared to say now how far the government should go, but speaking off-handed for the moment, it does not seem to me that any government would be justified by a bare majority of the votes at the election.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Why do you take a vote at all then?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If it was overwhelmingly in favour of prohibition, if the sentiment was so much in favour of it that if an Act were passed it would be sustained, then we would be justified in passing a prohibitory law. But one cannot foresee what that vote will be. One cannot tell in advance. It is absolutely impossible, and it would be criminal on the part of the government to lay down any hard and fast lines to be observed wholly irrespective of the consequences.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does my hon. friend not believe that the great majority of the temperance people of the Dominion at the present time, who are to vote upon that bill, labour under the impression that a majority vote pronounced upon this plebiscite will result in the introduction of a prohibitory measure?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I know nothing of the kind. There has been no expression of opinion on the subject. I have never heard any person express an opinion upon it. Nor do I think any person in favour of temperance would argue in favour of such a proposition. I do not propose to go any further into the details of this measure. We have pretty well discussed it, and somewhat in a jocular manner, showing insincerity on the part of hon. gentlemen.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments to defend a late colleague of mine, whose character as a prohibitionist, and as a temperance man has unnecessarily been aspersed by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not admit that I aspersed any one. It is a pretty strong word.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is a matter of opinion and the interpretation put upon the language the hon. gentleman used. He spoke of the conduct of Sir Leonard Tilley from the time he entered the Cabinet, shortly after confederation, and also in 1878, and made the statement boldly, that during the whole of that period that hon. gentleman never did anything towards placing upon the statute-book a prohibitory law. That is quite correct, but he ought to have been equally sincere and equally honest in stating

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I resent altogether the hon. gentleman's assertion that I am not honest in my statements. I repudiate any such language.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I withdraw that word and say the hon. gentleman should have been a little more accurate in his statements, or perhaps I should put it in another way, he should have taxed his memory when speaking of a departed gentleman. A more sincere and honourable man never sat in the parliament of Canada or outside of it, I believe, than the Hon. Sir Leonard Tilley. When he sat in the parliament of the province of New Brunswick, he was the father of and introduced a prohibitory law. Mr. Tilley found, after some practical experience, that it was utterly impossible to enforce the law, the people not being prepared to accept it, and carry it out, and he laid down that principle and acted upon it from the time that he entered the Dominion parliament until the day he left it. He openly avowed his opinions in favour of prohibition. He was a practical temperance man in his whole life, but he had been taught the lesson from his experience in New Brunswick of the unwisdom of attempting to place upon the statute-book a law which he believed the people were not prepared to accept. That was the position of Sir Leonard Tilley during his whole political life and when an hon. gentleman at this period, after he has passed away, would leave impression upon the public that he had been inconsistent in the views and opinions which he held, he is not doing justice to a departed statesman who had the respect of every man who had the honour of his acquaintance. I have one more word to say so far as that is concerned. The hon. gentleman stated distinctly and positively that during the whole eighteen years of the existence of the late government nothing was done to enforce the principles of temperance, and to prevent the extension of the sale of liquor in this country. The best Temperance Act, without going as far as prohibition, that was ever conceived or placed upon the statute-book, was that which emanated from the committee of which the late Mr. Dalton McCarthy was the chairman, and had it not been decided by the Imperial parliament that that law was ultra vires, that we had no power to enforce it, that the authority for dealing with that question was with the provincial legislature; I hesitate not to say, and I say it without the slightest fear of successful contradiction by any man who took an interest at that time in the temperance cause, that that would have proved the most effective Act that was ever attempted to be placed upon the statute-book against the sale of intoxicants in this country.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It was a license Act and not a prohibitory Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not say it was a prohibitory Act. What I said was that it was the best temperance Act that was ever attempted to be placed upon the statute-book, short of prohibition. That is the language I used, but it was to a certain extent a prohibitory Act, because it made provision for the enforcement of what is now known as the Scott Act, or more properly the Canada Temperance Act, in every county in which the vote had been cast in favour of it. The hon. leader of the government in this House must have come to the conclusion that there is no one here who has a memory, or a knowledge of past events. I must impress upon his mind that when he rises to make these statements, he had better do it when there are no gentlemen on the floor of the Senate who have had anything to do with, or any knowledge of the past events of this country. I have taken upon myself to say these few words in defence of a departed friend and colleague who stood very high in the estimation of the people of this country, whose practical life as a total abstainer was an example to the whole country, and whose political reputation stands above reproach. I desire also to defend, to that extent, the action of the government of which I was a member, in reference to their attempt to place upon the statute-book a bill which would have sustained the law in all Scott Act counties, the principle of which had been approved by the people, and that it would have done more to put a stop to illicit trade in this country than any other law that was ever framed, had it been allowed to go into operation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman rose to call in question a statement of mine, and has resumed his seat without questioning the accuracy of the statement I made in any particular. All that the hon. gentlemen said is not in contradiction of any statement I made. I said that Sir Leonard Tilley was an advocate of prohibition. Is that not so? I said he was a member of government. He was an advocate of prohibition before he ever entered the government.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—And brought into the government for that reason.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He was there seven years, and had not proposed a prohibitory measure during those whole seven years. Is that not so? Does my hon. friend contradict that, that during the seven years he was a member of the administration, from 1867 until November, 1873, he did not propose any measure in the direction of prohibition?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, of course not. Why did not the hon. gentlemen give the reason?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am stating a fact.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You stated half a fact and nothing more.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I stated the whole fact.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And that is not all. I said that Sir Leonard Tilley returned at the end of five years and entered again into the administration. I made no attack upon him, but I pointed out that certain parties who had pressed upon us the necessity of a prohibitory measure, and with whose wishes we had complied in carrying through the Canada Temperance Act, waited upon Sir Leonard Tilley when he returned here and congratulated the hon. gentleman when he came to office. He remained in office seven years longer, and he did not profess to amend the defects of the Canada Temperance Act.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—What did his successor do?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Does any hon. gentleman contradict that? Does the hon. gentleman contradict my statement in that regard? That is all I said with regard to Sir Leonard Tilley and with regard to his connection with the temperance question. My hon. friend rises to tell the wonderful things the government with which he was associated did for the cause of temperance. What did they do? They put upon the statute book a license Act which was held to be ultra vires. and the hon. gentleman asks the everlasting gratitude of this House and the country because they did that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman said we never attempted to do anything.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I say it now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Of course you do.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That was the License Act. There was the Canada Temperance Act which the hon. gentleman and his colleagues had not the courage or the inclination of mind to repeal, and although they permit a private party, not a member of the administration, to move in one direction and some other member to move in the opposite direction, the government itself never took the first step towards the correction of any defect in the Canada Temperance Act, and if the hon. gentleman can rise in his place and mention one single occasion during the period of eighteen years he was in office, where he undertook to amend or reform that Act which entitles him to the everlasting gratitude of those in favour of prohibition which he claims, let him point it out and I will hold my peace on this question.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I do not know that I caught exactly what the hon. senior member for Halifax intended to convey. He spoke of the government taking their lives in their hands. And yet I think I have a little light upon it and that light emanates from the other chamber in the evasive answer which was given by the premier to the question put to him by Sir Charles Tupper and which has been already referred to in this House, but it will do no harm to refer to it again and emphasize it. The answer was:

> The people may pronounce a verdict for or against prohibition. If they pronounce against it, the matter ends at once, and therefore there is no occasion to trouble ourselves with the consequences; but if there be a majority for prohibition, whether large or small, then it will be the duty of the government——

To do what? To introduce a prohibitory bill? Not at all.

> To consider whether the time has arrived for the Dominion parliament to place such an enactment upon the statute-book.

The hon. Minister of Justice, speaking of the conduct and action of the Conservative party, used a very elegant sentence which ran this way:

> The question of party will always be paramount to prohibition.

I suppose the hon. gentleman should embalm that sentence immediately after the answer of the premier, and I think the position of these two will be very suitable and very suggestive. I think both the hon. senior member from Halifax (Mr. Power) and the hon. Minister of Justice did not treat quite fairly these statements which were made by the hon. gentleman from Sarnia (Mr. Vidal) when they represented him as saying that the temperance people did not press or wish for a plebiscite bill. If a plebiscite bill were before the House alone, only a plebiscite bill, the temperance people of course would support the plebiscite bill. But here we have the question of a prohibition enactment and the temperance people take the position that they have already have a pronouncement from the people in the shape of a plebiscite, and that they now want the enactment of a prohibition law, a law which, it appears, the government is either unwilling or afraid to take the responsibility of enacting. In the representations which they made of the statements of the hon. gentleman from Sarnia (Mr. Vidal) they did not treat him fairly. The temperance people are not to be understood as being averse to, or in favour of a plebiscite bill, but they consider that they have had an expression of the popular will already, and they want the result in the enactment of a prohibitory law.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (130) "An Act further to amend the Dominion Lands Act." He said:—This is a bill for amending the Dominion Lands Act in very many minor details which it will be much more expedient to explain in committee. There is no new principle. In the first clause the words introduced are:—"Or, in his absence the senior clerk performing the duties," and so on. In the various clauses of the bill there are words dropped out and other words inserted in order to make the meaning clearer. I ask that the bill be read the second time now, and the changes can be explained in committee.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not wish to throw any obstacle in the way of my hon. friend securing the passage of the measure under consideration, but I would point out that he labours under a serious mistake in saying there are not introduced into this measure new features, and rather radical features. If my hon. friend will peruse the bill closely, he will find two very important features in the bill in clause three and clause 12, nothing analogous to which will be found in the existing Act, or in other Acts dealing with Dominion lands. Hence, before the bill goes to committee, I should like very much to hear from the hon. Secretary of State the reasons, which have led to the introduction of those two features. I am not prepared at the moment to say that they are undesirable or that they will receive any opposition from myself; yet, at the same time, I think there is some explanation due to the House as to why large tracts of land should be withdrawn from settlement and placed absolutely in the hands of the Minister of Interior for the purpose of granting to co-operative associations the right to secure what I might term isolated settlements. I might say, without predicating the reasons which may be advanced for the introduction of this amendment, that there are very serious objections to the introduction of this policy. I might illustrate that by pointing out the fact that many foreign settlers who have been introduced into the territories have expressed a desire for isolated settlement, entirely apart from other portions of the community where there can be no interchange of opinion, no interchange of business, where they live, in fact, as isolated as if they were in their own native country. It seems to me, on the face of it, that this is not desirable legislation.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I might point out to my hon. friend that the Mormon settlement in Lees Creek, in Alberta, or in Western Assiniboia, is very much of the character to which I have referred. The same thing prevails in some of the Mennonite settlements. While we in the North-west desire to see representatives of every kindred, nation and tongue settling in that country, yet we think it is in the public interest that there should be interchange of opinion and interchange of trade, that those people should learn our habits and customs and grow up with a fair knowledge of the institutions of our country; whereas if legislation is introduced by which they can live isolated from other communities and erect a barricade around themselves, it seems to me that the country does not profit by that class of settlement. Then, in section 12 power is given to the Minister of the Interior to withdraw from settlement any tract of land which, in his discretion, he may chose to withdraw, and to sell that land to corporations or to individuals entirely irrespective of any amount being fixed for the sale thereof. The policy of the government, so far as I am aware, in the past, has been to fix a minimum figure for the sale of public lands, and not leave it absolutely in the discretion of the minister, or even the Governor in Council. That policy will be found already in the Act, where the hon. Secretary of State will find that the minimum amount has been put upon the sale of some lands; that is lands to bona fide settlers, and I think that is a dollar an acre. These are two features which I and my colleague from the territories would like to receive an explanation upon.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Clause three is not in any sense different from the principle laid down in clause 37 of the old Act, which confers practically the same powers, and it has been on that principle we secured some excellent settlement. We certainly would not have secured the Mennonites unless we had consented to that proposition, nor would we have secured many other settlements if we had not that clause.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Under section 37 of the old Act no power is given to the minister to withdraw from sale or settlement such a tract of land as is indicated for the purpose of settling this particular community upon, whereas in the clause in this bill absolute power is given to the minister to withdraw the lands in question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no other way of obtaining an area in which a number of people can settle together. They come out in numbers. There were a number of Galicians and they speak an entirely foreign language, and if we had not this provision it would be utterly impossible for us to retain them. With regard to clause 12, the hon. gentleman overlooks the fact that that clause only refers to lands that are unsuitable and unsaleable and of no use without irrigation. You must hold out some inducement to parties, because the expenses are large. It is found that by offering the land at a price which will induce people to accept it, we increase the settlement.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not object to that, but we object that the right should be vested in the minister to withdraw very large portions of land from settlement and to hand them over to a corporation and preclude settlement without any guarantee that irrigation would be carried out in the near future. I quite appreciate the value of irrigation in that country. No one appreciates that more than I do, and yet the settler should have the same opportunity of acquiring those lands as corporations or capitalists who do not live in the country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—So they can.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is tieing up lands and preventing settlement.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Is there anything in that bill which refers to those school lands?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think there is anything. We will go over it carefully in committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

SECOND READING.

Bill (110) "An Act further to amend the Post Office Act."—(Hon. Mr. Mills.)

SUPREME GRAND LODGE S. O. E. BENEFIT SOCIETY BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (122) "An Act to incorporate the Supreme Grand Lodge of the S. O. E. Benefit Society."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL moved the suspension of the 41st rule.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL moved the second reading of the bill. He said: It is not necessary that I should enter into any explanation. The bill will go to committee. It is simply to extend the powers of the society to various provinces. Having only an Ontario charter at present, they desire to extend that charter to the Dominion.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (142) "An Act to authorize the Quebec Harbour Commissioners to borrow money."—(Hon. Mr. Mills.)

Bill (148) "An Act respecting the transport contract between Her Majesty and the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company."—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, 1st June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'Clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

TRAVELLING EXPENSES OF MINISTERS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired of the government :

1. How much did cost the voyages which were undertaken in 1897 by the Right Honourable the Prime Minister and the Honourable the Solicitor General, to Europe, to the United States or elsewhere ?
2. Are these travelling expenses the expenses incurred by each of these two members of the Administration individually, or do they comprise the expenses of a private secretary or of any other persons composing the following of each such member of the administration ?
3. Were these members of the administration accompanied by their private secretaries ?
4. Had these two members of the administration in their services other persons than a private secretary ? Who were such persons and in what quality were they employed ?

He said : I wish to know if the government have an answer to give to this question to-day. If they are not prepared I will let it stand. It is the same inquiry I made yesterday.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, no answer.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I will let it stand.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman can let it stand till the judgment day if he likes.

DELAYED RETURNS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of Day are called, I would like to direct the attention of the government to the fact that on the 17th June last year I obtained from this House an order for a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the different departments, or employees thereof, and Mr. Choquette, member of the House of Commons for Montmagny, on the subject of the recent dismissal of a number of persons, a list of which I gave. That was ordered on the 17th June, 1897. I should like to know if the government is prepared to bring down the returns to that order or if the order is to stand till the judgment day ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have made repeated efforts to obtain that return and have written very pressing letters to my colleagues requesting them, if they did not propose to bring it down, to give me an answer of some kind or other. I have the return from some of the departments, but there are two returns missing. I shall make an effort to get the correspondence for the hon. gentleman. I have written personally to the ministers on the subject.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I will call the attention of the government to another order that was made on the 22nd April last on a motion asking for a return of all correspondence between the Departments of Militia, Public Works and Agriculture, and any person or persons whatsoever in connection with the Quebec exhibition of 1894 and with the forthcoming exhibition of 1898.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Was not a part of that return brought down ? It seems to me I had an answer from the Department of Agriculture. I understood part of it was brought down. However, I will make inquiry.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I might be mistaken. I looked over the journals, but did not find reference to any such document. There was also an order for copies of correspondence which took place in reference to Captain and Brevet Major P. Belanger of the 61st Battalion. That was ordered on 11th of May.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You asked a number of questions.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes, and I followed it up by a motion for papers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it was fully answered and the correspondence obtained.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman gave me an answer to some of the questions telling me that the general had instructed him to answer in such a way, but after that I asked that all the correspondence on that subject be brought down.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Would you be kind enough to send me a memo. of both, and I will attend to them ?

MONTREAL AND SOUTHERN COUNTIES RAILWAY COMPANY.

REFERRED BACK TO COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. BAKER, from the Committee of Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported with reference to Bill (81) "An Act respecting the Montreal and Southern Counties Railway Company," that they found the preamble was not proved.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—When this bill came up for discussion the majority of the committee had left the room and the preamble was defeated on a tie vote. I move that the report on this bill be not concurred in but that the bill be referred again to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have an impression, I do not speak positively, that this is a motion of which notice should be given; however I do not propose to lay any stress on that. I really do not think that the bill has such merits as should induce the House to reject the report of the committee. It appears that this company was incorporated last year with power to do business over thirteen counties south of the St. Lawrence in the province of Quebec. It appeared that the company had not done any work. The charter was granted last year. The committee were of the opinion that sufficient ground had not been shown for an extension of the sphere of the company. The impression was that, after the company had done some work to show that they were in earnest, it would be time enough to grant them the further powers which they ask. I might mention that amongst the further powers which they asked for was one to operate their railway by means of steam. If they had asked last year, when looking for a charter, to operate their railway by steam, I have no doubt but that the power would have been refused to them, because the bill would have been opposed by the representatives of companies whose railways now traverse that part of the country and I do not think that any harm can come to any one by the bill standing over for another year. I trust that that is the feeling of the House too.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I decidedly think, hon. gentlemen, that this House should accept the report of the commissioners. I understand that it was fully discussed from beginning to end, and that the committee were quite well aware of what they were doing, I do not think we should send the report back to them at this late stage of the session.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Whatever may be the merits of this bill it seems to me that the reasons given by the hon. gentleman from Inkerman (Mr. Owens) are good ones. I happened to be there when the vote was taken and there were only twelve members of the committee present and there was a tie. Under the circumstances, I think it is fair that this bill should be referred again to the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

THIRD READING.

Bill (113) "An Act to incorporate the Subsidiary High Court of the Ancient Order of Foresters in the Dominion of Canada." (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell).

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (16) "An Act to repeal the Electoral Franchise Act, and to further amend the Dominion Elections Act."

(In the Committee.)

On the third clause.

Hon. Mr. POWER—With respect to this clause, I should like to ask the minister what provision is made for elections in the North-west Territories?

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That does not come under this at all.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is a separate Act.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I should like to ask the hon. leader of the House whether he has considered the matter to which I called his attention the other day—if it is proposed to remedy the difficulty which I pointed out with regard to Prince Edward Island. It may be necessary to retain some sections of the Franchise Act in order to provide for the making of a list. I only raise the point now in order that the hon. gentleman may consider it.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 4, subsection (e.)

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I wish to call the attention of the House to this subsection. It reads :

(e.) The expression "polling division" includes, when used in reference to provincial elections, any polling subdivision, polling district or subdistrict or other territorial area for which there is a separate voters' list.

Now, as there are no voters' lists in Prince Edward Island a slight amendment is needed in this clause. I would suggest that the word "polling" in the third line be struck out, and the following added "or at which a poll is taken" at the end of the clause. That would make the clause include polling districts in Prince Edward Island as well as in other provinces.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The expression "polling division" has a particular meaning, it is a district within which votes are taken by a deputy returning officer for any candidate who may be standing for election to the House of Commons. It includes, when used in reference to the provincial elections, "any polling subdivision, polling district or subdistrict or other territorial area for which there is a separate voters' list." By adding the words "or in which a poll may be held" the hon. gentleman's objection is met. I move that these words be added.

The amendment was agreed to and the subsection as amended was adopted.

On clause five, subsection (a.)

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This subsection will require to be made plainer. The peculiarity of the election law of my province suggests the necessity of it to me. The subsection is as follows :

(a.) The qualifications necessary to entitle any person to vote thereat shall be those established by the laws of that province as necessary to entitle such person to vote in the same part of the province at a provincial election.

This clause as it stands might be interpreted to sustain the right of voting in the different local provincial districts lying within the electoral district.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that that is cured by the previous section.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I doubt that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Section 4, subsection (a.)

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes, but that does not apply, for this reason : that you do not in subsection (a) of clause 5 speak of an electoral district at all ; therefore, the interpretation given in subsection (a) of clause 4 does not help us very much in getting at the exact meaning. The difficulty with this clause is intensified when you come to consider the local oath that has to be taken and the provincial subdivisions and I would suggest that a few words be added to this clause in order to remove all doubt.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They are not required.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend says they are not required. But, in order to discuss that, we will have to look at clauses 19, 20 and 21 of this bill and also at the local oath, and I think by the time my hon. friend will go through these he will find that the local oath is the oath that is required to be taken, and that that oath only calls upon the man to swear that he has not voted before in that electoral district, which in the provincial law means the provincial election disrict.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is just the point. The expresion "electoral district" is defined in subsection (a) of clause 4, and the local oath to be taken, as my hon. friend will see by turning over the clause 20, is an oath that is modified to suit the circumstances or change required by this bill. In clause 20 we find these words :

Take such oath of qualification as by the law of the province he may in a like case at a provincial election be required to take, such changes being made in the form of oath as are necessary to make it applicable to the election then being held.

My hon. friend will see that it is made perfectly clear and the difficulty cannot arise.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am sorry I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman. I think it is not by any means clear. Subsection (a) of clause 4 only determines what is the meaning of the word "electoral" in this Act. It does not determine what is the meaning of that expression in the provincial law at all.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But the clause which I read says that the oath taken from the local law, and which the party takes in connection with this law, is to be modified so as to suit the requirements of this bill. The requirement of this bill, under the election law, is that the party shall only vote once in any one electoral district and that "electoral district" here is defined to be the district that returns a member to the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The election law does say a man shall only vote once in the electoral district. There is no question about that, but the clause we are now considering establishes the qualifications to be possessed by the person voting in the same part of the province. Taken in connection with the election law I have no doubt the intention of the clause was that a man should only vote once. But when we look at clause 4, subsection (a), which we have just passed over, we find that that only defines the meaning of the words "electoral district" in this bill and does not define it in the provincial law at all, and it then depends on the returning officer, acting as a legislator and putting in words and changing this oath, which he might not be able to do. In order to give an interpretation to the law he would have to refer to this bill and to the Dominion Election Act, and I confess it would be quite enough to puzzle the ordinary deputy presiding to make them applicable. He is called upon to make the provincial oath applicable. In order to guide him and show him exactly what he has to do, why not add two or three words here that will make it so clear that it will be plain to the voter and plain to the presiding officer that such a thing as voting more than once in an electoral district is not permitted by this law. I would propose that the following words be added at the end of the section :

But no person shall be qualified to vote more than once in the same electoral district.

That will explain this passage clearly. It will enable the returning officer to understand the law, but we are going to make him legislate by this bill without giving him any clear ground to work on ; that is what he has to do. He is called upon to change the wording of an oath when he puts it to a voter, or, if he takes it into his head, that this bill allows a man to vote four times, he would not change the oath at all, and he would allow the man to take it with the understanding that he might vote more than once. The proposed change, I suggest, will make it entirely clear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It would not do any harm ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It just does this harm, that we are enacting the same thing twice over. You are making a provision with respect to the recording of the vote in the election law, and you are making another declaration with regard to the same thing in the Franchise Act which is not necessarily and logically a part of the Franchise Act. My hon. friend will see that. In this bill it is clearly defined what the expression "electoral district" means. It means a district entitled to return a member to serve in the House of Commons. It may embrace two or three provincial districts. But the matter of the provincial district does not and cannot arise in respect to this. Then, the qualifications necessary to entitle any person to vote thereat—that is, at the election of a member for the House of Commons—shall be those established by the laws of the province as necessary to entitle a person to vote in the same part of the province at a provincial election. The qualification to vote has nothing to do with the question whether a man may vote two or three times, or ten times, or not. It has only to do with the question as to his being entitled to vote. Then whether he is entitled to vote more than once is determined by the election law of the Dominion, and not by the election law of the province. My hon. friend will see by the clause which I read that the oath which he takes is the provincial oath with such changes as will make it applicable to the election that is being held When the election law is put into the hands of the returning officer it is not with the oath in the form in which it stands in the provincial law which my hon. friend has before him, and from which he read an evening or two ago, but it is put in in the form required by that clause. It is printed to suit the circumstances of this law as required for a Dominion election. And so the difficulty which my hon. friend refers to, about a deputy returning officer being obliged to modify the law to suit the circumstances, never arises. That is done for him in the copies of the Act which are printed. The schedules are provided and put into the hands of every deputy returning officer when the election comes to be held.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would that be done when the election law is sent to him?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes; I think so. It always has been.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would like to call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that the deputy returning officers are not all so enlightened as my hon. friend intimates. I have gone to a polling booth to vote, where the law makes provision to administer an oath that yours is the name appearing upon the roll, that you are a resident, and then in parenthesis (as the case may be). That, notwithstanding the fact of these words being inserted in parenthesis, they wanted me to swear, and proceeded to insist on my swearing, that I was resident of the township of Thurlow, when I was living in Ottawa at the time. I had to take the trouble to point out to them that the oath should be changed, so as to suit the peculiar circumstances, and not to compel me to swear that I was a resident in the electoral district or the county, because I was neither that one nor the other at the time, and all I had to do was to swear that though I was a resident of Ottawa I had the qualifications entitling me to vote.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The party here takes both the oath under the statute and the oath modified and made applicable.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I cannot agree as to the propriety of leaving this clause without some clearer meaning being attached to it than it is capable of receiving as it now stands. My hon. friend attaches a great deal of importance to the fact that there is a provision in the Dominion Elections Act, which prevents a man voting more than once in any election. That is quite true, but I think the hon. gentleman knows as well as I do that the latest act upon a subject will, in ordinary circumstances, be held to over-ride an earlier statute. This is the latest act that we are passing upon the subject and although it is true—I think my hon. friend is right—that it only sets forth what the qualification is and does not settle the question of the right to vote, yet in an election booth, where legal advisers are not obtainable, it is very doubtful whether a stronger contention than that would not be set up, whether it would not, in the minds of non-professional men, be capable of a stronger meaning than that. I do not think we would be doing right if we made this section refer to the right to vote or not, but to make it clear as to what the qualification is, and my amendment would not go to assert or deny any right to vote, leave that as it stands in the Dominion Elections Act, but to add these words: "But no person shall be qualified to vote more than once in the same electoral district." That is perfectly consistent with what goes before it and removes all doubt.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I would very much prefer, if my hon. friend insists on the views which he expresses, I think it is quite unnecessary, to take the form of vote there and incorporate it in the bill at clause 20 or 22 so as to make it perfectly clear that he can vote but once. It would be very much better.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—You would suggest to meet it in that way!

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am quite satisfied.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Here we have two clever men putting different interpretations upon this. That is the great trouble with half the Acts we make, they are so wordy and so voluminous that ordinary mortals, and not even the lawyers themselves, can understand them. We ought to make the Acts which we pass intelligent to all ordinary mortals. As I said, we have right here two interpretations—

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We do not interpret it differently.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I may add I have consulted what are considered to be good lawyers on this very point, and they take different views, just as my hon. friend has said; and what they say is, that it is subject to a contrary and diverse decision even if it went to the courts. I give no opinion about it myself, and as my hon.

friend has made a suggestion I think it would be satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The suggestion that the leader of House made will probably be the better way of meeting it.

Subsection (a) of clause 5 was agreed to.

On subsection (c).

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I would ask the hon. gentleman to allow that clause to stand. If the amendment of which I have given notice carries, that subsection will require a consequential amendment.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We might adopt it with the understanding that if the hon. gentleman's motion carries we can come back to it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I should like to ask the hon. Minister of Justice upon what grounds the sixtieth day next preceding the day fixed for the nomination of candidates was selected. That leaves a very long time from the time the voters' lists are prepared till the elections upon these lists are held. Now, in the province of Nova Scotia the voters' lists are made up and completed in the month of April, and the provincial elections have been held within a few days after the lists are made up, and if this rule is to prevail an election could not be held till the latter part of the month of June.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We might hold the election on the previous years' lists.

Hon. Mr. POWER—But the idea of using these lists is that the vote may be taken on lists that are as nearly up to date as possible.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We might let this clause stand.

Subclause (c) was allowed to stand.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—May I ask is there anything in this bill saying who the returning officer shall be, or is it exclusively with the Governor in Council?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We have not made any alteration in that regard.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then it is left in the hands of the Governor in Council as to who the returning officer shall be?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

On subsection (f).

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think that this is a section that will require to be very well considered in relation, at all events, to the election law of the province of Prince Edward Island. In that province there is a peculiar system of voting by absentees. A man having a qualification in the various electoral districts can record his vote at his home and at the polling place in his own district, and he can then, by schedule, specially record his votes for other districts in the province in which he may have the proper qualification. He may make an affidavit in that schedule of the qualification he possesses. It is open voting there and he can indicate on that schedule the candidate for whom he wants to vote and it then becomes the duty of the presiding officer to seal these schedules in an envelope and have them forwarded through the returning officer in the other electoral district in which the vote is intended to be given.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that the observations he is now making refer to an election Act and not to the voters' lists.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend must see that the observations I am making of the provisions contained in the provincial law for the purpose of absentee voting is attempted to be incorporated into this law. Let us just look at the wording of it:

> f. The provisions of the law of the province as to the places where non-resident electors shall vote shall apply mutatis mutandis to such Dominion election, and the returning officer at such election shall have the powers and be charged with the duties of the sheriff or returning officer under those provisions.

It provides that the places where absentee electors shall vote, by the provincial law, shall govern in elections held under this law. That would mean that these non-residents having votes on property qualifications might vote by special vote. That system, I admit at once, is entirely inconsistent with the ballot vote. I cannot see how a ballot vote can be incorporated with that provision, and I think that in this law there should be an exception made of this peculiar mode of voting that prevails in Prince Edward Island. If that exception is so made there will be no attempt at carrying out the perfectly incompatible manner of voting in connection with this bill, and if that exception is made by law, I admit there will be no greater difficulty there with absentees than there is in any other part of Canada, and those who have votes in electoral districts in which they do not reside will not be put to any greater disadvantage than they were under the old Franchise Act in Prince Edward Island or in the other provinces of Canada. I would suggest that some words be added to the end of this section which will prevent any Dominion election officers from attempting to carry out that special voting system in Prince Edward Island which otherwise they might feel themselves bound to try and carry out, and it will be sure to result in blunders and in failure to properly exercise the will of the voters in consequence of our having a ballot for the Dominion and this system of special voting fitting only in upon an open vote. I would suggest this might be amended by adding at the end some words like these : That this section shall not be construed so as to entitle any person to record special votes as provided for in the provincial laws of Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that the matter of which he speaks is provided for in the section. The provision of the law of the province as to the places where non-resident electors shall vote—and it is of non-resident electors he is speaking—shall apply to such Dominion election mutatis mutandis, that is with those changes which are necessary to conform the Dominion law. My hon. friend speaks of the non-residents being suited to their circumstances of open voting. The non-resident vote under this will be required to suit the provisions of a secret ballot. I think this section meets what the hon. gentleman proposes to meet and we would have to reconstruct the words altogether.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not think there would be very much change. Very few words, perhaps less than I suggested, would make it clear. I have the provincial law and the portion which relates to this subject extends from section 137 to section 146. It begins by declaring :

137. Every person qualified to vote upon any property qualification for members to serve in the assembly, shall be entitled to vote for the election of a member or members for the electoral district wherein such property qualification may be situated, by polling all votes at the electoral division in any other electoral district wherein such person may be entitled to vote for the election of a member, although such electoral division be not situated in the electoral district or county in which such first mentioned qualification lies.

There are seven or eight sections following this. The clause that we are now considering contemplates working out the system described in these sections in some way or other, because it imposes upon the returning officer, or the sheriff, the very officer that in these local laws has to transmit these schedules, the duties that are imposed under the provincial election law. I am quite satisfied that if you leave the whole matter just as it stands now you may have some of these officers striving to comply with those sections of the provincial law, believing that the bill which we are now passing authorizes them to do that. I really think that the phrase mutatis mutandis would not be sufficient to override the sections of the Act. The phrase does not mean that you should override eight or ten sections of a law like this, and that you should ignore is this section itself where it says that the sheriff and the returning officer are entrusted with the powers and duties which are only the powers and duties described in these provincial sections. If my hon. friend will look at my suggestion he will find that it is consistent with the object of this clause. I might take another ground and say that you should not in this bill take away the privileges which voters in Prince Edward Island possess, and that you should make greater changes in the law in order to give them the privileges which they have enjoyed in the past, but I do not want to be unreasonable ; I do not ask the hon. gentleman to do that, and therefore I think he will see that the suggestion I make will remove all difficulty and the returning officers will know that these clauses are not applicable. My suggestion is that at the end of subsection (f) these words should be added, "but this section shall not be construed to entitle any person to record special votes as provided for in the provincial laws of Prince Edward Island."

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that I could not accept that. He proposes by that to disqualify parties from voting who are entitled to vote now.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is another provision in the provincial law, section 84. The one I have read has reference only to this mode of transmitting and accepting these schedules, but there is another section of the Act which will remain and which perfectly meets the case. It is as follows:

Every elector qualified to vote in an electoral district in which he does not reside shall vote in the electoral division, or in case the electoral division is subdivided, in the polling district thereof in which the property on which he claims to vote for such electoral district is situate and not elsewhere, unless he votes by special vote as hereinafter provided.

There is a perfect provision for every absentee voter going where his property is and recording his vote in person. All that this amendment would do is to take away the possibility of voting by schedule, which, as I have explained, is incompatible with ballot voting. If the words which I suggest are not the best to carry out the idea and my hon. friend thinks he can provide something better, the clause might be allowed to stand.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think the clause as it stands meets the case, because we have incorporated into this bill the local law of every province by express words, and this particular section incorporates the law of Prince Edward Island into this bill with the changes necessary to adapt it to the ballot system. However, I have no objection to letting this subsection stand over.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—How is it proposed to transmit those votes by schedule under a ballot system, as would necessarily be the consequence of this provision? As I understand the law of Prince Edward Island at present is this, open voting exists there. A voter can upon entering a polling booth record his vote by schedule, although he may not appear in person in the different constituencies in which he is entitled to vote. The returning officer transmits that schedule to the deputy returning officers of these various constituencies in which the voter has a right to vote. How, under the ballot system which this bill introduces into Prince Edward Island, can that be done?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is impossible, of course.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that the expression used renders it unnecessary to follow the exact form. You must modify your system so as to bring it under the provisions of this bill. What is there to prevent a party, under this provision, inclosing his ballot directly to the returning officer to be counted with the other ballots?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then you are going to invest the returning officer, practically, with the power to carry out a system of his own. I do not know that that system is objectionable, if you provide machinery for its being done, but there is nothing in the bill directing how it shall be done.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If my hon. friend can suggest a system by which a ballot may be given to the voter and he drops that ballot into a box which will be duly conveyed to the electoral district in which he has property and does reside, it will certainly completely carry out the system now in use in Prince Edward Island, but I see that there are great difficulties in the way of that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that the primary object is absolute secrecy, except in the case of persons who are not able to read and write themselves, when the returning officer knows how the ballot is marked and is himself sworn to secrecy in that case. This provision of the law with regard to non-resident voters is a provision that must be carried out in accordance with the general principle and spirit of the Act. That is the declaration in this particular clause.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—In this city we have a great many non-residents; where are they to vote under this law?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Wherever the law of Ontario says.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This clause only affects Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—The names of non-resident property owners in this city will not be on the provincial roll.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that there will be no non-resident voters in Ontario, because the Ontario law disqualifies non-residents. In the province of Quebec they will have non-resident voters, but they will have to vote at the polls where their property is. So with regard to Prince Edward Island, there is a provision of the law in that province that a man need not go to the polling place where his property is situated in order that he may record his vote.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Nor in the constituency. He can vote from an outside constituency.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I want to know this distinctly: Will non-resident property owners in this city be entitled to vote?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—That is understood?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the provincial law.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is one of the incongruities of the present bill.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Then you are going to disfranchise all the non-residents who are voters now?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I will not press my amendment at present. I ask that the clause be allowed to stand in order that the Minister of Justice may consider my suggestion and be prepared, if he approves of it, either to adopt it or to propose something better.

Subsection (f) was allowed to stand.

On subsection 2 of clause 6.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Who is to have the responsibility of adding these names to the list?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The man who takes the oath.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The man who has the vote.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Supposing they disqualify a large number of them, 100 voters, who may think they have votes. They may come forward and take false votes. There is a great chance of perjury.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Oh, no.

The clause was adopted.

On subsection 4.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is this a departure from the Provincial Franchise Act, or is it a provision merely to meet exceptional cases?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think nearly every province disqualifies this class of persons. Perhaps all of them do. We have always disqualified them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then there is no necessity for the clause.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The law may not be uniform in all the provinces.

Hon. Mr. MASSON—You should take the law of the provinces for that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am glad the Minister of Justice has one idea that leads him to uniformity, at least. If this be the law of the different provinces, it is not necessary to encumber his bill with it. If it is desired to adhere rigidly to the provincial laws, then it should not be inserted in the bill. But if it be necessary, notwithstanding the omission in the provincial laws, then it should be inserted and I congratulate my hon. friend on his departure from the fundamental principle laid down in the bill. I think it is a good clause.

The subsection was adopted.

On subsection 1, of clause 7.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Supposing there were 301 voters in a division, then is there to be an equal division of that number? It seems to me that, if the number over 300 be small, the returning officer should not be asked to make a division, or if he has to make a division, then it should be an equal division.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—In the case my hon. friend suggests, it would be 150½ in each and that would be very difficult. This provision is rendered necessary by the law of New Brunswick. In New Brunswick, there may be a good many more votes in one polling division than can be recorded in one polling place. So that there must be more than one polling place. They do not have divisions there as in Ontario. This is framed to meet the special case of New Brunswick.

The subsection was adopted.

On subsection 2.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I would ask my hon. friend the leader of the House to explain how subsection 2 is to be made applicable to a province where there are no lists.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Prince Edward Island again. My hon. friend knows what they do, I suppose, in the province of Prince Edward Islaed? They do not permit, under the provincial law, although they have no lists, all the voters to come to one polling place. You have polling divisions in every electoral division, and the men vote in their own division, and I suppose that such a division will be made in Prince Edward Island. They can estimate what the number of persons is in each division and make their divisions accordingly. This clause does not apply to Prince Edward Island, but applies especially to the province of New Brunswick. I am not aware whether any other province is exactly in the same state, where there may be several hundred in a polling division and where there is more than one polling place in the division. They may be within a few yards of each other and there is a division of the voters' list according to the alphabetical letters, of parties whose names are on that list, but this would not apply to Prince Edward Island, where there is no list at all.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This clause applies to the whole Dominion, or wherever there is a necessity to put it in operation. It applies to every place where there are more than 300 voters according to the voters' list. In the city of Charlottetown there are 3,000 qualified voters under the provincial franchise, and there are just two divisions in the city under the law, and power is given to the returning officer to divide the city into as many polling districts as is necessary in order to have the vote polled, and that no polling district shall contain more than 200 voters It has grown out of the old times, when the vote was very small and there were only two divisions. When it became too great for them to vote in two places, a provision was inserted in the law that the returning officer would have the right to divide the city into as many polling districts as were necessary in order to secure the recording of the votes and providing that no district should contain more than 200 voters. The city is divided geographically and there are five wards in the city. Wards 1, 2 and 3 have each two polling districts. Ward four is a large ward and we have three polling divisions and ward five has four polling divisions and the royalty has two more. There being no voters' list as a basis for making this division, the local law provides for it entirely, simply by giving the returning officer the power to divide the city, but not according to the names on the voters' list, because there is none. You cannot divide them under the alphabetical arrangement provided in this section. Under the law they vote geographically. The wards are divided according to certain streets and other subdivisions and provision is made for the whole of the voters to vote, but under this clause, which should apply to Prince Edward Island as well as the rest, the only basis of division is according to this alphabetical arrangement, and as there is no list you cannot make the alphabetical arrangement and you are setting aside the local provision that is in the law and you are introducing this which is perfectly impracticably.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that this section cannot apply to a province where there is no voters' list. It reads "where a polling division has more than 300 voters according to the voters' list the returning officer may make the division" and so on. Those are the first words. My hon. friend will find the case to which he refers is provided for further on.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I know right well this cannot apply. That is what I have been trying to convince him. It is not applicable.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is not intended to be applicable. It is intended to apply where there is a voters' list.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend says it is not intended that it should be applicable. Will my hon. friend tell me how he is going to divide the two divisions in the city of Charlottetown since this does not apply and is not intended to apply? How is he going to divide Charlottetown into the requisite number, say about 15 or 18 polling districts?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would not the law of Prince Edward Island, where there is no list, be still in force? If so, then the difficulties my hon. friend has pointed out would not exist. It is true this provides for the division under certain contingencies and the contingency is where there is a voters' list. What I want to ask is this: is there any portion of this law, which continues the law of Prince Edward Island, giving to the returning officer the right and the authority to divide the city of Charlottetown into a number of polling districts? I take it for granted that it would impliedly be enforced, whether it is provided or not.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will find that in all the provinces there is a maximum number mentioned, and there are none of them, as far as I know, except New Brunswick, where the number is as high as three hundred. In Ontario it was not necessary to state the number, because in Ontario it was fixed at two hundred or two hundred and fifty. It is the same with the other provinces, except New Brunswick, and as I understand it, they have there sometimes several hundred in a polling division. I think in one division they have had nine hundred. In those cases it is necessary to provide either for a division of the polling district into other divisions, or to multiply the number of polling places, and the second is the method that was adopted and is provided for here, and the voters' list is one list for the polling division. Instead of making two or three or four lists of it, it is left as one list.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You are speaking of New Brunswick exclusively?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Make that applicable to Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not think it is applicable to Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then where does the power rest to make this division on the island?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that clause 5 makes provision in all these cases. There is complete provision made in the clauses we have already been considering, and all we wanted was to meet a special case.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Clause 7 was specially intended for New Brunswick, where there was a polling division of 900.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It does not say so. Subsection (b) of clause 5 reads:

> The following polling divisions shall be those established by or under the laws of that province, except as hereinafter otherwise provided, for the purposes of provincial elections.

This clause 5 declares that the polling divisions shall be established by the provincial legislature and provincial laws.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—So it is.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But this other provision, you say, applies exclusively to New Brunswick, and that gives power to change—

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No. My hon. friend will see the point. We have not altered the boundaries of the section. We have multiplied the divisions within the section.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think the point is covered.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is possible it may meet the case. I have turned up the provincial law, and I have found the district of Charlottetown, common and royalty, divided into two electoral divisions, and then there is another section in the provincial law which gives the returning officer power to make subdivisions.

On clause 8.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I should like to know whether that clause can be applicable to a place where there is no voters' list. I do not see any serious difficulty in the way of doing it. I have cases in my own mind where such a division of existing polling districts will have to be made. The late distribution of seats in the island brought one or two of these cases forward, and the returning officer had to separate them, and I do not see very clearly how this is going to be done in the province of Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not see anything in the world to hinder its being done. The separating line between electoral districts is defined, and if that separating line runs through the middle of the polling division, those on one side of the line know they must vote in one constituency and those on the other side of the line in another constituency, and whether they have a voters' list or not cannot aid them in the least in determining on which side of that geographical boundary they are entitled to vote.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the same thing in our province.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Subsection (b) of section 5 I think will meet that case.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 9.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I have an amendment to this clause in reference to the province which I have the honour to represent. When this Franchise Bill was under discussion in the House of Commons, this matter came up then under a suggestion made by Mr. Clarke, who called attention to the fact that the time limited to one year would be a hardship upon a city like Toronto or Hamilton where there was a moving population, and where it was possible that an election might be held within 10 or 11 months after the revision of the voters' lists in which a large proportion would be disqualified of those who had come there during the year. The Solicitor General, on his attention being called to it, made some remarks. I will read the way in which it was suggested. He said:

> It is possible that an election may take place 11 months after the voters' lists have been made and in that event the difficulty pointed out by my hon. friend would exist. He suggests that we have a revision of the voters' lists in the event of an election, taking place more than six months after the local lists have been made. I think the government ought to adopt that suggestion,

Those remarks were made by the Solicitor General. Acting on that suggestion the Prime Minister moved subsequently.

> That the bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred to a committee of the whole with instructions to amend section 9 by striking out the words one year and inserting instead "six months."

This gave rise to a discussion and the country members pointed out that while it was suitable for Toronto or Hamilton, or other large cities, it would not be suitable for them in country places, and eventually the Prime Minister withdrew his amendment. I say that the same condition of affairs prevails with regard to the province of Manitoba. There we have a moving population. There is a constant influx there of new people, coming from other parts of the Dominion, or from outside, and it might easily happen that an election might take place within ten or eleven months after the revision of the list, and you will recollect that according to our Manitoba laws a revision of the lists only takes place every four years, and under those circumstances a great many people might be disqualified who had come into the province within the last year. I would like to move, and I understand this would not be unacceptable at all to the Solicitor General who has shown an anxiety to meet all views with regard to the framing of this measure, that this clause be amended as follows: Leave out on page 4, line 28, from "the" to "election" in line 33 both inclusive, and substitute the following > if the last preceding voters' lists so prepared have been prepared not more than one year before the date of the writ for any Dominion election in the territory comprised in such provincial electoral district or the parts therein for use in which they were prepared such last preceding voters' lists shall be used for the purpose of such Dominion election except in the province of Manitoba where they shall not be used unless they have been prepared not less than three months before the date of the writ of such Dominion election.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We could not accept that amendment to the bill, it would be sufficiently expensive to prepare the voters' lists once a year; to prepare voters' lists every six months would be regarded as a very serious burden. This clause had special reference to some of the provinces and some of the municipalities in some of the provinces where a voters' list is not prepared until it is prepared in anticipation of an election, and it is provided:

> Where under the laws of a province the voters' lists for any provincial electoral district or division or any of them are prepared not at regular intervals, but at such times as are fixed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council or some other provincial or local authority or only from time to time for the purpose of a general or other election in immediate contemplation, the last preceding voters' lists so prepared shall be used for the purpose of any Dominion election in the territory comprised in such provincial electoral district or division or the parts thereof for use in which they were prepared if such lists have been prepared for more than one year before the date of the writ.

If the lists are not more than twelve months old the lists that exists will be used. If the list is more than twelve months old, a new list would be prepared. Take, for instance under the Ontario law: In the cities the lists are not annually prepared, but a list is specially prepared with a view to the election, and that list, when it is used in a provincial election, is no longer regarded as the list, and a new list may be prepared. Now we adopt that list for our purposes if it is not more than twelve months old. If it is more than twelve months old, then we make provision, under their law and with the same machinery, as near as may be, to prepare a list for Dominion purposes, and that of course we shall be obliged to do as long as that law continues. But my hon. friend will see that to make special provisions for a new list every six months, would be a very serious business indeed. We might have an election in which the parties would be very close after the election. You might have a house existing only for a few months, say six or eight months, and you might have a new election as the result of the near equality of the parties; and my hon. friend would put the Dominion to the expense of a new voters' list for the whole province of Manitoba if that list was more than six months old. I think that would be a very serious charge, in fact it would be making a provision for a charge upon the public revenues of the country by this House. I think that the proposal is to meet a difficulty that is not as serious an evil as the additional burden imposed upon the country would be.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend will see that the proposition made by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Kirchhoffer) does not go as far as he has indicated. There is no proposition in the amendment which is suggested to the House of having a voters' list every six months.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—In contemplation of an election.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Just let me give my understanding of what the hon. gentleman said. This simply changes the period from twelve months to six months, in one province. In the other provinces of the Dominion, if the voters' list is over twelve months old, then there must be a new list prepared for the election which is about to take place. My hon. friend says that owing to the migratory character of the people in his province, or rather the continued addition to the electorate of that province, it ought to be made every six months instead of every twelve, so that it does not necessitate the revision of the list every six months. It is something, I confess, that I had not thought of before, but I can see there is a good deal of force in it. Would my hon. friend let that clause stand, and in the meantime we can consider it more closely and see what effect it would have upon the general law? If my hon. friend takes the constitutional ground that we have no right to make that six months, because it is an indirect additional charge upon the revenue, that is a matter we will have to discuss; that is quite another point.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I mention it because I think it is a valid objection; but, apart from that, it is true the hon. gentleman who suggests the amendment has undertaken to provide for what may be an individual election, but I am pointing out to him that it is possible that within six months you might have a general election, and that being so, it would be necessary, if that rule was adopted, to incur the expense of a new voters' list although you had a list that was not more than six months old.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—May we accept that suggestion of the hon. Minister of Justice as indicative of what is to take place within six months?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is not so obtuse as his question would indicate. I give my hon. friend credit for a great deal more intellectual acumen than that question would indicate. I put a hypothetical case: I pointed out before what was possible, that you might have an election. You might have parties so nearly equal as the result of that election that you would have a House that could not continue in existence for another six or seven months.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The explanation is unnecessary.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Well, I thought it was, from my hon. friend's question.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—That amendment does not ask for a revision of the list every six months, but it only asks that that revision should take place in the event of an election being held more than twelve months after the local list has been made. It does not seem to me that it would be quite fair that the same rule should be applied to our province as is applied to the older provinces, because in our province the movement of population is much greater than in the older provinces. Therefore, I think it is perfectly right that we should ask for a revision of the lists, as indicated by this amendment, because our provincial law provides that every elector resident in the polling division for three months shall have a vote. If you use the list that has been revised twelve months before the election, then you raise the possibility of perhaps having twenty-five per cent of the electors disfranchised.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The disease is not so serious as the remedy.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I do not coincide with the remarks of the hon. gentleman. I think that the principal thing in framing a law such as this is to afford the right to vote to any man entitled to vote. That is the principal thing, the rest are but secondary matters. That plea of expense does not arise at all here, because that matter of expense must only be secondary to the essential principle of law. If you disfranchise about twenty-five or fifty per cent of the bona fide voters, you do not apply the principle of your bill, which is to make the provincial laws applicable to your election. That plea of expense is not admissible.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I should like to ask the hon. gentleman from Manitoba whether, under the existing law, the lists are made up every six months.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—No, and we complain of that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If an election were conducted now in the province of Manitoba, under the existing law, the lists used would be four years old.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—That may be, and it is a great wrong.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We must remember, after all, that this is a bill which affects the members of the House of Commons, and both parties in that province are represented in the House of Commons, and unless some member of the Senate is able to point out some glaring injustice done to the province of Manitoba, I do not think it is advisable to press the amendment.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—The Solicitor General himself has declared that this amendment should be adopted.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As the hon. member from Mille Isles has pointed out, the growth of the city of Montreal is about as rapid as the growth of population in Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. MASSON—If the amendment is good, I suppose the representation of the province of Manitoba will accept it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Has the hon. gentleman in view persons who are going into Manitoba and have been there only six months?

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—No, they must be in the province at least twelve months and residents of the local division three months.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It cannot affect so many, because under the local law they must be in the province twelve months at least. It does not hit them very hard.

The clause was adopted.

On subsection 7 of clause 10.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is not clear to my mind what state of things this subsection is intended to provide for. This clause and all the subsections provide for the transmission of the list to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery after the final revision has been made under the provincial law; it provides for his holding it and supplying copies, and that it shall remain as an original record in the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. We know very well what it means up to that point. But now it is provided in this section:

> If, under the provincial law, any changes in or additions to a list of voters have been made since the final revision.

This must contemplate something which happens between two final revisions in the same province. The subsection goes on to say:

> It shall be the duty of the official having a record of such changes and additions, upon the request of any person presenting for the purpose any such printed copy of the list, and paying or tendering the sum of fifty cents to make corresponding changes in and additions to such printed copy, and to certify under his hand as to the correctness of such changes and additions; and such printed copy, with such changes and additions and so certified, shall be deemed to be, for all purposes, an authentic copy of the list of voters as it exists and is in force at the time of such certification.

I understand this to mean that between the making and the printing of two complete sets of final lists for the province, between the time that one is made and the regular time for making another, it is possible where changes have been going on and which were not printed, that it is possible to obtain from the person having the custody of the list, on presenting him with a fee, a list which shall not be one that has ever reached the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, a list having changes and corrections on the face of it, and that that list shall be "for all purposes" an authentic copy —a list that has never reached the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, that has not been printed as a list and having changes made on the face of it by this custodian, whoever that may mean, of the provincial voters' list, and this is to occur between the time of of making these revisions; that is the only meaning I can make of that subsection, and I cannot understand what it is intended to meet.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I think if subsection 6 were substituted for this the meaning of the law would be made clearer.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—Is there any provision for printing the lists of the present year? We will have the plebiscite election before there is a new revision and there is no provision made here for printing the lists.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, there is not, it is hardly worth while when we are carrying a law through parliament which will come in force, if adopted, to incur an expense of three hundred thousand dollars for printing a list which is out of date.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—They will not be out of date, because the present list is the one that we will use in Nova Scotia in taking the plebiscite.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There will be a new list.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—Not until next year.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, because the last revision of the local lists will be the one that will be printed.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—The last list was made on the first of April just past.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—In some places.

Hon Mr. McKAY—I am speaking of Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Growing out of the question which has been raised is this: in what way can the parliament of Canada impose on a provincial officer, whom they do not appoint and over whom they have no authority, duties of any kind?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is no doubt at all that we have the power to designate a party who is to discharge a certain duty by the office which he holds without mentioning his name. That power has been recognized by a decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. We constituted judges of certain courts in the provinces to be judges of the Election Court. We did not ask them if they would accept office or not; we imposed the duty on them. They are officers by virtue of our appointment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But the judges of the various courts are federal officers.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is mistaken. They are federal appointees but they are officers of the province. The court is created by the province and they are officers of that particular court.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This is an entirely different case.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is quite clear that the framers of this bill did not take the same view of this question that my hon. friend does, because in the ninth clause they make it a penal offence to refuse to discharge the duties, and that is the only way you could compel the local officers to perform any act for the Dominion government.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is about the only way you can compel anybody to discharge a duty, by imposing a fine or imprisonment. We cannot dismiss a man from a local office, but we have this power—we can designate him as an officer to discharge certain federal duties. Our powers as they are in the province, are supreme and sovereign to the extent of our power under the constitution.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not think you could compel local officials to perform certain duties. I would ask my hon. friend whence he derives his authority. You expect to direct officials, whom you have not appointed and who may not be in sympathy with the carrying out of the law, to discharge certain duties. Suppose at an election some of those officials were to say "We will not act,"—there would be a great deal of confusion.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We can make our law effective and see that they do act. My hon. friend would not say that a sheriff is not liable to perform Dominion duties if he is designated for the purpose. No man can refuse to discharge the duties that the law imposes upon him, if the law is within the sphere of the authority that the parliament or legislature which enacted it possesses. Now, we do possess the power to create a voters' list: we do possess the power to state that a provincial list shall be a list for this Dominion, we do possess the power to say to a municipal officer "We require you to discharge certain duties as a Dominion officer." We can designate him by his office. That was clearly held by Lord Selborne in a judgment in appeal from one of the courts of Quebec where, if I remember rightly. Mr. Justice Meredith held that the Dominion election court was ultra vires, that we could not create an election court and designate the judges by the Act which created the court. But the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council held that we could. If my hon. friend was right in his contention, any election court created for the trial of controverted election by authority of the parliament of Canada——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is a Dominion court.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, a Dominion court, how? A Dominion court to which you have appointed persons, not after consulting them and asking whether they are willing to accept office in the court, but without asking them you say: "If you are a member of a certain provincial court, you shall discharge the duties of an election court," and you designate them to the office of judge of that court and impose those duties on them and they are bound to discharge them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Certain powers are given you by the British North America Act, and under those powers you make them discharge these duties.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is the whole case.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As I understand, the officials of the province appointed under provincial laws are deemed to be officers for the purpose of carrying out the election law of the province. No functions are imposed on them after the provincial election is over and as officials they cease to exist. How are you, so to speak, to call into being again those officials without designating them, for the purpose of carrying out this law? Supposing they go away, or die? I have not examined this bill as critically as I should but my attention has not been directed as yet to any machinery by which you can ascertain who those officers are whether they have really an existence.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Subsection 9 provides:

> Every officer or person who, under the provincial law, is the custodian of any list of voters, or has the official record of any change in or additions to any such list since the last final revision thereof, and who refuses or omits to perform any duty imposed upon him by this section, is guilty of an indictable offence, and for each such refusal or omission shall incur a penalty of not more than one thousand dollars and not less than one hundred dollars.

In the province of Quebec those lists are in the hands of the secretary of the municipality. If that official were to refuse to act for federal government, under this bill you impose upon him a penalty of one thousand dollars. Suppose he resigns—he has the right to resign—where will you be? I think it is necessary that there should be an alternative. Those officers should be asked if they would accept, and if they refuse, the federal government might name others.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—You insist that they shall act, but if they resign what can you do about it? You insist that you have the right to impose the duty. If they resign what will you do? If the secretary or registrar should resign what will the government do?

Hon. Mr. POWER—If they require to have a registrar for local purposes, and the registrar resigns, there is a successor in office.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—You cannot get a secretary until the council meets, and perhaps the council will not meet.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not see any difficulty in the point raised by the hon. gentleman from Calgary. This parliament, acting within its jurisdiction, has a right to prescribe duties to any man in Canada, no matter who or what he is. Then, with respect to the point raised by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield (Mr. Ferguson) on clause 7, I do not profess to understand exactly what the subclause means, but I presume that it means, that if, as a result of appeal to the county court judges, or other appelate authorities, names are stricken off the list made up by the revisors, or added to, that provincial officer, who has the custody of the list, shall give to any person who asks for it and tenders the fee a statement of the names that have been added to or stricken off the list. I do not know, but I presume that is what it means.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Then would it not seem to be the right course that the list amended in that way should go to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, instead of being intercepted, as is proposed in this section, and the certificate obtained by the local custodian. That is the provision. Perhaps my hon. friend from Halifax is right in stating that it refers to changes, that may be made in the courts, under some provincial law where there are appeals, and that would seem to be all right, but it is strange that these changes should not be transmitted to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. Instead of that, these changes may be intercepted and obtained from some custodian of the law, and a list certified by this custodian may be used for running an election, even though they never reach the Queen's Printer or the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I intended to point out some objections along the line indicated by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, but I should like to have more information on the point I have raised. Certain duties are imposed on the custodians of the lists. What I want to know is this ; assuming an election to have taken place in a province a year before you proceed to prepare your list for a Dominion election, and those officials, who acted under that provincial law, having moved away, or died, not being obtainable, in what way does the government intend to appoint other officers to take their place, or in what way will the government be acquainted with the fact that those people are in a position to perform the duties contemplated.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend endeavours to conjure up difficulties. His latter question is wholly different from the former. These offices are not left vacant, and in point of law the party who holds an office is responsible for the discharge of those duties, if he is living, until his successor is appointed. Then, again, my hon. friend seems to think that unless a party consents to the discharge of a certain duty, if he is a provincial officer, without his consent no duty can be imposed upon him. I do not admit that, and there is no such principle recognized in our law. Our power to the extent of our authority over the inhabitants of the whole of Canada, is as complete, as sovereign, as absolute, as if there were no local governments or local legislatures existing. They are not in the smallest degree diminished by the existence of local legislatures, The local legislature, within their authority, could make a law imposing upon any party whatever duty they might see proper. That is due to the fact that, under the English constitutional system, every legislative body is sovereign. The legislatures in the provinces are as sovereign as the imperial parliament. So are we to the extent of our authority. It does not matter whether a man is a local officer or not, if the parliament of this country sees proper to impose a duty upon him, whether it is reasonable or unreasonable, wise or otherwise, he is legally obliged to perform that duty or to be subject to the penalties that the law may impose. If certain officers, under this bill, officers of the local legislature, or municipal authorities, are called upon to do certain duties, they are not in any way protected by the existence of a local legislature or by the fact that they are local officers. Again I refer to that decision with regard to the validity of the election courts given by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The very point in that case was this : That these men being local judges, if this is not a new act you have no power to impose additional duties on an existing court. If it is a new court you had no power to make those parties judges of that court without their consent. Upon both those points the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council negatived these contentions. They said that this was a provincial court; the parliament of Canada, being sovereign and having power to impose the judicial duties upon whomsoever it might see proper, if the Crown acted alone under the statute authority, the Crown would of course issue letters patent to the parties. But parliament—and the Crown is a party to every Act of parliament—may designate the parties who are to be judges of a particular court, or the judges of an existing court who were to discharge duties as judges of such court, and may designate them by an Act of parliament, and they say these judges of the Court of Appeal in Ontario and of the High Court of Justice shall be judges for the purpose of trying controverted elections arising under the Controverted Elections Act of the Parliament of Canada. They did not say if these judges consented, or if the local legislature consented to the discharge of these duties. They admitted our right absolutely to impose those duties upon them. They are federal appointees, but they are provincial officers by virtue of sitting as judges of a provincial court created by a provincial legislature. They are as much provincial officers as if they were appointed by the Lieutenant Governor or by the executive of a province, but being provincial officers, they are not protected from the imposition of duties upon them by the parliament of Canada. If parliament sees fit to impose these duties it can do so, and if it can impose additional judicial duties upon a judge of the High Court of Justice, it can certainly do the same thing with a reeve of a municipal council, who is not a higher officer and not under any greater protection. There is no citizen of this country beyond the reach of the law and the responsibilities which the law chooses to impose upon him, and he is not protected, released or exempted from the control of this parliament by the fact that he has certain duties imposed upon him by the legislature or the executive of the province. That point is perfectly clear. It has been well settled in the decision to which I refer, and there can be no question with regard to our authority to impose those duties on the parties.

Hon. Mr. MASSON—If the hon. gentleman's argument is correct, they could make returning officers out of members of the Senate. That is plainly the hon. gentleman's argument. You have no more control over these officers than you have over me, or any body else, because they are not appointed by the governmeut. If they are appointed by the local government they are an officer of that government. When a man ceases to be a secretary, he is independent of the government and exactly in the same position as I am or the hon. gentleman opposite. If you have a right to enforce him to discharge any duty, you have the same right to force me. The argument is very fine, but I think it is far fetched. The hon. gentleman has gone too far. He says that the government can appoint anybody but I think the argument is wrong.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—All that the hon. minister has said is very interesting, but I am not going to discuss that point, although I think he carries it to a much further point than he is justified in doing. My hon. friend's argument extends to this condition of facts, that where a person is designated to perform a certain duty the government can impose additional duties on him, but he must be a designated person. I say under this Act there is no such person designated, because immediately the provincial officer performs duties imposed upon him, he then ceases to be clothed with any functions whatsoever, and you propose again to call him into being, entirely irrespective of the fact as to whether he is in the country or is vested with any power whatsoever; because I say immediately an officer is appointed for a particular purpose, and immediately that purpose is fulfilled, he ceases to be clothed with any function whatsoever.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—What particular officer does the hon. gentleman refer to?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I refer to any of the officers clothed with the duties under this bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that he is all wrong. In the first place, the party who is appointed assessor in a municipality is assessor for twelve months, until his successor is appointed, and the same way the reeves and councillors continue to discharge their duties until their successors are appointed. There is no interregnum.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is no room for doubt. Our election law provides that "none of the persons hereinafter mentioned shall be appointed returning officers," and it gives a list of persons, the last class being "or members of the Senate." Supposing we had said that they shall, does any man say we could not have said it? What is the very object of saying you shall not? It is for the purpose of disqualifying them from the duties, and there can be no doubt in regard to the matter. How did we constitute the election court? Was it by saying that John Smith or James Jones shall be judges of that election court? Not at all. We have said that the particular judges of certain courts shall be the judges and others may be appointed in their places, and those persons who have been appointed in their places have duties devolving upon them. The instant when the one ceases to exist and the others comes in the duties devolve upon him. There is no doubt about that. Here is a man that is the sheriff of a county, and you say that he shall perform certain duties. You are designating him by his office and he has those duties to discharge. He is not exempted from the duties of sheriff by anything we say, but he is not, because he is sheriff, protected against having any duties imposed upon him by the government and parliament of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend takes this position: that this government could say that the city council of Ottawa shall have imposed upon them the duty of preparing a voters' list for the entire Dominion of Canada, and in the event of their not doing so they shall be subject to certain penalties.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Let me say to my hon. friend that if we were to pass an Act to-morrow declaring that my hon. friend is guilty of treason because his hair is not coloured red, I suppose no judge would enforce a law of that kind, because it would be a very unreasonable enactment, and as we are rational beings we cannot imagine such a provision being adopted. But my hon. friend puts the case with regard to the council of Ottawa. Nobody supposes that a body of rational men would adopt such a provision as that, but if it were adopted and put upon the statute-book, does my hon. friend say that because the statute was most unreasonable and arbitrary the judges would be entitled to disregard it altogether? Is that my hon. friend's contention?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think they would.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Can you compel officers of a municipal institution to obey this law?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—And supposing the corporation tells these men that they shall not do it, what effect would that have?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—None whatever?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I am afraid you are going to make it a political institution altogether, and if it comes to be regarded as such, you will find it very hard to carry out this law unless you have the power of compelling them to do this work. Supposing you appoint an officer to do a certain work, and his superior officer tells him not to do it, have you any redress at all? It is a simple question.

Hon. Mr. WOOD, from the committee, reported that they had made same progress with the bill, and asked leave to sit again to-morrow, and that this be the first order of the day.

It being six o'clock the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

YUKON ROUTES COMMITTEE.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I beg to submit for the consideration of this honourable House the report of the Special Committee of the Senate appointed to inquire into the feasibility and probable cost of opening up direct communication between the railway system of Canada and the navigable waters of the Yukon, and also as to the advantages which would flow therefrom to the trade of Canada. It is not necessary for me to read the report, as it is on the minutes of the Senate of the 18th May, and hon. gentleman have that report before them. I may say that the formation of this committee was thought desirable in consequence of the great interest that was manifested in the question of the development of our Yukon territory and the throwing out of what is known as the Yukon railway contract by the Senate. That information was desirable on the part of this House not only to justify and to inquire into the fact of the justification for the action of the Senate in that regard but to assist the Government by submitting such information as the committee could secure in regard to the approaches to the Yukon country. Your committee met on several occasions and examined the gentlemen mentioned in this report. Senator Reid, before he left, gave his evidence in regard to the route from Ashcroft. Bishop Grouard, who had been in that country since 1862, happened to be passing through this part and we were very fortunate in getting his evidence. Mr. Oliver, of Edmonton, the member for Alberta in the House of Commons, who is well known, also appeared before the committee, as also did Mr. Bostock, M.P., of Kamloops, who lives on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway east of Ashcroft. Then we had Mr. Marcus Smith, civil engineer, who used to be in the employ of the government and was engaged in the surveys in the early days of the Canadian Pacific Railway, when it was initiated in 1872 down to the time that the present company took it over in 1880. Dr. Dawson, Chief of the Geological Service, also appeared before the committee and spoke from his personal experience and from his official knowledge in regard to that country. Mr. Henry McLeod, civil engineer, who is very well known indeed, and who has had great experience, and was also engaged in the surveys of the Canadian Pacific Railway from 1872 to 1880 and has made some very valuable reports, was able to give us some good information. Mr. St. Cyr, of the Surveyor's Branch of the public service, who was employed by the government in surveying the route between Teslin Lake and the Stikine River, last year, and upon whose report the government based their ideas in regard to the development of that route, also appeared; Mr. Jennings also gave evidence. He was employed in the same service as Mr. St. Cyr. Mr. Jennings is a man of very great experience indeed, he having been engaged in the surveys between 1872 and 1880 when the Dominion government were projecting lines through the mountains for the development of an all-Canadian route for the construction of a Canadian railroad. He was also employed in the construction with Mr. Onderdonk when the government was constructing their two hundred miles of railway in the Rocky Mountains, and has been from that day engaged in railway construction down to the present time with the Canadian Pacific Railway in the mountains and in Ontario. Then we had Mr. McConnell of the Geological Survey to give us information with regard to the mining resources of the country. Then, Mr. Pambrun is a gentleman who was born at Lesser Slave Lake and has spent his life in that country, a descendant of the native settlers brought out by the Earl of Selkirk in 1811. His father was called home to England to give evidence as witness before the House of Commons committee to inquire into the battle of Seven Oaks in Manitoba and the massacre of the Governor of the Hudson Bay Company and other officers. Mr. Oliver, of Edmonton, advised the committee that Mr. Pambrun was able to give us valuable information, and we wrote to him and secured his attendance before the committee, bringing him down from Battleford for that purpose. There was a certain amount of expense in connection with that which I think the House will realize the committee was justified in taking in order to obtain evidence of that character. Then, in addition, we examined Dr. Wills, late of the mounted police force, who has been for some time at Dawson, having gone up with the mounted police force three years ago and been in the country from that day to this. And we also summoned before us the Quarter-Master General, who had charge of the transportation of the troops up to Fort Selkirk, and who had to gather all the information he possibly could as to the best means of sending them up there. The evidence of all these gentlemen is now before the House in the shape of a printed report, put together in a disjointed state at the present moment, but as soon as the report is adopted it will be issued in pamphlet form as a blue-book and distributed to the extent that this House will say. The cost of the committee has not been large. It is under $400, the main part of the expense being the bringing of Mr. Pambrun down here from Battleford, and other official expenses. The information contained in the evidence will be of a very valuable character indeed, considering the great importance that is attached to that part of the country at the present moment, not only in Canada, but in the old world generally. We prepared a condensed report for practical information to those who had not the opportunity of going through all the evidence, or did not care to take that trouble. It is before us in this short report which speaks for itself. One of the main objects of the committee was to show that the route from Edmonton was the most advantageous route for the commercial interests of the country, and I think that the evidence that has been published by the committee fully justified that opinion, as hon. gentlemen expressed it in dealing with this question when the Yukon railway contract was before the Senate. The evidence will show you that, according to Mr. Dawson, the distance from Edmonton to Fort Selkirk is 1,290 miles. By pack trail it would be about that distance. The evidence goes to show that the Peace River country is a good agricultural country, and that with a little cultivation the frost which is incidental to the first cultivation of the whole of that western country disappears. Any cattle or produce raised on the Peace River would be, of course, three or four hundred miles nearer than the 1,290 miles laid down, and then when you come towards Fort Selkirk, on the route by way of the Liard River, you have a practicable route either for a railroad, a wagon road or a pack trail, and from the height of land on the Pelly you can float down to Fort Selkirk with 175 miles of navigation. So that when you come to take off the navigation of the Peace River and consider the development of agricultural interests in the Peace River country, you narrow the distance down considerably below the mileage of 1,290 miles; and as, of course, the mining population has to depend entirely on the agricultural districts for their support, one of the main objects to be sought is to bring these agricultural districts into as close proximity with the demand of the mining population there as possible as a matter of economy in every way, because economy by competition by facilities of transportation and everything of that kind, is the surest way to develop the hidden resources of Canada which, without that transportation, are practically a dead letter as far as Canada is concerned. So that it is necessary for us to apply the principles of economy in the opening out and development of that route. The evidence goes still further to show that the Yellowhead Pass, which is straight west from Edmonton, is another route to Fort Selkirk. It is about 100 miles longer than the route from Edmonton and the Liard River straight north-west, but it also goes to show that probably, in the promotion of any public work in the development of our transportation in that Yukon district, that the Yellowhead Pass probably would be the best initiative, because it is in line with all the mining industries that have been so far discovered in that country. It is the placer mines that attract the population, because these placer mines can be handled and wealth can be extracted from the soil with very simple appliances by the labour of the people themselves. Therefore the foundations of a population will be laid first of all by the development of these placer mines, which occur most largely in the Omineca district, the Cariboo district, the Dease River district and the head waters of the Liard district, and so on down the Pelly to Dawson. It will be found by the evidence that these mines are all in a line in the same direction with the mines in the Boundary Creek district and the Kootenay district of the Rocky Mountains. They seem to lie between the two ranges of mountains, the Selkirk and the Rockies, and the best mining discoveries that have yet been made seem to be on the west side of the Rocky Mountain range —that is, the range to the west of our prairie regions. Yellowhead Pass goes on further to the head of the Fraser, and so on in a north-westerly direction until it strikes the head waters of the Skeena and the Naas River and the Stikine River and so on to the Black River or Teslin Lake, whichever may be found most advantageous in the future development of that country. According to the evidence of the practical men that have been before the committee, it seems to be a toss up as to the opening out of the route by way of Black River and on to Dease Lake, and so on to the head waters of the Liard and Pelly River, down that river, and the route by way of Teslin Lake which has already been laid out. The line from Ashcroft joins this route about Quesnelle, or north of Quesnelle at Fort Macleod. Both these routes have a transcontinental character from Edmonton, the one by the Yellowhead Pass and the other by Peace River and the Pine River Pass. Both come to a common point at Fort Macleod. It is merely a question as to what is the best policy in the development of that country, whether the Pine River Pass, going westerly, or the Yellow Head Pass, going westerly, shall be adopted first. They both meet at Fort Macleod, which is on the route from Ashcroft going north into the northern districts. The evidence goes to show that any policy that is initiated should be for the construction of a transcontinental line from Edmonton across to the Pacific Ocean. That a route was surveyed by the Dominion government in the seventies to carry the Canadian Pacific Railway on that route. It surveyed the Yellowhead Pass and the Pine River Pass and connected those points with the coast so that he have practical information as to the distance, the elevation, and everything else in the Railways and Canals Department, actual knowledge as to the distances and grades and everything else on these routes, on the Yellowhead route as far as Giscomb portage near the Parsnip River, which empties into the Peace River and is in the neighbourhood of Fort Macleod. So that we are not working at all in the dark up to that point. From Fort Macleod west to the coast it has been more of a track survey than anything else, excepting a survey from Fort Simpson coming east this way up the Skeena River about sixty miles where practical surveying has been laid down; that is to say, the distance and the grades and everything else are known on the route coming from Fort Simpson easterly on the Skeena River which was laid down as a connecting link with the Canadian Pacific Railway as developed at that time through the Pine River Pass. It seems to us, from the surveys, that we have got to deal with the development of that country upon those lines that we cannot consider a route from the coast solely by itself, apart from the development of a line from the east, because they join at certain points which make it more practicable to reach Fort Selkirk and Dawson City from the coast and from the east by a joint line running north where there two lines meet most conveniently, that the development of a route from the coast to Dawson City by itself, would not be a profitable one, for various reasons, whereas it might be made a profitable one if it formed a link in a transcontinental line from Edmonton to the coast, and was made a joint route from the head of one of these rivers down to Fort Selkirk or Dawson City or as far as it was desirable to extend the railway. Therefore, it becomes a large question when you speak of the development of the route upon these lines. The Yukon contract that we had before us only designed the construction of 150 miles to connect the head of navigation of the Stikine River with the head of navigation of the Yukon River at Teslin Lake. That, of course, is a very small proportion of the route that is necessary for the opening out of that country at all. The evidence goes to show that the character of the country is such that it requires cheap transportation right up to the mines, that where it is locked up for the winter time and transportation is practically forbidden in consequence of the great difficulties, the want of food for animals and the want of means of transport and everything else, that no very great development commensurate with the cost of opening up and governing that distant country, would take place. The evidence I think will be found to be of a very valuable character, so far as the public gets possession of it, to show that there are really good practical results to be obtained for the commercial interests of Canada, for the transportation interests of Canada by looking at the question from the larger standpoint of a transcontinental connection for the thorough development of the mining regions of that district instead of taking the smaller view of merely building a short line of railway of 150 miles. The evidence of Mr. Jennings goes to show that the distance from a port on the Pacific coast in Canadian territory up to Dawson City would be very great by itself. I will just read you that portion of Mr. Jennings's evidence :

Q. Can you give us any idea of the distance that it would be, taking a point, say, Port Simpson up to the crossing of the Stikine ?

A. 400 to 450 miles. Four hundred is the scaled distance; 450 would likely be the actual distance including allowance for curvature. The route would likely be from Port Simpson by the Skeena valley to the third fork of the Stikine, thence to the crossing of the Stikine near the confluence of the Tooya with the Stikine.

Q. So that if you add that 450 miles to the railway from Telegraph Creek north to Teslin Lake, we get how much railway communication ?

A. 620 miles.

Q. To Teslin Lake ?

A. Yes.

Q. And from Teslin Lake north what do you make the total ?

A. 1,181 miles.

Q. That would be 1,181 miles from a Canadian harbour?

A. From a Canadian harbour in the vicinity of Port Sampson to Dawson City.

Q. And adding that to the 650 miles of Canadian Pacific Railway would make how much?

A. 1,831 miles.

Q. 1,831 miles of rail travel and some 500 of ocean to the Skeena?

A. Yes; 500 miles from Vancouver to the mouth of the Skeena.

Q. Of ocean travel?

A. Yes. Should some point at or about Observatory Inlet be found suitable for a terminus, and the Naas Valley used in making the ascent to the plateau, a line from the sea to the Stikine River at the point last described would be about 300 miles in length.

Q. That would reduce the railway distance, how much?

A. It would reduce the rail to 1,031 miles, or a total rail haul from Calgary of 1,681 miles, with an increase in ocean travel of 75 or 100 miles. In this connection I might mention that a terminus in the vicinity of Observatory Inlet would be immediately opposite Dixon Entrance, an open passage from the Pacific by the north of Queen Charlotte Islands and south of Prince of Wales Island.

Q. So that as compared with the route from the interior, say from Edmonton, which Dr. Dawson's figures put at 1,311 miles to Fort Selkirk, what would the distance be?

A. It would be, say, 1,486 miles.

Q. So that, against a route from Edmonton to Dowson City of 1,486 miles, we have 1,681 miles of railway carriage and 575 of ocean carriage, with two transhipments?

A. Yes.

That is the evidence of Mr. Jennings with regard to an ocean port in Canadian territory. If we build an all-rail route through from a Canadian port up to Dawson City the distance would be taking Calgary as the starting point from the interior of the country, 1,681 miles of railway travel and 575 miles of ocean travel, with two transhipments. That of course is the comparative distance that any commerce from eastern Canada to supply the wants of the people working in the Yukon district or from the North-west Territories would have to travel by that route, whereas, as opposed to that, we have the route from Edmonton by the Peace River and Pine River Pass or the Yellowhead Pass, a distance of some thirteen or fourteen hundred miles, showing that if we want to develop the cheapest possible route of an all-rail connection with that country that that Edmonton route is the one that we should adopt, because there is no transhipment and we would have not only the development of the trade in the Yukon district itself, but we would have whatever trade it developed by having another ocean route. The ocean routes have proved very profitable to the country in every way. I mean to say that the transcontinental route of the Canadian Pacific Railway has proved to be very profitable as an ocean route on the Pacific, to seek the trade of other nations, and another ocean route on the Pacific would prove quite as advantageous in the development of trade and in the development of whatever interests there may be in the intervening country. The next point that I drew from Mr. Jennings was the distance to Fort Selkirk from the Lynn Canal, which is one of the points of controversy in regard to the development of that country. It is contended that the Lynn Canal, being in territory claimed by the United States, it is not desirable that we should develop our trade by that route, but commerce, transportation, and all those adjuncts to our commercial life are like water and are bound to find their level. Trade is not going round by the most expensive route if there is another route to be found. That is as plain as a pike staff to anybody. The distance to Selkirk from the ocean by way of Lynn Canal is 300 miles. Everybody knows when you have to transship from an ocean to a railway route the longer the ocean route the cheaper your transportation is going to be, and as opposed to railway communication ocean travel is infinitely the cheaper. So that if we are going to depend entirely on the development of Canada's trade with the interior of that country, Dawson City and Fort Selkirk and the tributaries of the Yukon, north or south, it is unquestionable cheaper for the rates of travel and the rates of freight and everything else to make the railway communication as short as possible, and the ocean route as long as possible, and carrying out that idea it would be best for us, in the interest of Canada, if we are going to depend upon a coast route entirely, to take that which would give us the shortest rail and the longest ocean route. With reference to that Mr. Jennings says in his evidence:

Q. You made a report on the Dalton trail route?

A. I made a report on the Dalton trail route based on information supplied me by Mr. McArthur, D.L.S., one of the surveyors in the Interior Department. I met him here and he gave me all the information he had, including barometric elevations, photographs, &c.

Q. That distance, I think, you put down here at 245 miles to Fort Selkirk?

A. 245 miles from Pyramid Harbour to a point five miles below "Five Fingers" Rapids on the Lewes River. A further distance of fifty-seven miles would carry a line by that route to Fort Selkirk, and with an additional 174 miles to Dawson City.

Q. To the mouth of the Nordenskiold or to Fort Selkirk, a railway would develop all the country tributary to the navigation, to the Hootalinqua and Teslin Lake by going up the river?

A. A railway from the sea at Lynn Inlet to the mouth of the Nordenskiold would give access to the Lewes or Yukon Rivers and, consequently, to the Salmon, Pelly, Hootalinqua and Teslin Lake districts, but such a line would pass through United States territory.

Now the question of the line passing through United States territory, of course, is purely a matter of arrangement with the government at Washington. A great deal of our trade and commerce passes through United States ports at New York, Boston and Portland. We are continually crossing the Niagara River with our international railway and developing trade at a very great rate between the United States and Canada. Therefore, I do not think that there is any difficulty, or should be any difficulty, excepting a jealousy that may exist on our part, as to any portion of our trade helping to create a seaport in United States territory. I do not think that a seaport in United States terrritory would be built to any great extent. If the country succeeds at all the town which will be really built up will be at the terminus of the railway. It will not be as it is now, where we have to pass through the coast range with great difficulty and are subjected to all kinds of charges. When steamboats come to Lynn Canal and transfer to the railroads at once and our goods simply pass through the United States strip of territory, any centre which may be created in the Yukon district will be at the terminus of the railway in Canada, and when a route is developed from the interior to the Klondike region eastern trade will find that the cheapest route. That is the practical result of our investigation so far as the transportation is concerned. It is merely presented to you in the form of evidence, we have not expressed an opinion in any way at all. The only opinion that is expressed in the report it that no restriction should be put on the development of the route from Lynn Canal—there should be no monopoly to construct or operate railroads in that northern country. Hon. gentlemen know perfectly well that the success of any country depends upon the competition that the industrial population enjoy in the development of their industries—that any industry which is dependent entirely on monopoly will suffer in consequence, and trade will suffer, and we express that opinion in the report, and that, I think is the only opinion that we do express. The evidence goes further to show that while there are very rich deposits indeed, the practical result of which is as yet entirely unknown, the evidence from all those who are acquainted with the mining properties of the country goes to show that the whole of the region is covered with low-grade pay gravel, which only requires the economy supply by railway communication to convert it into a large field of enterprise and trade. The only way that that low-pay gravel can be developed is by a cheap way of getting in machinery and supplies, and the same remark applies to quartz mining. To show you what the public realize with regard to the riches of that country, I will read to you some extracts from a prospectus issued by one of the numerous companies which have been formed to develop that region and the value that is attached by men of experience to the mining prospects of the Yukon country. The prospectus says:

This company and its agents have secured and paid for leases from the Canadian government for twenty years for gold dredging nearly one hundred miles of the richest gold bearing territory in the world.

* * * * * * * * *

This company and its agents have also further secured options on twenty year leases upon the exposed banks and bars of about two hunnred miles of rivers of the Klondike district and ten mining on the Bonanza and Eldorado.

Making a rough estimate and averaging the width of the rivers and the exposed sands and bars on both banks of the rivers at 600 yards each, which is a modest estimate, this would give in the 400 miles, or thereabouts, secured for subaqueous and hydraulic mining, about 49,300 placer mining claims of legal size. Moreover, to strengthen the proposition this company offers its stockholders, there are four points to be specially noted:

First, nature has put in her own stamp mills, and thus saved the expense of crushing the ore for the company.

Second, in draining 300,000 square miles of gold bearing territory, tributary to the Yukon, nature has put her own transportation and concentrated the gold by making it accessible.

Third, in a frozen land, where ordinary 250 claims must be thawed out by the inch by slow fires, under the running streams, nature has thawed out the sand and gravel down to bed rock.

* * * * * * * * *

Within a short distance of the Eldorado Creek claims, Hank Sumners, the noted Alaskan pioneer and prospector, owns a claim, out of which he is said to have taken $800,000 in gold, and $102,000 of which he took out in thirteen days.

* * * * * * * * *

DREDGING OPERATIONS.

Besides the Canadian leases already mentioned this company is now in the knowledge of definite gold bearing bars in Alaska proper, on the Yukon and its tributaries, where the sands will yield from $1 to $25 per cubic yard.

The services of Mr. John Dean, chief engineer of the Park Department of St. Louis, late chief engineer of the Liverpool and Manchester Railway, and now consulting engineer for several other large railroad interests, have been secured to build the companies' dredges, and to oversee in person all the company's operations in gold dredging.

* * * * *

The company has the written guarantee of Mr. Dean, its chief engineer, that every thing taken out by the hydraulic dredges will be profit over two cents per yard, and by the bucket-dredge process, every thing over eight cents per yard.

These items I have extracted from a prospectus that I came across, and is only an additional indication of the richness of that country, and the activity that is being displayed in opening out these resources of the Canadian mining fields in the Rocky Mountains.

Hon. Mr. SANFORD—Will the hon. gentleman tell us the name of the company?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Everything is called Klondike there. It is called the Klondike, Yukon and Copper River Mining Company. The Hon. John L. Wilson, Hon. G. D. Meiklejohn, Assistant-Secretary for War; Hon. J. C. S. Blackburn, Hon. D. T. Murphy, and T. B. Vrooman, of Chicago, are among the list of directors, all of whom are from the United States.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I may say to the hon. gentleman from Hamilton that I think a little of the stock of that company is still on the market.

Hon. Mr. SANFORD—I am aware of it.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—We understand in commercial matters that there are always bears and bulls. My hon. friend from Halifax, for political purposes, is a bull in this case, and my hon. friend opposite, who perhaps wants to get the stock as cheaply as possible, is a bear. This is only one of numerous companies which have issued prospectuses in very much the same strain, and I have quoted the words of Deane, who was chief engineer of the Liverpool and Manchester Railway Company. I have quoted his opinion with regard to hydraulic dredging and the value of the sand to be taken out in those rivers, all showing that it is a remarkably rich country. We have the facts stated here that one miner took eight hundred thousand dollars out of his claim, and every day the papers furnish evidence of the great wealth that is being taken from the cleaning up of last winter. I have seen any number of private letters published in our press from parties who have no interets in misrepresenting the facts, all confirming these reports. All the evidence goes to show that that country, for mining purposes, is exceedingly valuable. I am so thoroughly imbued myself with the idea that it is so, that I believe the government would be perfectly justified in opening up that region by an intelligent system of railway transportation from the east side of the Rocky Mountains, and dove tailing that with a line from the Pacific coast, so as to suit the interests of the coast cities at the same time. I am thoroughly convinced that we in the North-west Territories, who produce exactly the food supplies required by the miners, can never supply them in any shape or form whatever on account of the heavy freight rates we have to pay, and the many times we have to tranship, if its development is to take place from the Pacific coast alone. Being in the North-west Territories and interested from a personal standpoint, I have been very happy indeed in having been honoured by being appointed chairman of this committee, in order that I might bring out these facts in as practical and intelligent a way as possible, not only for the information of the government, but also for the information of the public, and also to justify the action that this honourable House saw fit to take contrary to the policy of the government who are responsible to the people directly. But this honourable House occupies a position, as one of the branches of parliament, and when we do not think that proper economy is being applied to the development of our resources, when we find that the rich mining lands of the Yukon territory have been given away to a company to the extent of 4,000,000 of acres, instead of being held by the government for the development of that country, then I think that the Senate was quite justified in calling a halt in order that more light might be thrown on what the necessities are in the development of that district. The evidence we have adduced is the same class of evidence that the government themselves sought for in developing the Teslin Lake route, so that it cannot be denied that it is the most practical we can get. The hon. senator from London (Sir John Carling) is to be congratulated upon having moved for this committee which has brought into existence this pamphlet that we are now laying before the House for their adoption. The evidence is completed and printed, and it only awaits the adoption of the report to be published as a blue book.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—How many of those men who gave testimony have been in that country?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—The Hon. Mr. Reid lives in Quesnelle, in the heart of the country. He supplies the miners up there himself. Bishop Grouard has lived all his life there.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Where?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—As one of the resident missionaries to the Indians to Peace River, the Liard River and the Yukon River, down to the mouth of the Mackenzie. He has been there since 1862. Mr. Oliver, of Edmonton, lives on the border of the country, at the terminus of our railway communication to the North-west. Mr. Bostock lives in the mining country. Mr. Marcus Smith, civil engineer, has spent fifteen years of his life surveying in that conntry, or superintending surveys.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Which country?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—The Yellow Head Pass and the Stikine River, the Pine River Pass and easterly from there to Prince Albert.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He has not been in the Yukon country,

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—No, but the whole of that country is of the same character. If there is any difference, the portion of the country which he has not been through is more favourable than any he has seen. All the evidence went to show that the country grows more level the further north we go. The highest pass through the Rocky Mountains is the Kicking Horse Pass which the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway crosses; the next highest is the Yellow head Pass, and the lowest of all is Pine River Pass. The further north they went the more level the country became or rather the large mountains seem to dip to the north.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But they were not there?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—They were across the country to the Skeena.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is in north British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Mr. Dawson has been through that Yukon country. Mr. Jennings has been up as far as the head waters of Teslin Lake. Mr. McConnell of the Geological Survey has been all through that country. Mr. Pambrun's knowledge is confined to the Pelly River, which empties into the Yukon. Dr. Wills has spent three years in Dawson City. The evidence of Mr. Jennings is that there is no practical difficulty in building a railroad in any part of that country, that it can be built for $20,000 a mile.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Did he not correct that and say $25,000?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—No, he said twenty thousand dollars a mile on a cash basis; That is to say, if the government were to undertake it without having any desire to make a profit out of it, the road could be built and equipped for well within twenty thousand dollars a mile. If you let it to contractors, it depends upon how much you want the contractors to make. Of course the greatest economy is necessary in the development of that route. It is not a country that can afford to stand high rates or transportation charges or extravagant railroad contracts, or watered stock, or anything of that kind; but if we were to make up our minds to develop that country for the sake of the trade that can be obtained and the transportation that can be carried on, there is as fine an opening as any country could desire to have with rich rewards to the producing and trading public. We have built the Canadian Pacific Railway and what is the result? The country developed by the construction of that road is bearing a charge of $24,300,000 annually. That is the earning power of the company, $24,300,000. That money is supplied by the people who support the Canadian Pacific Railway, and it is distributed through the whole country to the extent of whatever is expended in the country. Now that shows the value of encouraging transportation; but unfortunately the Canadian Pacific Railway has been allowed to be constructed upon a very extravagent basis and a very large portion of the receipts go out of the country, and the people are burdened greater than they are able to bear with the heavy charges to the extent of $24,300,000 of these earnings.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I notice, Hon. Mr. Reid, one of your witnesses says that the Ashcroft route is preferable in all its bearings to any route he knows of.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Of course Mr. Reid lives at Quesnelle, and Ashcroft is his station. It is 220 miles from Quesnelle to Ashcroft. He lives on the direct route, and naturally he is an advocate of that route. The only thing is that if we were to use that route for the development of Canadian trade to the east, you would have to add the additional 450 miles from Calgary to Ashcroft; that makes the distance something like 1,600 miles as compared with the other routes. Mr. Bostock came to give evidence in the same line as Mr. Reid. Mr. Bostock lives about sixty or seventy miles to the east of Ashcroft, and they are anxious to see that station made the jumping off place to go north. It would be taxing the North-west Territories heavily to make that route an available one for the transportation of produce. The Edmonton route is really the route if you wish to consider the value of connecting the agricultural districts of the North-west with the mining industries in the country. A pack trail would facilitate transport to the interior very much at a slight expense, to the head waters of the Pelly. The surveys to be undertaken by the government, for which provision has been made in the estimates, will throw additional and accurate light upon this important question, and is an evidence of the importance the government attach to it. I do not know, unless hon. gentlemen have questions to ask me, that I have anything further to state. The report is complete and the evidence is very interesting, and a table of distances has been given. In reference to the table of distances, I may say I have another table of distances from Montreal to Calgary and down the Mackenzie River, which is not included in this evidence, and I think I will give it here :

	Miles.
From Montreal to Calgary	2,144
Athabasca Landing (wagon)	96

to Great Slave Lake; then across Great Slave Lake north-west and enter the Mackenzie River; then Fort Simpson, mouth of Liard River; Fort Norman, Fort Good Hope; mouth of Peel River; ascend Peel River to Fort Peel or Mackenzie thereon; Hudson Bay Company's post portage crossing to Yukon by dog train and the Porcupine River, and then descend Porcupine River to Yukon. There is another table of distances in addition to the one in the evidence already taken, and that takes the Mackenzie River to its mouth and crossing over on to the Porcupine River, and then down the Porcupine to the Yukon below Dawson City in Alaska. With these remarks, hon. gentlemen, I beg to move the adoption of the report, which is as follows :—

Your committee beg leave to report that they have taken the evidence of the following gentlemen who are by their professional knowledge or by virtue of their residence, capable of giving practical and reliable information of the facts which your committee was desirous of obtaining, namely :

The Honourable Senator Reid, of Quesnelle, Cariboo, British Columbia.

Bishop Grouard, who since 1862 has resided in the Mackenzie Basin as missionary.

Mr. Oliver, of Edmonton; member for Alberta, in the House of Commons.

Mr. Bostock, of Kamloops, member from British Columbia.

Mr. Marcus Smith, Civil Engineer, engaged in surveys in 1879 and 1880.

Dr. Dawson, Chief of the Geological Service.

Mr. Henry McLeod, Civil Engineer.

Mr. St. Cyr, of the Surveyors' Branch of the public service, engaged in 1898 in exploratory work on Teslin Lake and the Tuya to the east.

Mr. Jennings, who was engaged in Canadian Pacific Railway surveys, and last year from Teslin Lake to the Stikine.

Mr. McConnell, of the Geological Service.

Mr. P. C. Pambrun, who was born at Lesser Slave Lake and has spent his life in that country.

Dr. Wills, late of the Mounted Police Force, and Lt.-Col. Lake, Quartermaster General.

There are several routes to the Yukon from the east side of the mountains. One is from Edmonton north to the valleys of the Nelson, Liard and Pelly Rivers. The next is by way of Pine River Pass fifty miles south of Fort St. John, on the Peace River, to Fort Macleod. The other is by way of the Yellow Head Pass to the same point, Fort Macleod near the headwaters of the Parsnip River in the Omenica district. There are three ways of reaching the Peace River. The one is by Athabasca Landing, thence west to Lesser Slave Lake. The other is direct to Lesser Slave Lake, and so on to Dunvegan and Fort St. John. The other is by way of Dirt Lake on the Saskatchewan, a point about seventy miles west of Edmonton, north-westerly to Fort St. John. From Edmonton to the junction of the Baptiste River with the Athabasca River would be a route common to a junction with Yeliow Head Pass and Fort St. John or Pine River Pass. It is estimated that about four hundred and sixty-five miles of railway constructed would by way of Baptiste River mouth, north-west to the Peace River and south-west to Tête Jaune Cache, on the Fraser River, forty miles west of the Yellow Head Pass, make available a very large stretch of navigable waters on these two rivers. Either a pack trail or a wagon road can be obtained from Fort St. John, west of Dunvegan, north to Fort Nelson, thence down the valley of the Nelson to its junction with the Liard; up the Liard to the height of land which divides its headwaters from the headwaters of the Pelly, which river empties into the Yukon at Fort Selkirk. The distance from Edmonton to Fort Selkirk by this route, from scaling the map and adding ten per cent for curvature, is estimated by Dr. Dawson and Mr. Jennings to be 1,290 miles.

This pack trail would enable drovers to take in cattle and horses. Cattle wintered in the Peace River Valley could be driven in early and delivered in good condition at a reasonable price. The country passed through is well supplied with feed.

The richest gold deposits lie on the west side of the mountains. Cariboo, Omenica, Dease Lake and the Klondike have all established a character for themselves. At the Liard head there seems to be a gap, and the eastern range of mountains from that point seems to have been bodily lifted more to the east, leaving a divide at the headwaters of the Pelly and Liard. This divide appears to be a rich gold bearing country.

The evidence further goes to show that the whole of that region is covered with a low grade of pay gravel which only requires the economy supplied by railway communication to convert it into a large profitable field for enterprise and trade. Quartz mining has yet to be developed by the same means. A railway projected through the Pine River Pass or the Yellow Head Pass, proceeding north-westerly across to a port on the Pacific Ocean, following in a general line Sir Sandford Fleming's survey for the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1879, would develop the principal mining districts, and a branch north from that line to Fort Selkirk and Dawson City, could be made common to an approach from a Pacific port and from the east. A more thorough exploratory survey seems desirable before establishing any point. Your committee are of opinion that the Teslin Lake route is too far to the west for the most profitable through route for either east or west, and believe that a route by way of the Black River or Dease River might be found to be better.

The evidence of some of our most experienced men go to show that the projection of a railway upon Sir Sandford Fleming's surveys in the seventies, when he was the chief engineer of the government railways, will lead up to and project through the mountains a second transcontinental railway developing a large, valuable agricultural area and mining region of the utmost value to the trade and transportation of Canada. Those who know the country well are fully aware that the further north you go to a certain line, north of the Saskatchewan River, the richer the soil, and the better the sample of wheat.

Your committee are of opinion that the trade to an ocean port will so greatly supplement the local intervening trade in the mining regions, that such a railway will be beyond a doubt self-sustaining and profitable for the trade of Canada.

Moreover, your committee were influenced by their desire to bring the agricultural area of the western prairies into as close proximity to the mining industries as possible.

The evidence further goes to show that there is no practical difficulty in pushing railways anywhere through the mountains at a cost of $20,000 per mile cash basis. That the projection of this route might first start from Edmonton. That a route from Edmonton or Ashcroft to Fort Selkirk are about equidistant, but to the Ashcroft route would have to be added 450 miles between Calgary and Ashcroft on the Canadian Pacific Railway as a trade route from eastern Canada and 200 miles from Vancouver to Ashcroft.

That a transcontinental line would throw arms to the south and north, to connect important points.

That a route by way of Vancouver, the ocean, and Teslin Lake to Dawson City is 2,211 miles with four transhipments, or to Fort Selkirk 2,036 miles, as against 1,290 from Edmonton and no transhipment. To give the city of Vancouver and the Canadian Pacific Railway an opportunity to compete on anything like even terms, with a route from the east by way of Edmonton, the shortest line of railway from the coast to Fort Selkirk is essential. According to published reports, that route is from Pyramid Harbour direct to Fort Selkirk by the Dalton trails, the distance being only 295 miles, or 245 miles to a point on the Yukon below the Rink Rapids, fifty miles from Fort Selkirk, thus making the railway service from Calgary about 1,000 miles and the ocean service 1,000 miles with two transhipments, as against 1,290 miles of through railway from Edmonton to Fort Selkirk by an interior route. This would seem to indicate that for the immediate requirements of our North-west mining country at the lowest railway mileage at present available by any route, friendly arrangements should be made with the United States for the removal of any troublesome restrictions to traffic passing into the interior of the country through United States territory or a United States port. That any immediate link from the Stikine north should be so located that it will form the best connection for a joint railway coming from the south-east and south-west and constructed of the standard gauge of four feet eight and a half inches.

That no restriction should be put upon the development of the route from Pyramid Harbour. A roadway from Battleford to Cold Lake thence to Fort McMurray, thence to Peace River, passes through a good agricultural country from Mr. P. C Pambrun's evidence. The distance between Battleford by way of Fort McMurray and the Peace River by route being only 812 miles. A route from Prince Albert to the same point, Fort McMurray, which possesses great advantages for the prospector is furnished by the Board of Trade of Prince Albert, which evidence your committee draws attention to. It sets forth that ninety miles of wagon road will open up almost unbroken navigation to Fort McMurray and the Liard on the Mackenzie.

The censensus of all the evidence is very favourable to the whole country traversed by the routes from Prince Albert westward, either north or south of the Saskatchewan to the Peace River. Mr. Pambrun told the Committee that he grew on thirteen acres last year at Battleford, 533 bushels of wheat, oats and barley, but there was little cultivation for want of a railway. The same witness said in 1841, the year he was stationed at Fort Liard for the Hudson Bay Company, he eat bread made from wheat grown at that northern point. The reports all show that feed is luxuriant on the Nelson and the Liard route to Fort Selkirk. That an abundance of timber, fish, game, minerals, etc., and the elements of successful agriculture exist up to and beyond Peace River.

Your committee commends to your attention the desirability of projecting an interior route at once, which will open up, and make possible the development of large mining interests which beyond any doubt exist between Edmonton and the eastern boundary of Alaska and bring the rich agricultural regions of our prairie country into the closest proximity to those industries.

We append a table of distances furnished by Mr. Jennings, the engineer employed by the government to explore the route from the Stikine River to Teslin Lake, and a man of large experience in the location and construction of railways in the Rocky Mountains. We also place great reliance upon the evidence of Dr. Dawson of the Geological Survey Department and Mr. Marcus Smith, officers whose official and professional knowledge are of great advantage in forming an initial idea of the large interests which await Canadian enterprise, and the difficulties that have to be encountered in their promotion.

Your committee believe that a perusal of the evidence will justify the conclusion which they now have the honour of presenting to the Senate.

Your committee recommend that in addition to the usual number required for the ordinary distribution, fifteen hundred copies in English and five hundred copies in French of the report and evidence be printed for general distribution.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In the process of the canonization of a saint at Rome, there is one person who is described as the devil's advocate, and I propose on the present occasion to act the part of the devil's advocate to a certain extent. The hon. gentleman in his speech sets out certain views which he wishes this honourable House to accept, and he wishes this House further to go to considerable expense as a result of accepting those views. Now, I propose to say a few words with a view to showing that the hon. gentleman's recommendation is not altogether such as should commend itself to this House. In the first place, this committee moved for by the hon. knight from London (Sir John Carling) was appointed to inquire into the feasibility and probable cost of opening up direct communication between the railway system of Canada and the navigable waters of the Yukon and also as to the advantages which would flow therefrom to the trade of Canada. Now there is no question about the feasibility of opening up direct communication between the railway system of Canada and the navigable waters of the Yukon; and I presume that advantages would flow therefrom to Canada. But the railway system of Canada extends right through to Vancouver; and I do not think that the hon. gentleman gives any details as to the advantages which would flow to the trade of Canada from the construction of a railway. He said something about the development of the agricultural resources of the North-west, but he did not say very much about the trade of Canada. The committee were not appointed for the purpose of finding out what railway would best develop the agricultural regions of the North west, and I do not think the report of the committee carries out the purpose for which it was appointed, as set out in the motion for its appointment. The hon. gentleman did drop a word or two in the earlier part of his speech which showed the spirit in which he went into this inquiry. He said, of course the object was to show that the Edmonton route was the best.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman said "hear, hear;" I thought possibly I might have misapprehended his meaning, but it appears that I did not. Here is a committee appointed with judicial functions to make an impartial inquiry as to various routes, and the hon. gentleman who is chairman of the committee, and who, I must say, supplied nearly as much evidence as all the witnesses together—that is judging from the report of the committee—avows that his object was to show that one particular route was the best.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—The shortest.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Before the evidence came in: and any one who reads the evidence will see that the chairman of the committee had this preconceived idea in his head that a route from Edmonton up through the Peace River country and then north-west from that was the route he believed in. That being the case, hon. gentlemen, we could not expect to get very valuable information from a committee acting under those circumstances. The hon. Minister of Justice asked a question as to the number of witnesses who had been in the country. The truth is that the amount of evidence that was not hearsay, which was the evidence given by persons who were themselves witnesses of the things they speak of, is very limited. You eliminate the evidence of Mr. Jennings, which evidence is substantially contained in the report submitted to the government some time ago, and eliminate the evidence of Dr. Dawson and Mr. McConnell and one or two others, and all the rest is hearsay. The evidence of Mr. Marcus Smith is interesting and valuable in a way, but after all that is only evidence as to the practicability of a line of railway through the Pine River Pass to Fort Simpson.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I think that is the majority of the evidence you refer to now.

Hon. Mr. POWER—One of the great objects, apparently, of the committee and of the report is to show that there is a great deal of valuable agricultural land in the Peace River region. Nobody doubts that, but that is not what the committee were appointed to find out. The committee which was appointed here in this House some years ago, at the instance of the hon. senator who was afterwards lieutenant governor of Manitoba, (Dr. Schultz) and is now no more, collected a great deal of information bearing on the character of that country, showing that the Peace River country and portions of the country on the Mackenzie were fairly good agricultural districts. But hon. gentlemen, we did not want to find out about that. We have a great deal of agricultural country already which we cannot get population for. We do not want to look for more country, what we want to do is to get the agricultural land, which has been opened up by railways populated.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—That is in Prince Albert, Edmonton and Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is not necessary to build a railway which will cost at the lowest figure about $30,000,000, for the purpose of peopling the region round Prince Albert and Edmonton. While it is fair and reasonable that we should spend a good deal of money on the North-west country, we have done very nearly enough in the past. We built the Canadian Pacific Railway at a very large expense, and now the hon. gentleman stating that he looks at the matter from a broad standpoint, wants to spend $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 more to build another trans-continental railway across to Fort Simpson, with branches running up to the Klondike regions on the one hand and down to the Kamloops region on the other.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Is that what you call being the devil's advocate?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Well, I think perhaps the hon. gentleman was the devil's advocate there: but that is what the hon. gentleman proposes. I have been trying to show the character of his report, and what his objects are. Hon. gentlemen, I think this country has already a reasonably large debt which is not diminishing.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Hear, hear—increasing every day.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This country has incurred a disproportionately large amount of debt in opening up the western country, in supplying that country with railway facilities, and I think that any reasonable Canadian will look with anything but favour upon a proposal to spend perhaps $40,000,000 more in building another trans-continental railway with a branch running hundreds of miles north, and another branch hundreds of miles south.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—To get $100,000,000 of gold out of it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—You could get that by an expenditure of three millions.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—No.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman says we will get $100,000,000 gold. I have indicated the animus with which the chairman of the committee appears to have gone into this inquiry. The hon. gentleman told us that the only positive recommendation in the report of the committee was that no restriction should be put upon the development of the route from Pyramid Harbour. Then the hon. gentleman undertook to show, what is clear enough, that ocean carriage is much cheaper than rail carriage. A railway is being built and will be completed this season, as I understand, from the Lynn Canal, not perhaps all the way to Dawson City but the Lewes River.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—What is it to cost the country?

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is not costing the country anything.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We are having this mode of communication opened up, which the hon. gentleman says is the best mode of communication for doing business, to the Yukon country and it is to cost the country nothing, and the hon. gentleman comes with a proposition that we should spend thirty or forty millions to connect Edmonton and Prince Albert with the Klondike region. It is simply necessary to make those two statements to show how, as I think, visionary and unreasonable the proposition of the hon. gentleman is.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—We do not expect the Liberal member for Halifax to help us out

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Liberal member for Halifax is usually willing to help in anything that is going to benefit the country, provided the country is not paying too much for its whistle. The only thing they have committed themselves to is that there is no necessity for this long 1,300 miles of railway, that the work will be better and more effectually done, getting in and out of the Yukon country by a short railway from Lynn Canal, which is to be constructed without any cost to the country, and I consequently really do not see that there is any great object in publishing all the evidence which has been collected by the committee, that is, in any other way than as part of our minutes. I do not propose to say much more about this report. As the thing stands now we are not badly off. We have a Canadian railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway running to Vancouver; there are steamships now running from the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the Lynn Canal, and, when the railway which the hon. gentleman so highly speaks of is constructed there will be a line in from Lynn Canal to the Klondike region. That is all that the country needs just now. It is to be regretted that the Lynn Canal is in territory occupied by the United States. Just at the present moment it may be a matter of no very great consequence, because our neighbours are disposed to be friendly to us, and they have entered into an agreement to allow bonding privileges from Lynn Canal into the Klondike country, and for all practical purposes just now things are very much as if the Lynn Canal were in Canadian territory.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Do I understrnd my hon. friend to favour the construction of a road from the Lynn Canal and to be opposed to the prohibition placed upon the same by the government?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman should not understand his hon. friends do anything of the kind. I am taking the view now of the hon. gentleman from Shell River, and, as far as I am concerned individually I think just for the time being probably we are not so badly off. From this report, which gives a good deal of information but not of the most definite and precise character, and from the fact that the report makes almost no recommendation, except this one with respect to the Lynn Canal, the conclusion which I draw and the conclusion which I think any one who listened to the debates in the two Houses on the government bill which was defeated some time ago with respect to the Yukon Railway, would draw, is that we do not know enough about the matter just yet to finally and positively decide what is the best line to adopt. I think that the better way on the whole, the better course for the government and parliament to adopt is to let things go as they are now, let this English company build in from Dyea and let the government meanwhile cause surveys to be made and information to be collected, so that, at the beginning of next session, if the Yukon country continues to manifest the same mineral wealth which it has manifested in the past, parliament will be in a position to deal intelligently and with reasonable certainty in the matter, that they will know what they are doing and will not be in any sense working in the dark. But while I feel that a good deal of interesting and somewhat valuable information has been secured by the committee, I cannot subscribe to the views of the chairman of the committee, and if this report is printed in the ordinary way in the appendix of our journals, that is really as much as we ought to do with it.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I do not know that I can add very much to what the hon. gentleman from Shell River (Mr. Boulton) said to the House, but I am glad to know this, that the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Power) is perfectly satisfied now that nobody is going to starve in the Yukon country this year. When he says that the hon. member for Shell River is going to put this country to an expenditure of thirty or forty million dollars, where does he get the information? Does the report say that? The report contains evidence, not for immediate use, but probably for the future, and he is saying too much. I know that the members in this House who support the government want to bring politics into the Senate all the time.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I did not bring in politics.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I am not referring to the hon. gentleman from Halifax just now, but I am glad to hear from him that everything is lovely now, that we do not want a railway into that country. It justifies the action of the Senate in throwing out that monstrous bill. The hon. gentleman's language justifies that; and I do not wonder at the hon. gentleman being dissatisfied, because the leader of this House, at the time that the hon. knight from London (Sir John Carling) moved for his committee, said that no friends of the government should go on that committee. Why, hon gentlemen, it is almost insulting the supporters of the government in this House. To show that, I have here in my hand what he did say, and if it is necessary I can read it. He said they should not go there, they know too much now, they should not know anything about this country. He said: "I know it all and we do not want any information." Probably the hon. member from Halifax does not want any more.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, I do.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—He knows all about the country; but when he says the committee recommends an expenditure of forty or fifty millions, he shows that he knows very little about it. When the cry was about the people going to starve in that Yukon country, the Senate thought proper to look into the matter to see if there could not be a way found to give relief to the people in that region, either by opening up a pack trail or a wagon road into that country, or in some other way. I do not want to be unjust to the hon. Minister of Justice, but to show you how they want to bring in politics here——

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Why, it has been here for forty years!

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—And you bring more of it in than ever I saw here before. You want to divide on political lines all the time. You told your supporters in this House that they should not go on that committee, that you have all the information you want, and you did not want them to know anything. But as a member of the House I want to know what I am doing; I want to vote intelligently, and hereafter if I live, I want to see a railway into that country. Let us see what the hon. gentleman said:

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend showed a great deal of wisdom upon the project submitted by the government to this House, and so he desires further light.

That, I suppose, is what the hon. knight from London spoke of.

I have not the slightest objection that light should be had. I have not the slightest disposition to prevent my hon. friend from London getting all the information he may desire. But I say that the information he seeks is not information which will enable him to utilize the navigable waters of any other road which he may build for the purpose of maintaining our advantages of trade in the Yukon country.

What great advantage were they going to get by giving away 4,000,000 acres? I have not seen it yet.

For the purpose of maintaining our advantages of trade in the Yukon country. That to my mind is perfectly clear.

That is, to his mind, and he wants it to be understood it is clear to every supporter of the government.

And I would say that any hon. gentleman who supports the government who goes upon a committee making such a declaration, would be assisting my hon. friend and those associated with him in undertaking to leave upon the public mind the impression that the project which is indicated here is to be a substitute for that line of policy which the government submitted to the consideration of parliament. I say it is no substitution at all; it cannot be a substitution.

He did not want them to go there. He wanted to keep them away from that committee but I believe some of them went there. They were not such slaves as he wanted to make them.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—One of them went there who was not a member of the committee.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—That is right: he showed that he wanted information. The Minister of Justice did not want him to get information. I said on one occasion that the hon. gentleman was wise in his day and generation, but he does not want others to be as wise as he is himself. My hon. friend continued:

It would practically either destroy the prospect of mining in that country, or it would destroy our control over the trade and over the government of the country. My hon. friend and those associated with him may undertake by majority in this House to control the country and the direction of the public policy in regard to it, but I wish to call his attention to this—and he has had a good deal of experience in the affairs of government—that this is a new departure in our constitutional system.

I do not wonder at the hon. gentleman and his supporter, the hon. member from Halifax, objecting to this report. But when the hon. member from Halifax says that the report recommend an expenditure of forty millions of dollars in building a railway into that country, he is mistaken. He says the country is not in a position to do that: I agree with him. Instead of the expenditure of this country diminishing, it is increasing and we cannot afford to enter upon new undertakings under the circumstances. We must economize. If the government would only carry out the promises they make to the people of this country and economize, they might before long be able to build a railway to the Yukon district. It is an advantage to the public to have this evidence before them and to know which is the best way to go into that country hereafter. The hon. Minister of Justice does not want them to know that. He knows it all himself, but the people of this country must have some knowledge also if they are to sustain his policy: otherwise they will not support him. They will not go it blind as he wants them to do, he desires that they shall have no information.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I was a member of the committee, but as the hon. chairman held his meetings frequently at night, I was not able to attend all of them, there are parts of the report in which I do not concur, especially the portion with reference to a line from Pyramid Harbour. But if the policy of the government is not to do anything in opening a route to the Yukon I should give access from any point on the coast from which any one wishes to build a railway. If it is the intention of the government to have an all-Canadian route it would be different. This report does not make any strong recommendation. It furnishes information of the country for the government. The strongest advocate for the route from Edmonton to Yukon district expects nothing more than the opening up of a pack trail for horses and cattle. The idea was that that could be done, and that cattle could be driven in from the North-west, and that miners could take their outfit and prospect and mine on the way going in to the Yukon. That was the chief idea that this committee had when they first commenced their meetings. Evidence was placed before us that a a pack trail could be opened for about thirty thousand dollars from Edmonton to the Yukon country. A member of the House of Commons, Mr. Oliver, who knows a great deal about the country, informed us that a route could be cut through—a pack trail—for about thirty dollars a mile. He said, however, that a thorough survey would have first of all to be made. I gave notice of the following question which I now ask :

When the report of the committee appointed to inquire into the feasibility and probable cost of opening up direct communication during the present season between the railway system of Canada and the navigable waters of the Yukon is under consideration, what is the intention of the government with regard to opening up communication with the Yukon district from the Pacific coast, and is it the intention of the government to supplement the money grant of $4,000 per mile made by the legislature of British Columbia to aid in the construction of a railway from the coast of British Columbia to Teslin Lake?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The question before the House I think is the adoption of this report, and my hon. friend has interjected a question with regard to another matter quite beside the report. The hon. gentleman from Shell River (Mr. Boulton) has submitted to us a report and the evidence which accompanied it, and that is the matter which I suppose is now before this House for consideration. I need not call the attention of the House to the fact that the evidence taken is not relevant to the motion for the investigation which my hon. friend from London (Sir John Carling) submitted to the House; and of the evidence, by far the greater proportion of it is hearsay of men who never saw the country. I called my hon. friend's attention at the time this motion was made to the fact that there was a sum in the estimates for the very purpose of exploring those different routes and for inquiring into the feasibility of each, but a majority of the House supported the motion of my hon. friend, and they were not willing to wait. They wanted to take immediate action, and this report is the result of that action, and while there is a clergyman, and a member of the Geological Survey staff, and a physician, who have been in that country and who know something about it, these are about the only persons who are in a position to speak from their personal knowledge.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—As to what portion of it?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—As to the portion of the country with which connection is to be made, the Yukon country. My hon. friend must bear in mind that what was proposed by this government was to find out which was the most accessible means of establishing communication with the Yukon country connecting with the railway system of Canada.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—These engineers have surveyed that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, my hon. friend is mistaken. There is one of these routes that has been explored by an engineer. There is a party who resides on one route, the Hon.

Mr. Reid, who gave testimony that the shortest route that could be got was by Ashcroft—that it was a preferable route in all its bearings to any route that he knew anything of, but what other route he knew about was not disclosed. But my hon. friend, the chairman of the committee, says that that evidence is of no account, and it is of no account for the reason that the route with regard to which Mr. Reid testifies is a route upon which Mr. Reid resides, and therefore he has a bias in favour of that route and that bias is sufficient to make his evidence of no value.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I never said anything of the kind.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Substantially, that is what the hon. gentleman said, and instead, as chairman, of giving a statement of the testimony in favour of each of the routes, there is not a syllable with regard to the value of any one of them except the route from Edmonton northward. I have this much to say with regard to that: the route from Edmonton northward, I have no doubt, is a route running through an agricultural country of very considerable extent, but as my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Power) has pointed out, there are immense areas of agricultural land through which railways now run, very much nearer to the east than the Peace River country, which are still unoccupied, and so there is no pressing, no overpowering necessity of opening up the Peace River country merely for agricultural purposes. What I supposed was of great value in this inquiry arose from the fact that thousands of people were going into the Yukon country. They were going there; they were not being enticed to go by the government or by parliament. They were not being bribed to go. They were voluntarily going there, and what we proposed was to furnish them, at as little cost to the public treasury as possible, with a route into that country, by which they might find easy ingress and egress, and which would diminish to them the cost of getting into the country and proportionately improve the public revenues of the country. That proposition, of course, was not acceptable to this House, and my hon. friend from Monck (Mr. McCallum) has, in his usual winsome manner, undertaken to convince me that he was not actuated in his opposition by the slightest feeling of political partisanship or anything approaching it. My hon. friend occupies a position of absolute neutrality between those favourable to the government and those that are opposed to the government. Now, that may be my hon. friend's position in his own estimation, and if he says so, I will not call it in question. But I will say, that I believe no hon. gentleman, either in parliament or out of parliament, was ever so deluded as my hon. friend is in coming to any such conclusion, for stronger political feeling and bias, whether my hon. friend is cross or whether he is good natured, never was, I venture to say, exhibited in a parliamentary body. It may be my hon. friend thinks that no good can come out of Nazareth, and no good can come out of any proposition which the present administration may make to parliament.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I have not seen much of it lately.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend ought to say the prayer that was uttered by the prophet when the young man could not see: those that were for them were more than were against them. He said "Lord, open the young man's eyes, that he may see." If I were a praying man I would be disposed to make the same sort of prayer in favour of my hon. friend. But my feeling of inability to convince my hon. friend would be such an exhibition of want of faith in the success of such a prayer that I do not suppose it would be at all availing.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Faith moves mountains.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But my hon. friend is more difficult to move than any mountain. Let me say this, that the proposition to get ingress to the Yukon country—for this country to which the people are going and out of which they are taking the gold, if it requires action at all, requires action that will produce an immediate result—the proposition to go in from Edmonton and to build 1,300 miles of railway in order to reach that country, I think is one that might do very well at a period before the flood, when men lived nearly a thousand years, but in this day, when the life of man is about three score and ten, I am afraid too much time would be spent before we would have access to the country if we were, in the first instance, dependent upon a railroad built from that point. Then, my hon. friend who has made this motion has spoken of the building of a railway by the Dalton trail. Well, I was opposed to that. I have not changed my views. There are political considerations with regard to that route that are, in my opinion, paramount, but if we carry out the views of the chairman of this committee, who has made this report, and establish free communication by way of the Dalton trail, does my hon. friend think that a route such as he proposes to construct here at the present time, a route which he says will establish a sort of highway between a trail and an ordinary wagon road, by the expenditure of some $300 a mile would enter into competition with a railway built from the Lynn Canal? With free ingress in that direction, does not he think that the food supply, the bacon, hams and flour, would not come from Seattle and from Portland on the Pacific coast, and that the men—if you had settlers—and you have not got them into the Peace River country—that the men who would go in there would find they were competing with those who, on account of the faciiities for transport on the one line, would have such an advantage over them that the Yukon would be no market for them at all.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—$300 a mile would enable the cattle to be driven in on foot at the lowest cost.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But there is something more actually required, and they would hardly be in a condition to make food for the population by the time they would reach the districts where the hon. gentleman proposes to drive them.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Yes, they would be in good order.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Those who are cultivating the soil with the expectation of finding a market in Europe and with the facilities for sending their grain eastward, are likely to settle in those districts which are most convenient for the purpose of getting the product of their industry to that market, and what the hon. gentleman has marked out as the primary object in these proposals seems to me not to promise very much fruit, and certainly not to promise any very important contributions to the colonization and settlement of the country. The love of gold is drawing tens of thousands of people into that country, and it was important to us to furnish them facilities to get there and to give them the opportunity of getting their supplies at a moderate rate. The less their supplies cost them the more they would be in a position to purchase and the larger would be the amount of revenue the government would receive. I believe up to the present time, expensive as the government of that country has been, the revenue of the Yukon country exceeds its cost, or has up to the present time, by about $200,000.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Who paid that?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The men who purchased supplies and brought in their mining material.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—From the United States.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It does not matter where it comes from, the revenue gets into the public treasury, and my hon. friend does not keep his attention upon what the inhabitants that were going into this country were aiming at, and furnishing facilities for a larger number to go in, in order that the people of the country might have their burdens lessened by the contributions that were made by those who were a transitory population. Instead of doing what I have pointed out, my hon. friend proposes to dissipate the energies of this country and to endeavour to entice men to go where they are not likely to go at all. If you had a large population going into the Yukon country there are thousands of those people that would, when they get tired of mining, go into the Peace River country, go into British Columbia, scatter over the rest of the Dominion and become permanent inhabitants of this country. Here was an opportunity, when the people were coming of their own accord and when gold was the attractive force that was drawing them into this country, to secure a larger flow of population into this country than we were likely to get under other circumstances. My hon. friend throws that away and talks of finding a market in the Klondike country for the products of the Peace River country where there are no inhabitants yet, and where men would have to be for two or three years before they would do more than produce what is necessary for their maintenance, and he expects by a dilatory process of that sort to secure the trade of that country that will find other channels and other connections long before his enterprise could be fairly set on foot, and when the opportunity that occurs to us will have been lost. My hon. friend opposite (Mr. Macdonald) has asked me whether we are proposing this session to avail ourselves of the proposal of British Columbia to contribute $4,000 a mile. That contribution proposed by British Columbia, I understand, is not so much a gift, a bonus to the railway company, as an investment for the government of British Culumbia for revenue purposes. That is the proposition. The government of British Columbia proposes to receive certain profits upon the investment of the railway company. I am not at all sure that a proposal of that sort would produce results, and what is more, supposing we were to come down with a proposition, my hon. friend knows that at this moment the House of Commons, that represents the people of this country, the vast majority of whom are on this side of the Rocky Mountains, are not prepared to make a money contribution. Their assumption was that the Klondike region, into which these people were going and searching for gold, ought to bear the expense of its own government, and ought to be prepared to bear the cost of establishing communication on behalf of the people who go there. I say that that is the feeling and it is a right one. My hon. friend moved the six months' hoist to the proposition the government had made. He has not, up to this hour, indicated, nor have those who voted with him indicated, to the government that any other proposition that the government might submit would be received in any other way than that which they had already submitted and was rejected. My hon. friend knows that that is so. My hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Miller) in speaking not very long ago, called attention to what the House of Lords did under certain circumstances. What was the proposition? They said "we want you to give us certain information before we proceed any further." I could point out a dozen instances wherein the House of Lords have differed from the government and they have indicated what their solution of the difficulty would be. There has been no other solution suggested to us by my hon. friend and those who voted with him, except that they were prepared to establish a railway from the Pacific coast through United States territory. And now my hon. friend has asked me whether we are prepared to make another proposition and I say to my hon. friend I think the government are not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not desire to enter into a discussion of this subject at the same length my hon. friend has, in discussing this question, more particularly at this hour of the night. He has gone over the whole ground, and dealt with the vote that was cast in this House some time ago, as well as the subject that is now before us. I may say, in reference to the speech of the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Power) that I do not think the report merits the condemnation which he has heaped upon it in so unmeasured terms, neither do I believe he was justified in attributing to the hon. member for Shell River——

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not remember having used any unmeasured language.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not know what the hon. gentleman understands by unmeasured language. He accused the hon. chairman of the committee of entering upon this investigation with an animus that led him to certain conclusions.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I quoted his own authority and he admitted that I was right.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I quoted your words, and if you deem it prudent to withdraw them I have no objection. The hon. gentleman was not justified in attributing animus to any member of this House in the course which he may think proper to pursue, whether we agree with him or not. I do not hesitate to say that I do not agree with the hon. gentleman in some of the conclusions at which he has arrived, but I should be very sorry to say that because he has strong convictions on a question which he thinks is in the interest of the country, and places them on record with a fearlessness that does not characterize a great many of the members of the House when they speak, that he should be accused of improper motives——

Hon. Mr. POWER—I rise to a question of order. The hon. gentleman must not make charges of that kind against me. I did not accuse the chairman of improper motives. I said he entered into the inquiry biased, and the hon. gentleman admitted that he did.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman did not use the word biased; he said he entered into the investigation with an animus and that means more than being biased. We are all biased to a certain extent. I do not think my hon. friend the Minister of Justice was justified in the lecture he delivered to the hon. gentleman from British Columbia (Mr. Macdonald). He should remember that when this question was put on the notice paper, the hon. gentleman allowed it to stand, repeating again and again that he would allow it to stand till the consideration of this report was brought before the House, when he would take the opportunity to put the questions. I do not think he acted unfairly, nor could he be accused of interjecting any matter not pertinent to the question before the House. The hon. Minister of Justice said that if he was a praying man, he would offer up a prayer for the hon. gentleman from Monck. I thought at the time that the hon. gentleman from Monck might be thankful that the hon. Minister of Justice was not a praying man, because there is another quotation which reads somewhat in this way: "The prayers of the wicked are an abomination to the Lord, etc." And if that be the case, probably the prayer would not help my hon. friend.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not belong to that class.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hope not. I would not like to say the hon. gentleman did belong to that class. The hon. gentleman from Halifax quoted the terms of the resolution moved by the hon. gentleman from London, and said that this report did not bear out the instructions which well given to the committee. It does not bear it out to the extent I should like to have seen them borne out, and which the evidence would have justified. The resolution asks the committee to inquire into the probable cost of opening up direct communication between the railway system of Canada and the navigable waters of the Yukon. They have given the probably cost, based on the engineers' reports, and the engineers are presumed at least to know what they are talking of. It also says "and also the advantages which would flow therefrom to the trade of Canada." I find one paragraph in this report which declares distinctly that the committee is of the opinion that the trade to an ocean port will so greatly supplement the local intervening trade in the mining regions that such a railway would, beyond doubt, be a self sustaining and profitable one for the trade of Canada. That is carrying out the instructions to the committee at least to that extent; and so far I think the committee were justified in making that statement. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice stated that the witnesses were men who had very little knowledge on which to base the evidence that they gave, because they were not residents of the country except one or two. If my recollection serves me rightly, he indicated that those two belonged to the Geological Survey.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And the bishop.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Hon. Senator Reid lives in the Cariboo district, and has lived there a very long time. Mr. Reid gave no evidence except that which he knew himself of the country in which he lived and through which he had passed, and what he had heard and knew of the country beyond that. That is all he pretends to give. Bishop Grouard, who has since 1862, resided in the Mackenzie Basin, as a missionary, gave very valuable information as to the character of that country. And why did they inquire into the character of the country? So as to ascertain whether a road going exclusively through the North-west Territories would furnish a market for the products of that section of country. My hon. friend said—and so did the hon. gentleman from Halifax—you have land enough—without opening up that section of the country. Why, if that had been the policy pursued by the people of the neighbouring republic and ourselves, so far as the North-west Territories are concerned, we should not have aided in the construction of the lines of railway that now exist in the North-west. Was there not land enough, I should like to know, in Manitoba and the North-west without constructing the road which goes to Dauphin Lake and northward? Was there not land enough to the east and west without building the Edmonton road? Why, the whole policy of every government, having a prairie country in particular to develop, is to construct railroads which are essential to the settlement of the country, for the simple reason that the people cannot get into the country without these roads, and if they do get into the country without them—they are unable to dispose of the products of the soil upon which they settle. Mr. Bostock's knowledge could only be that which any of us could obtain by reading. Mr. Marcus Smith surveyed for months and months, ah, years, in that country, and was occupied in surveying the very route which my hon. friend refers to—the trans-continental route passing through the Yellowhead Pass. I do not think that the Yellowhead Pass—although the time will come when it will be utilized—is the route which should be adopted in order to reach the Yukon territory and the gold-bearing lands of that region, at this moment. Mr. Jennings and Mr. St. Cyr knew precisely what they were talking about. Then we have the evidence of Mr. Pambrun, who was born at Slave Lake and has lived there the whole of his life, a very intelligent Scotchman who knew what he was talking about and could give practical illustrations of the character of the country, and its productive qualities; showing beyond peradventure that the construction of a road by that route would be a great advantage to the country and open up trade. The Minister of Justice, says if you are to build this road we shall have to live a thousand years. I have lived long enough to have heard, when the Canadian Pacific Railway was under consideration, his former leader declare in the Commons, that you could never get trade enough over the Canadian Pacific Railway to pay for greasing the wheels of the trains; I heard him state also that all the wealth of Great Britain was not sufficient to construct the road within ten years. We know how long it took. I heard also Mr. Thompson, a railway man who was then representing Welland, and who had been constructing railways for years, declare that before you could finish the road all the ties at the end first constructed would be rotten before you would be able to run a train over the whole line. We all know how foolish those predictions were, and we believe that the statement made by my hon. friend was quite as fallacious as that made by those who opposed the construction of that great continental railway. As my hon. friend is opposing every scheme which has been proposed to get into the North-west and Klondike country, other than that particular line which the government thought proper to adopt, and which we have every reason to believe was not in the interest of the country. We have the confession to-night of the truth of the statement that most of us made when we addressed the House upon this subject some time ago. The Minister of Justice says: "Does anybody suppose that the bacon and the provisions which are necessary for the sustenance of life in the Yukon district would ever go by this route. Would not the people of Seattle furnish these markets?" Some of us told the hon. gentleman before, that with the bonding system and with the right to enter at Pyramid Harbour and Dyea, and more particularly from Pyramid Harbour, Seattle, Washington Territory and California would compete successfully with any provisions that could be brought across the Rocky Mountains and then shipped to the Yukon district, because we must bear this in mind——

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is mistaken. What I referred to was the proposal to build a sort of pack road at $300 a mile that was to serve for the present purposes, and I say with such a road, according to my hon. friend's theory, we could not at all compete with a railway from Pyramid Harbour into that country from the sea.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is correct to a certain extent, and to a certain extent only. This evidence shows that the greater portion of the route from Edmonton until you reach the navigable waters that would land the cattle and the traveller at Selkirk, the country is capable of sustaining cattle with food when travelling over that route. The hon. gentleman says there would be nothing left but bones. It is evident that he has not paid much attention to the driving of cattle over the prairies. Every one knows, who has given any attention to this subject that you can start at the Rocky Mountains with a herd of cattle and keep them in condition as you drive them to market. I have seen scores of herds of cattle, consisting of hundreds and hundreds in a drove, that were driven from the north of Fort Macleod and from the North Saskatchewan, down to Winnipeg, and they arrived in better condition and fatter than when they started. Why? They take their time. It is true it takes considerable time to do it, but they feed along the road and the exercise which they get and the slowness with which they travel adds to the health of the cattle and improves their value.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—What progress do they make—five miles a day?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Ten to fifteen.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The question of the hon. gentleman from Chatham led me to ask myself if he was not, to use an expression which is perhaps not the best one, "codding?"

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—No, I should like to find out for my own information. I was in earnest.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They travel from ten to fifteen miles a day, at least so says the member from Shell River, and he ought to know.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They could not feed and travel twenty-five miles a day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have been over the prairies and have seen them driving in large numbers at a good rate of speed. I do not know that there are many men who have not lived there who have not seen as many cattle as I have driven long distances. I have some little knowledge of what I am talking about. I am surprised, with the knowledge that my hon. friend has, that he should have repeated the statement he has so often made in this House in reference to what he considers the great national necessity of preventing a road from going into the Klondike district from Pyramid Harbour, or from any point other than the Stikine. You must not forget that when you are at Pyramid Harbour you are no further from Dawson City or Selkirk, than you would be after ascending the Stikine River and journeying the 150 miles of railway to Teslin Lake. Now, what I should like to know is, whether what I have seen in the papers is correct, that the government have, with a majority in the House of Commons at their back, determined that no road shall be built into that country starting from any of these places. They say they cannot prevent the construction of the roads which were chartered last year. We are told by the hon. member from Halifax, and the hon. Secretary of State made a similar statement, that the road through the White Pass, if I remember correctly, is in the course of construction, and will be built, and the statement made to-night by the hon. member from Halifax is that it was not to cost the country one cent. Now, solvent companies offer to build roads from Skagway, or Dyea through the White Pass into the Klondike country, and they offered and pledged themselves to build roads from Pyramid Harbour into the same section of country; one charter was asked for during the present session in the House of Commons in which the company offered to deposit $250,000 as an earnest of their bona fides, if they got the charter to go on with the construction of their road. But no, they were told you shall not build it. Why? Because the Senate of Canada thought proper, in its wisdom, to differ from the ministers of the day as to the propriety of giving away three or four million acres of the gold lands of that country for a road which they all admit never will be utilized as a commercial road. It is a dog-in-the-manger policy of the very worst character. Now I have a little complaint to make, and I will make it now, I had intended to do so some time during the present session. During the discussion upon this question I asked many questions as to the bonding powers which might be conceded by the United States. The reply we generally got was that there were influences at work in Washington for the purpose of preventing any concessions being made; that was repeated over and over again by the Minister of Justice. I at that time asked him who they were, and I challenge him now to produce the slightest tittle of evidence to show that any one from Canada, or any person interested in the construction of any of these roads, used any influence with the congress of the United States, or the committee that sat to inquire into and investigate the question of the entrance into this country, in which they used any influence to prevent the bonding system to its fullest possible extent being extended to Canada. I know it has been stated, and we were accused of disloyalty for so doing, because we doubted the correctness of that statement. All that we do know is that an emissary of the party that is now in power, did go to Washington and interviewed the committee and told them that certain concessions would be made by Canada if they did such and such things. I know my hon. friend opposite me denied pointedly that he went there on behalf of the government. If he did not, I can only say, that it was a piece of presumption on his part at least. I asked if they have any evidence to sustain or substantiate what they said. No answer was given. I asked what concession had been made. We got no answer; though according to the document which has been placed in my hands by the Secretary of State himself—and he was courteous to send me a copy of it when I asked him—it appears that on the 2nd of February, the bonding concessions by the United States were offered to Canada and they themselves had published it in a circular. Since that period an Act has been passed by the Congress of the United States granting all the privileges necessary. Two of its clauses read as follows:

Sec. 13.—That the native born citizens of the Dominion of Canada shall be accorded to the said district of Alaska the same mining rights and privileges accorded to the citizens of the United States in British Columbia and North-west Territory by the laws of the Dominion of Canada or the local laws, rules and regulations; but no greater rights shall be thus accorded than citizens of the United States or persons who have declared their intention to become such, may enjoy in the said district of Alaska and the Secretary of the Interior shall from time to time promulgate and enforce rules and regulations to carry this provision into effect

Sec. 14.—That under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury the privileges of entering wares and merchandise in bond or of placing them in bonding warehouses in any of the ports in the district of Alaska and of withdrawing the same for exportation to any place in British Columbia or the North-west Territories without payment of duty, is hereby granted to the government of the Dominion of Canada and its citizens or citizens of the United States, and to persons who have declared their intention to become such whenever and so long as it shall appear to the satisfaction of the President of the United States, who shall ascertain and declare the fact by proclamation that corresponding privileges have been and are being granted by the Dominion of Canada in respect of goods, wares and merchandise passing through the territory of the Dominion of Canada to any point in the district of Alaska from any point in said district."

That is all we could possibly ask. They have by statute applied the same principle, and the same rule that governed the bonding of foreign goods which is to enter their country to pass again out of the country, as is conceded to the goods which arrived from England or any other portion of the world and are entered at Boston, New York or Portland, and bonded through to Canada without the payment of duty. So that we have there all the advantages that can possibly arise from the construction of any railway, through our own territory, so long as that remains the law of the land. I believe, just so long as we extend the same privileges to the people of the United States, a privilege which has been extended to them through the whole Dominion, and privileges which no man of the party we belongs to has ever thought of repealing or taking from them, for the reason that we believe, situated geographically as we are, that it is to the advantage of both countries that there should be the freest intercourse through either of our countries from one place to the other, no matter whether the goods are from Canada or from any another point. Now, with these facts before us, why should the government coerce—because it is nothing more or less than coercion—their supporters into a policy to reject and refuse the construction of railways into that country by capitalists who do not ask Canada for one cent? I frankly say I would like to see a road built exclusively through Canadian territory. My hon. friend says "you of the opposition rejected such a proposition which the government made, and you failed in your duty to suggest a remedy." It is the first time I have heard that theory advocated by gentlemen governing a country under responsible government. If the hon. gentleman thinks that the members of this side of the House could propound a scheme by which the object he has in view could be accomplished, and a road could be constructed exclusively through British territory without being subject to the interference of any other country in the world, all he has got to do is to change sides. and we will soon propound a policy which I have no doubt, if he is not actuated by the same party spirit of which he accuses this side of the House, he would adopt. I regret to hear him accuse the hon. gentleman from Monck and those who voted with him of being actuated by partisan views. As far as I am individually concerned, I deny that accusation in toto. Speaking for myself—and I believe I can speak for every member who recorded a vote—I never allowed partisanship to guide me in the course I pursed. My hon. friend may laugh just as he pleases. I say distinctly and positively that I believe the arrangement with Mackenzie & Mann was a most improvident and iniquitous bargain, and as such opposed it, and would have opposed it under any circumstances, and I believe the hon. gentlemen in this House are quite capable of forming opinions on questions of this important character apart altogether from their party predilections. If they cannot they are not worthy to hold seats in the Senate. The hon. gentleman has no more right to lay that accusation to our charge than we have to retort by saying precisely the same thing of himself and his supporters. What would the hon. gentleman think if I told him that some members of his own party declared the whole scheme was iniquitous, but that they would vote for it as they did not wish to injure the party? A number intimated the same thing to me, but party fidelity outweighed their better judgment. We are in a position that it is not necessary to act in such a manner, for the simple reason that we are not amenable to the ministers of the day.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, let the hon. gentleman say hear, hear. It is true notwithstanding.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, it is quite true.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Nor are we in a position to be coerced by outside influences, consequently we are in a position to approach the consideration of questions of magnitude affecting its welfare and progress, apart altogether from the party bias which the hon. gentleman has accused us of possessing. When it comes to a party question I confess I am just as apt to go the same length as my hon. friend, but not any further.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Oh, yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Thirty years of parliamentary life with my hon. friend has convinced me that his better judgment would often have led him to a different conclusion than that at which he arrived. Aye, more than that, his speeches have indicated that his better judgment would have led him to a different conclusion were he not trammelled by partisanship to support his party.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I could quote from his speeches, the tenor of which would have led to a different conclusion than that of the recording of the hon. gentleman's vote. So strong were some of them that my hon. friend from Marshfield, myself, and others, who were discussing these questions before the electors quoted them as an evidence of the correctness of the position which we occupied. The Minister of Justice's position is well illustrated by the cow, which gave a pail of milk, and then kicked it over. I have occupied a longer time than I intended but I thought an opportunity might not occur again of bringing this matter of the bonding privileges which have been granted to us under the notice of the House, as it is well the country should know the facts, and that they should know also that if any starvation is to take place in that country the responsibility rests on the heads of the hon. gentlemen opposite who refused to allow a road to be constructed out of the pockets of capitalists themselves, and that they must bear the responsibility when they go before the people, if anything of that kind occurs.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I desire to protest very strongly, on my own behalf and I think on behalf of a great many members of this House, against the language made use of by the hon. Minister of Justice when replying to the question of my hon. friend on my left (Mr. Macdonald, B.C.) as to whether it was the intention of the government to take any further steps for the construction of a railway from the coast into Yukon. The language of the hon. gentleman conveyed to my mind a grave imputation on the motives and conduct of the members of this House. I do not know whether he intended it or not. The hon. gentleman stated in effect that it was not likely that the government would bring forward any measure for the construction of a road from the coast to the Yukon because they knew it would be rejected by this House.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I did not say that I knew it would be rejected. I said we had no assurance that it would be supported.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I think the language used was a little stronger than that; at all events, the hon. gentleman must admit that in effect it was that it would be useless to bring forward any such measure as there was no chance of its passing in this House.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We would be taking a leap in the dark.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I think it is only fair to recollect that when that measure was brought in we were given to understand that we must take it as a whole or reject it altogether. That was put plainly enough by the hon. gentleman. We were to take it with that enormous land grant of three or four million of acres for a railway one hundred and fifty miles long, which would be perfectly useless six months in the year, with exclusive privileges granted to the contractors for a number of years, and a considerable difference between the royalty to be paid by them and that collected from the miners. And that was a bill, as I have already said, which we were told very distinctly we must accept as it was brought in or not at all. I am free to say, in addition to what my hon. friend on my right has said just now, that I am perfectly satisfied that the large majority of the members of this House were anxious to pass this bill if it could be so altered in its details as to make it one which they could conscientiously vote for. I can say for myself, and I can speak also for many of my friends, that we were extremely anxious that if it were posssible in any way, that some measure providing for the means of communication between the seaboard and the Yukon, through British territory, should be carried through the House during the present session, but we were met on the introduction of the bill with the assurance that we must take it as it stood or not at all. I suppose that now there would be nothing indiscreet in mentioning also that some of us had conversations with the contractors themselves, and when we suggested that the enormous land grant was the great stumbling block in our way, we were given to understand that the land grant was the essential thing. So that in every way we were met with difficulties of that kind which we could not see our way out of or could conscientiously overcome. I suppose I may say now also that many of us would have preferred, instead of the motion for the rejection of the bill in the shape in which it was brought before the House by the hon. gentleman from British Columbia, that it should have been coupled with some declaration that while we objected to the enormous land grant we would have been glad to entertain any amended bill if our views in that respect could be met. I do not think it is fair that it should go out to the country that in the opinion of the leader of the House we are so actuated by partisan ties and feelings that no matter what measure of this kind was sent up again from the House of Commons and introduced by the government, it was hopeless to endeavour to carry it because the Senate would not accept it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—With regard to the matter brought to the attention of the House by the hon. leader of the opposition and the hon. gentleman from York, when I said during the discussion of the Yukon Bill that the bill was incapable of amendment, I was speaking of what was the law of parliament in the matter, that there was no difference between the appropriation of land and the appropriation of money, and the revenues of the Crown and the lands of the Crown were exactly the same. It was in reference to that that I said the bill was not open to amendment by this House. I was not at all saying that this House had not the right to make a declaration or suggestion in any direction. I was speaking simply with regard to the law of parliament. My hon. friend said the government had no right to accept a suggestion from those who dissent from the measures of the government and he said if we were incapable of proposing a policy that the majority of the two Houses would support we might retire and he would find a solution. Let me say to my hon. friend that it is all very well to speak in that way when his party are in a majority in this House, and that fact cannot be ignored no matter how moderately that proposition may be put. What I wish to call the attention of this House to is that this was not a question of conflict between the government and this House. That is not the position. That measure was a conflict between the House of Commons and this House. The government enjoyed the confidence of the House of Commons. On this question the government spoke the views of the House of Commons. The measure was carried through the House of Commons, and when this House assumed the responsibility of rejecting a measure that related to the revenues of the Crown, I say that the House was under a constitutional obligation to point out the precise grounds on which they dissented from the measure of the government, and on what grounds they would accept or approve of that measure or what modifications they would require. Look at every measure that is brought forward by the government in the House of Lords. If it is one that is carried through by a majority in the House of Commons and they are prepared, under any circumstances, to accept or approve of such a measure, the House of Lords point out the grounds on which they differ or dissent from the views of the government and what changes they require in order that that measure may receive the support of the House of Lords.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Did they do that in the case of the Home Rule Bill?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly not; because they, in violation of the rule which had been in force, rejected the Home Rule Bill altogether. Why? Because, they said, you cannot make any modification of the Home Rule Bill which would make it acceptable to us.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Precisely the same in this case.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Precisely the same my hon. friend says. Then my hon. friend does not stand in the same position as the hon. gentlemon from York, because the hon. member from York intimated that he was ready to accept modifications. He thought the grant was too large. That was not disclosed to the House. But the gentleman from Prince Edward Island says he was absolutely opposed to the measure altogether, and the hon. gentleman from Monck also spoke in opposition to it, and said "we can do without a road very well."

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—No, I did not say that. The hon. gentleman cannot find in the Debates that I said it. But evidently we do not want it now. The thing has proven itself.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not going to discuss the matter further; it was not a question between the government in this House and the majority of this House. It was a question between the House of Commons and this chamber.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I understood my hon. friend to say a moment ago that I had expressed myself as entirely opposed to any road into that country. I was not paying the closest attention, but I think the hon. gentleman made that statement. I do not desire to comment on it, till I know whether the hon. gentleman did make the statement and adheres to it that I had expressed myself as entirely opposed to any road to the Yukon.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No. I said just now that you expressed yourself as opposed to that government bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No, this is the first time I have spoken.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—When my hon. friend said the Home Rule Bill was rejected and no indication given as to what the House of Lords would accept, I said yes, because the House of Lords were absolutely opposed to any home rule concession whatever and the hon. gentleman from Marshfield said "precisely the same here."

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I said that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The statement was that the majority of this House had rejected the government bill absolutely and for the same reason.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I now understand the reference the hon. gentleman made. But when the hon. minister introduced the measure he distinctly stated that it was a measure which this House could not amend.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I stated that, and I stated the reason. It was with regard to a monetary consideration.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I was of the same opinion that it was a measure which we could not amend, because it dealt with a land grant and it represented the public wealth and could not be distinguished constitutionally from a money vote.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not to the fullest extent ; we could have reduced it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I held that view when the hon. gentleman introduced the bill. But there were other respects in which it was not capable of amendment. It contained a contract, and it could not be amended, as the hon. gentleman knows very well, by any motion made in this House, like an ordinary bill. There would have to be a supplementary contract, as was submitted in the House of Commons with regard to some changes the government secured which were made there. In all these respects there was no course left open to those who disapproved of the bill but to record a straight vote against it. When the hon. minister makes these general charges against members on this side of the House, that we not only voted against that bill but that we never gave any indication or expression of our opinion to favour any route or any other measure, if the hon. gentleman would remember, or if he would take the trouble to read the debates he will find that in some of the observations I made on the question myself in the debate on the address I stated my views very distinctly in favour of railway communication in some way with that country : that I even spoke more favourably of the Teslin Lake route than I would now, after the information and light that have been thrown upon it, and that I then made an appeal to the gentlemen in the government to bring down a new measure, or to try to secure modifications of that measure. I went so far as to say, rather unguardedly, that they should bring down a measure which honest men could vote for. I qualified the remark by saying that honest men might vote for that one but they would be very misguided and that the measure was so one-sided in its character that they could not possibly expect it to receive the support of enlightened members in this House. That was the view I took then, and I think it was the view held by a majority of those who voted against that bill. I fully agree with the hon. leader of the opposition in condemning the doctrine that b cause a majority of the members of this House could not conscientiously support the arbitrary proposition which the government brought down, a proposition which they themselves told us we could not amend, the government's responsibility with regard to that country was at an end.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is the course indicated by the hon. gentleman. They brought down a measure which their own friends all over the country and the independent press without exception have condemned. I know in my own province, when I was visiting there, that friends of the government, many prominent men, told me that they highly approved of the action of the Senate in throwing out that bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is the reason you were so successful there.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend finds some way to divert attention. I may tell my hon. friend that in some meetings in Prince Edward Island, where I was, his friends avoided this question. They said they were in power and there were public works for them if they would only support the government for the next three years, and they did not want to talk over public questions at all. They avoided public questions and talked of the public works which were to be constructed. I simply rose, on the present occasion, to put myself right because my hon. friend chose to point me out as one who had taken an absolute ground against any reasonable measure, and I think I have expressed myself sufficiently.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B. C.)—I did not catch the reply to my question. Will the hon. minister tell me was it to the effect that there is no intention to take any steps to open a route to the Yukon?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We are not taking any action this session.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Where is the question of urgency we heard so much talk of a few weeks ago? The urgency that was required then is required now. Here are 400 troops and commissioners and judges and other people to be fed and looked after, and now the government take a sulky fit and will not move a hand. Here is the small province of British Columbia offering $1,600,000, and the hon. minister endeavours to belittle that grant by saying it is an investment.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is a loan.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Whatever it is, the agents of Mackenzie & Mann offer to accept it and say that if they give them that they will sign a contract and go on with the work. They wrote to the Premier of British Columbia and told him they were ready to go on, if the subsidy were given. Whether it is a grant or a loan, if the contractors are satisfied what is the difference?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I am told by a friend of the contractors here that if the government of this country give a similar amount of $4,000 a mile they will go on with the work. That would be a very small thing for this government to do. It is a matter they should deal with at once. The hon. minister said no person in this House made a counter proposition in this matter. Why in the House of Commons and in this House the government were told, over and over again by members that they would support a reasonable money grant to build that road.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But the House of Commons said they would not give any money, and this House said it was to have its own way.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The government were told a reasonable money grant would be supported and a matter of $3,000,000 at three per cent would not amount to much for this country. It would be about $90,000 a year and the road could have been built. We are told just now by the hon. minister that the Crown lands and Crown revenues are similar. I take him at his word, and if so the revenues of the Yukon would build the road. If the revenue this year is $600,000 that is equal to a capital of twenty millions. The government would retain the land and have this revenue, and they can get all the money necessary to build the road from the revenues of the country. That is a far wiser scheme than giving way the goose that lays the golden egg. If you throw the land away you can never get it back; but if you keep it, you can build the road from the revenue and still have the land. It does not take much common sense to see that. It requires no counter proposition. A scheme so simple as that is open to the government. They know the value of the country, and the value of the land and yet they wish to throw it away.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I took no part in the discussion of the bill which was rejected by this House by a large majority, but I listened most attentively to all the speeches delivered while I was here—I think most if not all of them—and I can say that the impression left on my mind was that this House was not actuated by partisan motives in rejecting the bill, but that every speaker, almost without exception on my side of the House, stated that he was not to be influenced by partisan feelings, and that he was considering the scheme and proposal before the House on its merits and was prepared to discuss it on that principle only. I, of course, hold that the Senate has an absolute right, and not only the right but it is an essential feature of its very existence, that it should be independent of partisan motives, and not only of partisan motives but of the popular feeling of the majority of the day, and should reject or approve as it sees fit, upon general principles. Now, I was personally rather averse to the absolute terms of the six months' hoist, which was ultimately carried in this House, and I ventured to suggest to the hon. member who leads the opposition, and to one or two other members, an alternative motion which would, in my opinion, have been preferable to the motion which was ultimately carried. That, as modified by my suggestion, was to this effect, that this House objected to various terms of the proposal then before it, but was desirous of putting on record the facts that it is not opposed to the measure for any other reason than what it considered its intrinsic demerits as a scheme; and while it recognized the importance of improved means of access to that country it was prepared to give its most careful consideration and approval, if possible, to any reasonable scheme which might be brought before it. I submitted that suggestion to the hon. leader of this side of the House, and also to some others, and it met with his approval. I am bound to say he expressed himself as entirely in favour of it, and the hon. member from Prince Edward Island, in my hearing also approved of it, so that the absolute charge that this House is only influenced by motives which I must describe as unworthy is not, to my mind, proved. It was ultimately rejected, I think possibly by a great many because the impression remained that this House had only the right either to accept or reject without modification. I could not hold that view myself, but I was anxious, as I have already said, to have it put on record that this House was not swayed by any unworthy motives, and was prepared to consider a reasonable scheme. I desire to take no part whatever in the discussion of the merits of the various routes to the Yukon. It seems to me that would be out of the question at the present moment. I must say this, however, that if there was anything whatever in the statements of the influx of large numbers of settlers to that country and the possible impediments to access during the winter, that the Edmonton route would recommend itself to me largely as a matter to be kept in view and in the future probably carried out at our leisure. I had that opinion and I have that opinion yet, and if it were not that the line which was aided by parliament last session is now in progress of construction, I should look with some apprehension to the condition of things in the district, which cannot be helped by the taking up of the Edmonton route only or by the construction of a trail over which cattle can be driven, for I think the ultimate construction of a railway to some point to the eastward is a matter of years and not of months, and we are called upon to consider a matter of immediate importance. Holding these views I am only jealous at the moment for the reputation of this House for approaching such questions in a spirit of moderation and justice and of strict responsibility to the best interests of the country only ; and I should be ashamed myself and I certainly would be very much surprised if any considerable number of the majority of this House were influenced by any other motives.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—The hon. Minister of Justice has made a reference to the Hon. Mr. Reid, and I cannot allow that remark to pass without replying to it. I merely said that the Hon. Mr. Reid lived at Quesnelle on the Ashcroft Road, and he had the same interest in developing the Ashcroft route as hon. gentlemen from Edmonton, have in developing the Edmonton route, and as other hon. gentlemen have in developing the coast route. I would not like Mr. Reid to think I had taken any unfair advantage of him. I was struck with one thing which the hon. gentleman said, that the revenue derived would be sufficient to meet all expenditure. The trend of his remarks appeared to me that he was desirous of having the coast trade of the United States market developed for the sake of revenue that the government was going to derive in the development of that country. It is contrary to all economic policy in the government of that country, it is certainly a misapplication of the ideas of protection if it was intended in that way. With regard to the discussion that we have had this evening, it has been a very interesting one and the hon. leader of the opposition has fully replied to the adverse remarks in in regard to the matter.

The motion was carried on a division.

THE MILITARY EXPEDITION TO THE YUKON.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the Senate adjourn.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether the government have any information as to the progress which is being made by the volunteers who have gone to the Yukon. I am induced to ask that question from a telegram of the 31st May from Vancouver which appeared in the Ottawa Free Press of yesterday.

VANCOUVER, B.C., May 31.—Mr. Williamson, well known in Toronto, returned from the Stikine yesterday. He accounts the route not promising. Fifteen hundred are waiting along the river. Two thousand are waiting at Glenora. The Yukon troops are there, stalled, and will wait another month before proceeding. It takes five days to go the twelve miles from Glenora to Telegraph Creek. Of 84 miles from Telegraph Creek, 50 miles of almost impassable bog commences. The government is corduroying the bog.

Is there any truth in the statement as to their progress ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have heard nothing in regard to it.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, 2nd June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'Clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

SONS OF ENGLAND BENEFIT SOCIETY'S BILL.

WITHDRAWN.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN, from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, returned Bill (122) "An Act to incorporate the Supreme Grand Lodge of the Sons of England Benefit Society," and reported that the promoters of the bill desire to withdraw it.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL moved the adoption of the report.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I have a few words to say in connection with the withdrawal of this bill, for I wish to put my views on record. I am sorry that this society is the first to suffer when the crisis came, but the time has arrived when the Senate is coming to its senses and to some appreciation of its duty in connection with insurance in these fraternal societies. That we have been doing business too loosely is well known, and I hope that this instance will be the means of inducing the government to take action next session and introduce a measure to protect those who are insured in these societies. I am sure the policy holders would be benefited by such legislation and would uphold the government for giving them protection. That these societies have been doing loose business is very generally known. We have evidence of the fact, evidence of a character which cannot be denied. The inspector of insurance appeared before us and gave us proof that some of these companies—this particular company amongst the number—were charging only fifty per cent of the cost of carrying insurance. No doubt many others of this class of insurance companies are doing business in an equally loose manner. For that reason it is the duty of the government and of parliament to protect those who have been induced to go into these societies in order to get cheap insurance. Nothing could be more deceptive than to have people insure in such societies with the expectation that when they grow old and infirm they will be protected; and suddenly to be made aware of the fact that the society to which they have been paying premiums for years has gone to the wall. That should not be allowed to go on any longer, and for this reason I want to put my views on record that I, as one individual who has been looking into this matter for years, am opposed to such fraternal insurance companies. If they go into the insurance business let them see that there is a sufficient amount of money paid in to insure the safety of the policy holders in the society.

The motion was agreed to.

ALBERTA YUKON RAILWAY, NAVIGATION AND MINING COMPANY'S BILL.

REMISSION OF FEES.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The promoters of Bill (H) "An Act incorporating the Alberta and Yukon Railway, Navigation and Mining Company," having asked leave to withdraw the said bill and requested that the fees paid thereon, less the cost of printing and translation be refunded, I beg to move that the Senate comply with their request. This is the bill known as the Hamilton-Smith bill, with which this House is somewhat acquainted. The government to-day, in the Railway Committee of the Commons, announced their policy of opposing all Yukon bills west of the Rocky Mountains. Hence this bill falls under general condemnation of such bills. The promoters therefore, in view of that fact, withdraw the bill, and as it originated in this House I make this motion to-day.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What reason did the government give for stopping all those bills?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I regret to say that I did not hear the reason advanced by the Minister of Railways. I have no doubt the hon. Minister of Justice will be able to communicate that fact to the House, if desirable. I was not in the Railway Committee at that time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Neither was I.

The motion was agreed to.

DELAYED RETURNS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should like to ask my hon. friend the Secretary of State, what progress is being made with the papers regarding the Soulanges Canal ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have asked again for those papers, but have not received them yet. I cannot control the clerks in the other departments.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am aware that the hon. gentleman cannot control the clerks in the other departments, yet this House is entitled to the courtesy of being furnished with papers when an address is presented. I am informed by parties conversant with the matter that the return can be easily prepared in three or four hours. I asked for the papers some three or four weeks ago, and I would again impress on the Secretary of State the desirability of having the papers brought down at an early date. I do not desire to direct the attention of the House every day to the fact of their not being brought down.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I suppose the only excuse is that during session there are a great many more demands on the clerks than usual. I cannot do more than make the request to the department.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The session is rapidly approaching its close, and if they are not prepared by the close of the session my object is frustrated.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole on consideration of Bill (16) "An Act to repeal the Electoral Franchise Act and to further amend the Dominion Elections Act."

(In the Committee.)

On subsection 8 of clause 10.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not going to oppose this, but I stated at the time when this clause was under discussion, that I thought it would require a very large quantity of type to be kept standing. I have made inquiry since, and perhaps I may astonish my hon. friend when I tell him that it will require 90 tons, or 180,000 pounds; that is all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have it already in hand, the ordinary type exists, and I am advised by Dr. Dawson that the same type will do.

The subsection was adopted.

On subsection 10.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—So far as this clause is concerned, I should like to have an explanation before I am prepared to vote upon it. The clause says:

> So long as and whenever, for any reason, a certified copy of any list of voters as finally revised has not been transmitted to or received by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery pursuant to the provisions of this section, the original and legal list for Dominion elections shall be the same as that for provincial elections.

I consider that it might be liable to this operation. We will suppose after the provincial lists have been made out, and a copy has been handed over for revision for the federal elections, and a couple of hundred names are added under the provisions of this bill of disqualified office holders, which would make the lists, of course, very different from the list as prepared for provincial elections, and suppose through any collusion this revised list, with these 200 extra names on, is not transmitted to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery in time—it is quite possible that such a thing might take place—then the election would be run upon the original provincial lists which had not been revised and minus the additional 200 names that had been added. The clause is capable of working an injustice in this way if the officers are bad enough to do it. I do not see a necessity for the clause, and the House ought not to adopt it, for it is clearly liable to this operation. The officer whose duty it is to send that list on to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery may, through collusion with one side or the other, send the list astray. I do not say that there was any collusion in the Russell election case, but we know that the papers went astray in that case, and the result was an election had to take place on another day with very great advantage, I have no doubt, to the party who won it. But leaving that aside, if the officers whose duty it is to send these lists on to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery sent them astray, the election would have to be run upon the original provincial list, minus all those names which were added.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that he is mistaken in that, because subsection 2 of section 6 makes special provision for those parties voting, and the object of this provision is simply this: the whole experience of the Dominion in every constituency of it is that there is a very great change in the voters' lists, certainly at least ten per cent, and even though my hon. friend were right in his view—and I do not think he is—the number of office holders that would be left off would be insignificant as compared with the number of persons who would be left off by retaining the old list. Having adopted the provincial franchise, the list prepared every year must be very nearly a perfect list for the Dominion elections. But my hon. friend will see that this clause, as it stands, does not disqualify the class of persons for whom he speaks, because if you look at subsection 2 of clause 6, you will find there a special provision for those persons voting, even though their names do not appear on this list.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I do not see it as clearly as my hon. friend does. I do not think that the circumstances that I refer to are met by subsection 2 of clause 6. That subsection would enable a person whose name was inadvertently left off the list to cast his vote, but the case to which I refer is where the name has been intentionally left off the revised list but not to provincial lists when the revised lists have gone astray. There is no provision for putting the name of such a voter on the list for Dominion elections, and subsection 2 of clause 6 does not apply, in my opinion, to the lists when they are used under subsection 10 of clause 10. I shall not press the matter just now, but before the bill gets its third reading there will be an opportunity of further considering it and, if necessary, making an amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The object of the hon. gentleman from Richmond would be met if some words were added making this subsection of clause 10 subject to the provisions of subsection 2 of clause 6.

Subsection 10 was adopted.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—At this stage of the bill, I desire briefly to occupy the attention of the House while I make a few remarks in favour of the amendment of which I have given notice. I need not inform hon. gentlemen that I believe a large majority of the members of this House are opposed to the principle on which this bill is based—that is, the regulation of the lists on which Dominion elections are to be held, by the provincial legislatures. Notwithstanding that, we have not thought proper to interfere with the policy of the government in carrying out what they consider the main feature of this bill, and we have allowed the measure to go to a second reading without making any attempt to change the qualification of electors either by adding to or taking away a single vote from the lists under which the voting will hereafter be held. We have given the government completely its own way in this respect. I think it must be clearly the wish of all of us—and I think it should be the wish of the government—that, having gone so far, we ought to see that the machinery under which the election law is to be made applicable to Dominion elections should be as perfect as possible, and that it should afford all the safeguards which are necessary in order to secure a true and impartial voters' list. In the province of Nova Scotia our system of preparing the local lists is this: In the first place, the assessors for the county make out assessment rolls. Afterwards revisers are appointed in each section of the municipality, and they revise these assessment rolls and make out the local list from them. From the decision of the revising officers in all cases there is an appeal to the sheriff of the county. This whole organization, I may say, hon. gentleman is a party organization. In the first place the appraiser of property in the different counties is appointed generally on party grounds, one party or the other has the control of the municipal organization, and it is a peculiar feature in the municipal organizations of Nova Scotia that often, even where the Conservatives are in the majority in Dominion politics, the opposition manage, in the most cases, to get control of the municipal organizations. I think they are more active, more vigilant, and work harder in order to secure that end than the Conservative party do. The result is they get complete control of the revision of the lists of the provincial legislatures, and I think that is one of the causes why, in the province of Nova Scotia, since confederation, with the exception of one term, the Liberal party has been in power. They have always had the control of what might be called the local machine for the revision of the electoral lists for the provincial elections. With regard to a statement which has been made elsewhere; that the election law of Nova Scotia has been a long time on the statute-book, and that the people seem to be satisfied with it and have never made any attempt to change it, I may say that since confederation the Conservative party has never had but one term of office in the local legislature. That was under the Holmes-Thompson government and that government was perfectly imbecile to pass any legislation whatever to remedy either municipal, electoral or other grievances, in consequence of the fact that they had a hostile majority in the legislative council. On one occasion a bill was introduced during that regime to qualify Dominion officials who were disqualified by the local legislature. It passed the House of Assembly by a large majority but was summarily, I may say, kicked out of the legislative council after about fifteen or twenty-five minutes consideration. So that the government of that day considered it would be folly to attempt any amendments of a constitutional character when they were sure to be met with the hostility of the legislative council and be defeated in that body. I say the Liberal party in Nova Scotia are generally more vigilant in securing the local organization than the Conservative party. They appoint appraisers of property. They appoint revisers, and as the local government has been in power nearly all the time since confederation, nearly all the sheriffs are Liberals and many of them are violent partisans. In the other House an incident took place which had a speaking effect on my mind. When it was asked how many Conservatives had been appointed to the office of sheriff of Nova Scotia of late years, the Minister of Finance said: "I rejoice to say that since 1872 not one Conservative has been appointed to the office of sheriff." Now, when a gentleman removed from party politics to the high position that that gentleman occupies in the other branch would show so much party spirit in a little incident of that kind, you can imagine the spirit of party that must exist in the rank and file among the coterie in Nova Scotia. It is for this reason that we have no confidence in the machinery by which the local electoral lists are to be made, the lists upon which the members of the House of Commons are to be elected. I am going to ask by this amendment that you give us the same protection in Nova Scotia—and I am going to speak only of Nova Scotia, because although my motion includes New Brunswick and Manitoba there are gentlemen from those provinces who will speak for them. I make a request which I think will commend itself to the sense of justice of every man who hears me and every man in this country that you give us the same security that the law which these gentlemen are putting on the statute-book will be honestly administered. And I am only going to ask the same protection and safeguards that are enjoyed in that respect in Ontario and Quebec. In Ontario there is an appeal from the lists made out by the revisers to the County Court judges. In the province of Quebec there is a similar appeal to the Superior Court judges, and I believe there is a similar appeal in British Columbia to the County Court judges. All I ask by my amendment, is that you give us a similar protection in Nova Scotia. I cannot understand how any one can oject to a proposition so fair and reasonable. The object of my amendment is to improve the bill. There is no fair minded man who will say that, after we make this amendment to the bill, it will not improve it and therefore I cannot see on what ground there can be any opposition to it. The sheriff in former times, up to 1883 in Nova Scotia was chiefly a ministerial office, but where he had judicial functions he was in a much better position to discharge them than the sheriff of the present day. Up to 1883, under the law of Nova Scotia the sheriffs were appointed on the recommendation of a committee of the judges and the executive council, and they were generally men of a superior type. In 1883 the law was altered by which the local executive, in order to get complete control of the municipal machinery, passed a law taking the appointment of sheriffs into its own hands, and since that time the sheriffs are appointed by the local executive and, as a rule, these men are partisans. I will just call your attention to a letter which was addressed to the leader of the opposition in the other House during the present session, to show the way in which the law operates in Nova Scotia in some places. This letter was written by an ex-sheriff of the county of Victoria and reads :

DEAR SIR,—The lists of this county were cooked, so that between 350 and 400 Conservatives were left off the list, and no one expected an election. Then they sprang the election. I am credibly informed it was the case in all the other counties. I was sheriff of this county for ten years, and because I did fair and would do no crooked work for the Liberals, I was dismissed and a man put in who has now to answer to a court of law for his crooked work. He did away with the reviser's lists in two districts and made two new lists after cutting some 70 Conservatives off, and it is in the hands of a man like this that the pure Liberals want to put our lists.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—To whom is that letter addressed ?

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It is a letter addressed by an ex-sheriff of the county of Victoria to Sir Charles Tupper and read in the House of Commons. I am sorry that my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McDonald) is nothere, because he had in his own experience a case fully as bad as this. My hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, stated a case in his personal experience, but the case of my hon. friend from Cape Breton is ten times as bad as that. It was a case in which he called at the office of the individual who had charge of the lists, on the last day for adding names, with a list of names to put on under a certain qualification, and was told that they could not be put on. He went away, and the next morning came to the office and found that 200 or 300 names had been put on by his opponent, Mr. Newton McCoy, by the very individual who had told him such names could not be put on, as he could not interfere with the list. All I ask by my amendment is to protect us from such unfair dealing as this, that you give us an appeal to the judiciary, the same as is enjoyed in Ontario and Quebec, and I do not think any reasonable man can object to that. There may be some objections to my motion; it may be said, and has been said, elsewhere, that we are interfering with the principle of the bill, that it is the intention of the bill to bring the local laws into operation in order to furnish us with a Dominion franchise. If that had been adhered to, there might be some force in this contention. But I wish to call attention to the fact that this no longer is the case. In the first place, I wish to say my amendment does not add a vote to or take away a vote from the voters' list. It does not interfere with the enfranchising or disfranchising of any one. But the Nova Scotia law has been interfered with, for provision is made in this bill for adding a very large class of voters. Now, how can it be said that we ought to adhere strictly to the procedure under the local laws in preparing the voters' list when the very principle on which the voters' list is founded has been so much interfered with by the bill itself and by the policy of the government ? There is no sense in that argument. If they had not interfered with it, there might be some force in it, but whether sufficient to induce the House not to interfere it is unnecessary for me to say. Then it is said my amendment will work confusion. I cannot see how it will work confusion. When the lists are made out for the local legislature, there are two copies : one is set aside for the provincial elections, the other is handed over for the Dominion elections to be revised under this law. We do not touch the list for the provincial election in revising the lists for the federal election. We merely deal with the list that is intended for the federal elections. How, therefore, can there be any confusion ? Another objection has been started, namely, that there is doubt whether parliament has legal power to deal with this question as contemplated by this amendment. That doubt was started in the other House, but no lawyer of authority ventured to assume the responsibility of standing by it. The Prime Minister spoke on it and showed how dangerous it might be and what evil might accrue from it, and all that sort of thing, but took very great care not to commit himself as a lawyer to the statement that it was not within the power of this parliament to so amend the Act as any one will see who refers to his remarks. I wish to caution the House against any use that may be made of these general assertions. It is the policy of the promoter of a bill, when he has not solid arguments to depend on, to raise imaginary arguments to endeavour to frighten people with some injury or harm that is possible to occur if such a course be pursued, and very often the unthinking are frightened ; but every thinking man who revolves the case in his own mind can see whether there is solid foundation for this sort of argument or not. Now, when we had the Yukon Bill before us, my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, told us—he had not much real argument to stand on in that discussion and every allowance should be made to him if he drew on his imagination to some extent—but he told us that what we did was a dangerous thing to do; we did not know what we were doing; there might be starvation and rebellion up there, and the whole country might pass from British control; and we were threatened with dire disasters which would occur unless we passed that bill. We were not frightened by those arguments, and we did not pass that bill, and we have had no starvation or rebellion in the Yukon district. Things are going on pretty well there, so well that the government has not considered it necessary to introduce another Yukon Bill. I think, under all these circumstances, the committee will be disposed to pass this amendment. There is no argument to be urged against it. The objections that have been urged are merely the three that I have just stated, namely, that it would create confusion, that it is doubtful whether we have the power to do it, and that it would interfere with the provincial system which it is the desire of this bill to adopt. Now, with regard to the system prevailing in Ontario and Quebec let me read just a few words—I am not exactly in order in reading the debates of the present session, but perhaps the committee will permit me to do so—used by the Prime Minister in the debate on this bill in another place. He said :

> Now, I am free to admit that the system which prevails in Nova Scotia, in New Brunswick, and in Manitoba for the matter of that, is not as complete as I would like to see it. In the province of Quebec I have lived under a system which has prevailed for many years, and which has given the right of appeal to the judicial authorities in respect of the preparation of the lists ; and I must say that so far as my experience goes, it has worked well and satisfactorily. I believe the same system has prevailed in the province of Ontario, and it has also worked well and satisfactory.

Here is the testimony of the Prime Minister himself that the system you possess in Ontario and Quebec is a good system, and that the system we possess in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba is not good as a system. Under these circumstances, I do not think there can be any hesitation on the part of the committee in adopting the amendment which I moved. I would say one thing more. There are two ways of treating this House when an attempt is made to force through legislation; one is by open intimidation, and the other by coercion—if such and such a thing is not done such and such another thing will not be done. We have to consider this bill independently of anything of that kind, and I hope my hon. friend who represents the government in this House will not refuse to uphold my amendment. I hope that this House will give us the protection of the judiciary in making out our lists, for I believe that in Nova Scotia the Conservative party is in a majority to-day, but they will not take a corporal's guard out of that province unless they get this protection. The motion which I am about to make was prepared by able lawyers in the House of Commons, and it was moved there by the hon. leader of the opposition, and they have taken the responsibility that the phraseology and the matter of the resolution would cover exactly the required provisions. Therefore, when I move this amendment, I expect it to carry as it is, if the House thinks proper to adopt it at all. I move the following as clause A after subsection 10 of clause 10 :—

> Notwithstanding anything in this Act, or in any Act heretofore enacted, or hereafter to be enacted by the Legislature of any province, there shall be in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba, for the purpose of revising and amending the voters' list to be used in the election of members for the House of Commons an appeal from said lists as prepared by the registration clerks and revisors to the respective judges of the county courts in each of the said provinces for the different counties in which the polling divisions for which such voters' lists have been prepared are respectively situate.
> Such appeal may be, at the instance of any voter or person entitled to be a voter in the polling division, the voters' list for which is appealed from on all or any of the following grounds, viz. : that the names of voters are through inadvertence or otherwise omitted from voters' lists or wrongly stated therein, or that the names of persons are through inadvertence or otherwise inserted in the voters' list who are entitled to be voters, and shall be made to the judge of the county court at any time within twenty days after the voters' list at first made up shall be filed with the officer who, under the law of the province, has the custody of the same, and notice of such appeal shall be given in form "C" in the schedule hereto annexed, by posting the same up in at least three public places within the polling division, and by publishing the same for at least ten days previously to such appeal in some newspaper published in the county and circulating in the said polling division ; and if no newspaper is published in the county, then in a newspaper published in the nearest county having a newspaper published therein, provided that in the case of an application to strike off names from the voters' list, such notice shall be mailed, duly registered, with postage prepaid, at least one week previous to such appeal, to the address of such person or persons, if known to the appellant. The judge shall hear the appeals on affidavits, or if requested by the appellant or by the person opposing the appeal on evidence viva voce under oath, and may make an order in writing directing that the name of such person as voter shall be struck from or added to said list, and in case of more than one appeal from the same voters' list, the judge shall embody in the one order the results of his adjudications in respect to all such appeals, and such order shall be filed with the officer who has the custody of the said voters' list, who shall in pursuance of said order, strike off from or enter upon said list the names of persons as voters, and such voters' list, so amended, shall be the voters' list for the polling division.

"C"

Province of county (or city) of Polling division (or subdivision) of
I hereby give notice that on the day of A.D. 1 , I intend to apply to the judge of the county court of at to have for the purposes of elections of members for the House of Commons of Canada the voters' list for polling district (or subdistrict) amended by (adding to the same the names of the persons mentioned in schedule "A" or striking therefrom the names of the persons mentioned in schedule "B," or by changing the names A B C D, &c., to E F G H, &c.)
Dated at this day of A.D. 1
(Signed) X. Y.
Appellant.

The voters' list shall, except in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba, be those prepared by the several polling divisions so established and which on the sixtieth day next preceding the day fixed for the nomination of candidates for such Dominion election were in force or were last in force under the laws of that province for the purpose of provincial elections, and in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba, shall be the voters' list as amended under the provisions of section of this Act, which were prepared by the registration clerks or revisors for the several polling divisions so established for the purposes of provincial elections and were filed at least sixty days previous to the day fixed for the nomination of candidates for such Dominion election with the officer having by law the custody of the same.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—It is with a great deal of pleasure that I rise to second the amendment introduced by the hon. gentleman from Richmond on behalf of what I consider to be the most distressful province, politically, that we have in this Dominion—I mean the province of Manitoba. I freely recognize the difficulty that there is in framing a Franchise Bill, which shall satisfy all the varied conditions which exist in the different provinces of which our Dominion is constituted, and inasmuch as it has been sometimes our faithful duty to criticize adversely the actions of this government, I give my meed of praise to the Solicitor General for his efforts to make a good bill. Whether he has been successful in doing so or not time alone will tell, because it is only through the working of any such measure that its demerits or weaknesses can be brought to light. But in the House of Commons it was evident both parties sought to have a good bill and they worked together to accomplish that object, the opposition in no carping manner, offering amendments, and the government cheerfully accepting whenever they seemed to accomplish the object in view. Why, then, they declined to grant the relief asked for in this amendment and introduce the provisions which are in force in Ontario and Quebec, and which are so manifestly in the best interests of justice and fairness, I am at a loss to determine; but I intend to try and show to this House how absolutely necessary it is that this amendment should be adopted if we are ever to get a fair list in Manitoba. That is all we ask—a fair list, one which will give expression to the free and independent voice of the electorate of that province, and not one upon which a large proportion of the electorate have been disfranchised on account of their known political leanings—because that is what has actually occurred in that province. You may think that I speak in an exaggerated manner about the iniquities which have been practised in Manitoba. Wait until I get through, and there will be few members of the House who will not admit, not only that I have been justified in my statement, but that I have not been severe enough. The party which has prepared the lists in that province has had a political life of ten years. They have kept themselves in power partly by adopting methods which ordinary governments have been known to adopt for retaining office. And their existence for that length of time is due to two things, the Manitoba school question and the voters' lists. Of the former I do not intend to speak at all, but with regard to the latter I want to make some explanation to this House. Hon. gentlemen will probably think that when the Brandon enumerator got up his voters' list that he would take some basis upon which to work, the municipal list, or assessor's rolls, or the last voters' list for the Dominion or for the local election. Not a bit of it. This gentleman sits down and commences his official life in the most modest and humble way with a clean sheet of paper. Upon it he inscribes the name of every man in the district of his own political persuasion—a list which he and his friends had been preparing for the last few months. As long as it is a Grit name, he asks for no proof—he requires no application or qualification—he seeks no identification but he takes every name that is produced to him by Tom, Dick and Harry of the Grit shibboleth and puts him upon the list, but not a single name does he put on of the Conservative party of that district without first being furnished with a written application and a statutory declaration of qualification. This almost seems incredible, but I tell you that this is the actual condition of affairs that was discovered by Mr. Macdonald the Conservative member for Brandon and myself, and the rest of the Conservative committee when we went to that enumerator for the purpose of comparing the list with him and showing what names he had left off it. There was not a single Conservative name on the list—not even the names of Mr. Macdonald and myself, and, what is more he refused to put our names on the list unless we made application and put in a statutory declaration of qualification. He explained his refusal in this way: he said, "although he did know that Mr. Macdonald and myself were British subjects, 21 years of age, and that we had resided in the district for the time required by law, that he had not the same general information with regard to others, and that he thought the only safe plan was to require those applications and statutory declarations from all parties. When at a later date we put this gentleman into the witness box at the court of revision and he was furnished with a list, a list with all the Grit names of that district, and asked how it happened that those names came to be placed on his list, he said at first that they must have been put on by applications and statutory declarations of qualifications. When asked to produce them he could not, and finally he had to admit that those names had been placed there, either through his own knowledge of the circumstances, or handed in to him by people in whom he said he had confidence. We would not have objected to this had the same sauce which was used for the goose been served with the gander; but we did object that Conservatives should be put to such trouble to have their names put on the list when it only needed that a man should be a Grit to be put on the list without application or statutory declaration. Shortly before the time came for these lists to be made up, the Greenway government abolished the list of the justices of the peace in that province, thereby, at one stroke, doing away with all the Conservatives who might accidentally have been left on that list. They then issued a new list upon which only the names of their own political sympathizers appeared. Hon. gentlemen can easily see, therefore, the trouble, the difficulty, the expense that attached to our getting a sworn declaration for every man who had to be put on the Conservative side of that list, because we were obliged, in order to get those declarations, to go to the lawyers and the notary public who happened to be in that part of the country, and you can easily see that in a constituency 250 miles long and 100 miles wide, sparsely settled, and where those officials are scattered over such a large area, the extraordinary difficulty we had to prepare that list. Of course, any man who is well acquainted with a district should be able, of his own knowledge, and with the ordinary means at his disposal, to make up three-fourths of that list fairly, but with regard to the other fourth—and this is where our great difficulty lay—we did not know even the names of the parties or where they resided. We had heard of, say, John Smith, in a certain township. The best efforts of our detectives failed to locate anybody of that description who had resided there within the time required by law. We offered the court the best evidence that could be procured, that our detectives had searched that country from one end to the other and had failed to find any trace of such a person. We were refused the evidence of municipal clerks and people of the greatest respectability who had resided there many years, that no such persons could have lived there without their knowing it. We brought that out before the revising officer, and he plainly said that that was all very well, but unless we produced evidence that we had personally served the parties with notice the names would stay on the list. and they stayed there. He knew when he laid down that rule that he was laying down a rule that was an impossibility. That is one of the ways in which the revising officer worked this matter for us, and the result was that in the city of Brandon, the night before the election, a train load of hoodlums and personators was brought from Winnipeg, and next day every one of these fictitious names was voted on by parties who came there, whom none of us knew and who took the oath unblushingly and then went no one knew whither. That is the way they worked the racket in introducing impersonators. Lest you should think I am stating only what occurred in Brandon, and that such things could not occur in other parts of the province, I have here a declaration by a Dr. McFadden, a member of the local legislature, which shows that the same racket was worked for him in the constituency which he represents, Emerson. That was hard was it not? That is the way in which that part of the list is fraudulently prepared. But one of the principal modes of trickery which is practised on our voters' list is that with regard to the Icelandic vote. I am not able to explain why it is, but these people in their own country, before they come out here, are all what they call Liberals, or something which has the same meaning to them, and when they come to this country their leaders, who have for many years been officials of the Greenway government, have no difficulty in explaining to the new-comers that that is the way they have to vote in Manitoba. When we look over the voters' list in the city of Brandon, of course we know very well the different Icelandic names that are on our list, but occasionally we come across a batch of them that we know nothing about at all. On one occasion we found over a score of Icelandic names on our list which none of us had ever heard of before, and we appealed against these and asked the enumerator how he came to place them on the list. He triumphantly explained that this was done, as he had done with the Conservatives, by a writ ten application and statutory declaration. We asked him to produce these, and though he was very loth to do it, he was obliged to. It turned out that every one of these was made before a Mr. T. T. Macfarlane, a Grit heeler, of the city of Brandon, who had been appointed a justice of the peace for this purpose. Examined under oath, this man admitted that he had gone down, accompanied by a Greenway Icelandic official, to the immigration shed, where an immigrant train of Icelanders had just arrived, and had taken with him in his pocket, prepared for use, a number of these applications and statutory declarations. He admitted that he had never seen any of these people before, that he asked them no questions and never read over the declarations to them before they were signed before him; that he did not know if one of them spoke a word of English, and yet all these people were put on that list, and when we tried to strike them off, the same objection was made by the revising officer, that unless we personally produced these people before him, or produced evidence that they had been personally served with a subpœna to appear there, he would not allow their names to be struck off, and as by this time they had all accepted situations and scattered all over the country as hired men, we were unable to find them in order to serve them with subpœnas, and the result was that I, with the large interest I have in that country, had my vote killed by one of these new comers, who had only just arrived in that country and who knew nothing about our language.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Not even a British subject.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—No, not even a British subject, naturally. Under the late Norquay administration the revising officers were the county court judges; under the Greenway government the revising officers are the bitterest and most unscrupulous partisans in their party. That is the qualification. A man will not be appointed unless he possesses those qualities. They are nearly all young lawyers, smart, bright fellows, accustomed to fighting in court day by day, to twisting and straining every point to make it appear the best for their own side. They have been returning officers at the polls, and scrutineers at the polls, and they are thoroughly imbued with the strongest kind of partisan feeling and party spirit, and they do the best, as you may naturally suppose—I do not blame them for it—for their own side, to make as favourable a list as they can to keep their own party in power. What I say is that they have no responsibility, they have no care beyond making up that list in the way they were appointed to do, and I say the appointment of any partisan, I do not care who he is, or by what government he is appointed to the position, which is actually a judicial position, is a disgrace. I say that no government should be allowed to do it. It may be that a change will take place and that the party that I am in sympathy with, will have the same privileges placed in their hands, and with what they have had before them they might undertake to do the same thing. I say it would be a disgrace to allow any party to be in a position to do it—to turn what is really a judicial position into one of the bitterest partisanship. I do not say that at all times every revising officer appointed in that country has acted in an unfair way. We have a notable instance in the city of Brandon, where on one occasion the revising officer was Mr. G. Henderson, a very eminent Liberal lawyer there who now occupies the position of district registrar. Henderson acted in a manner that was fair and impartial and judicial, and made up a list which the most biassed person could not but admit was a fair list. What was the result? Mr. Henderson has never been employed since. His crime was accentuated by the fact that the Conservative candidate was elected under the list he prepared. Such a crime as that could only be met with one result, and Mr. Henderson was turned down and has never been employed since. I say that these revising officers should always belong to our judiciary, I care not by what government they have been appointed. I would just as soon that our Manitoba lists were revised by Judge Prendergast, whose name has been mentioned here very frequently as a Liberal appointee, as by any judge whose antecedents have been entirely Conservative. And why? Because we are able truly and proudly to say that our judicial bench is above suspicion, that they recognize the responsibility of the high offices to which they have been appointed, that they are guided by the long line of tradition which they can afford neither to sully nor to disgrace, and further, that they are appointed for life and can afford to be fair and honest and honourable, to be impartial and judicial without incurring the penalty of dismissal. I say that that is the reason and one of the greatest reasons why we should see that the position of revising officer should be given to a county judge. As long as the present system exists, you will find the same difficulty and the same trouble in getting a fair list. This is the sort of list made up in that fraudulent way that you are asked to incorporate as a Dominion franchise, the list by which the members shall be elected to this Federal House. I say that not one of these fraudulent practices which are allowed by the revising officers would be attempted, or assisted in, or connived at, or winked at by any judge that could be appointed as a revising officer in that country, and therefore I say if, after the warning, if after what I tell you as to the way in which those lists are made up, this House allows this bill to go through without this proposed amendment they will know that the province of Manitoba will return a solid list of Liberal supporters elected by the revising officers. That is the position of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Who are the revising officers under the late Dominion law?

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—Nearly all young Liberal lawyers in the city of Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—But under the late Dominion franchise?

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER — County court judges.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No; not always.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I think in every case in Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—A barrister of six years' standing.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Wherever there was a judge in Ontario he was appointed in every case.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—In London there were two judges, but James Fraser was appointed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The county court judge was appointed for another division, and there were not county court judges enough.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There are not county court judges enough in Nova Scotia, if my hon. friend adopts that rule.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I should like to tell the House of the constituency of South Brandon, the constituency which I used to represent in the local House. In that case a voters' list was published and posted up one day and the court of revision was held the next day. None of us knew anything about it. The revising officer and the enumerator met together at a country school-house. They were the only persons present. They opened the court. There were no appeals, as you can easily imagine, and they closed the list, and declared that it was perfect, without any appeals. When we came to see the list some time afterwards, we found that over 200 Conservative names had been left off, many of whom resided in the immediate neighbourhood of the enumerator, and were well known to him, met him every day, people who had lived there twelve and fifteen years. It was a put-up job between the enumerator and the revising officer. In the city of Brandon, when one of our lists was being made up, we every day checked off with the enumerator the names that were placed upon the list, and the last day at 11 o'clock at night, I was personally present when the list was compared from beginning to end with the enumerator. And after that we certainly thought we had done everything that could be done to protect ourselves against any danger to that list. When the list was published we counted 200 names of those that had come to us that very night which were left off, and when we tried to reinstate those before the court of revision, we were unable to do so in almost every instance. That is an illustration of the way in which the franchise which the government wants us to adopt has worked in Manitoba. Mr. Greenway, knowing the untenable position he occupies in this regard, has been obliged to make some show of yielding to popular demand and popular clamour, because I can assure hon. gentlemen that there is a great clamour throughout the country for a fair list. Surely that is not something that we should have to ask and beg and seek for and be refused in a country such as this. But Mr. Greenway has been obliged to throw out a little line of suggestions as to what is likely to be done in order to make that right. I will read what the hon. Minister of Interior says about it, the late Attorney General of the province, a gentleman whose schemes have kept us under the iron heel of despotism for so many years, and who thoroughly understands its value to him from a party point of view. He is speaking about the different provinces, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick :

> As far as Manitoba is concerned, I have lately been informed—I do not speak with any degree of positiveness, but I believe it to be a fact—that the government out there have agreed to amend the Election Act so that an appeal to the judiciary should be given under that Act.

You will observe how carefully he guards himself against being responsible for his statements. He has "lately been informed," and he does not "speak with any positiveness," but he thinks it is likely that at some time the Greenway government may make an alteration which will govern the appointment of the revising officers to the county court judge. When the hon. gentleman made that guarded statement, he knew as well as I did that Mr. Greenway was not going to do anything of the sort. If Mr. Greenway had even told him he was going to do it, he would not believe him any more than I would, because we all know Mr. Greenway very well, and have had so much experience of the way in which his word can be relied upon, that we know all about that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—But you will see how ingenious and suggestive he was in putting forward this little line of suggestion as to the course that was going to be adopted by the Greenway government. I tell hon. gentlemen it is nothing more or less than a huge bluff. There is no intention of doing anything of the kind, and I do not want hon. gentlemen to be deceived or have the wool pulled over their eyes by any such statement as that, because there is not the slightest intention of doing it, and it is the duty of this House not to take anything on chance but to guard our rights and see that we give justice and fair play to all. There is no real reason urged against the passage of this amendment. All that they say is that it may work a wrong to the general principle of adopting the local voters' list. Supposing it does, what of it? Which is better, to work a wrong to an abstract principle or to work a wrong which disfranchises thousands upon thousands of the electors of this country? The same suggestion was made by Shylock when he was demanding his pound of flesh, and what was the answer put into Bassanio's mouth by Shakespeare :

> Do a great right, do a little wrong, and curb this cruel monster of his will.

That is all I ask.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I suppose, if any hon. member on this side of the House were to speak with the warmth which the hon. gentleman from Brandon has manifested, that probably he would be held open to the charge of being in a white heat.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—Red heat

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not say that of the hon. gentleman. Evidently the hon. gentleman's local experience does influence the manner of his speech, and I think that we had better consider the matter from a more impersonal standpoint than that which the hon. gentleman has adopted. In the first place, while I recognize that the attitude taken by the hon. gentleman from Richmond two or three days ago was a justifiable one, that this House need not pass the Franchise Bill if it did not please, although it was a matter which did not directly concern this House, I can not agree with the attitude assumed by the hon. gentleman today that it is a perfectly right and proper thing for this House to undertake to go into the details of the Franchise Bill and deal with those details, adding here and subtracting there. I think the illustration from the Imperial Parliament to which the hon. gentleman referred us, will bear me out in that respect. The House of Lords did not, as a matter of fact, make a single amendment in the Franchise Bill which came before them in 1884, but the House of Lords, as they had a perfect right to do, said "We shall not consider this measure until we are satisfied that the government of the day propose to accompany it with a redistribution measure which shall not be manifestly unjust to the Conservative party."

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Does my hon. friend desire to be understood as saying that the House of Lords had no right to make any amendment?

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—We have been making amendments to the bill from the very start.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That does not say we are right. My contention is that the House of Lords does not go into the details of the Franchise Bill and make amendments, and I take the case the hon. gentleman chose. When the Conservative leader in the House of Lords who was also the leader of the Conservative party, when the Marquis of Salisbury was satisfied from statements made by the leader of the Liberal government that a fair redistribution measure would be introduced, the Representation of the People Act was allowed to pass, and not a single amendment was made to it in the House of Lords.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—In the English parliament they use the franchise for partisan advantage.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Not so much as here.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Now, hon. gentlemen, that is an important consideration. I think it has generally been recognized that money bills and franchise bills are bills which this House has the right to reject, and of course it has a technical right to amend the Franchise Bill if there is any glaring injustice in it, but the parliamentary practice and etiquette, so to say, has been that Upper House does not interfere with the details——

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Do you not call this a glaring injustice?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I shall try to deal with that later on. The ground taken by the premier in the other House is a perfectly reasonable and proper ground. He based his objection to the amendment which the hon. gentleman has proposed, and which was proposed in the other House on the ground that it conflicted with the principle of the bill. The principle of the bill was that the provincial franchises should be used for the purpose of Dominion elections; and if you say, as to certain provinces, we shall not accept the provincial franchises but shall subject them to certain amendments and provisions of our own, you are departing from the principle of the bill. That is a good and reasonable and tenable objection to the amendment. Hon. gentlemen seem to forget for the moment that this is not the first time we have had the provincial franchises for parliamentary elections in Canada. From the year 1867 until 1885 we had the local franchises, and I have not heard that any serious complaint was made in respect to the manner in which the local officers did their duties in preparing the lists. The only serious complaint made, as regards the province of Nova Scotia, was that certain Dominion officials were disqualified by the local law, and that they were improperly disqualified. Into the reasons for disqualifying those officers I shall not enter now. I did deal with it at one time, but I shall not now. All I say is that, looked at from the point of view of the local government of that day, there was a good deal of justification for the action which was taken by the local legislature ; and with respect to the case cited by the hon. gentleman from Richmond (Mr. Miller), the case in which his colleague from Cape Breton was concerned, it must be borne in mind that in that general election of 1872, the Conservatives had a majority of the members from Nova Scotia ; and as far as regards the province at large, I have never heard any serious complaint of the conduct of the revisers or of the sheriffs. I wish to say a word or two about New Brunswick. There are other gentlemen who can speak with more knowledge of New Brunswick than I can. However, I happen to have in my hand the latest New Brunswick Act with respect to elections; and I think hon. gentlemen should bear this in mind with respect to that province. New Brunswick I suppose is the only province in the Dominion where there are no parties in local politics. They have a government there which is made up of Liberals and Conservatives and there is no reason to suppose that the local lists of New Brunswick would be made up otherwise than fairly as between the two parties, and I find that chapter 38 of the Acts of New Brunswick for last year contains this provision :

If at any time after the voters' lists have been deposited with the county secretary, as provided in section 36 of the said Act, the sheriff shall be satisfied that through a mistake in copying or any other error or oversight, names have been omitted from any voters' list, it shall be the duty of the sheriff to make application to the judge of the county court for an order authorizing him to add such names to such voters' lists, whereupon the judge shall, after notice to the assessors and revisers of the city, town or parish on the voters' list of which the sheriff thinks the names should be, if the judge is satisfied that the names submitted to him by the sheriff or any of them should be added to such list by reason of their having merely been omitted through mistake in copying or other error or oversight, make an order that such names or any of them shall be added to such list, and the sheriff shall thereupon add to such list such names as the judge has so ordered to be added, and thereupon the list or lists with the name so added shall be as good and valid in all respects as if such names had been included in such lists or lists by the revisers.

2. The provisions of the aforegoing section shall apply to voters' lists prepared and filed with the county secretary before the passing of this Act as well as to those who may be so prepared and filed hereafter.

Now, hon. gentlemen, considering the fact that in New Brunswick they, in local politics have no parties, this provision is sufficient to guarantee that the lists in New Brunswick will be fair and correct lists. With respect to Manitoba, all I can say, hon. gentlemen, is that it seems to me that out in the west they do things that perhaps we would not do in this cooler blooded eastern portion of the Dominion. We have had from the hon. gentleman from Brandon (Mr. Kirchhoffer) a statement, no doubt a reliable one, but no doubt coloured by the hon. gentleman's own strong political views and by the local feeling under which he evidently spoke, of what has been done on one side. It just happens that in the newspapers of the last few days we have had a little inkling of what was done on the other side in Manitoba. We have had the evidence of Mr. Howells, Q.C., of what was done by the Conservative side, not in a local but in a Dominion election. I think the Liberal side of the House need not be afraid of the comparison of the state of things depicted by Mr. Howells, and in that the comparison they will show to advantage.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Two wrongs do not make a right.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I was not saying that ; I was simply using it to illustrate the principle that out in the west they are more intense and do things that we cooler blooded people would not do.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Even $12,000 could not secure a conviction ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I suppose the difficulty was there were some of those Conservative westerners on the juries. The hon. gentleman from Brandon talked about revising barristers. I thought while he was speaking that some of his observations would have applied to some of the revising officers appointed under the late administration. I know that in the province of Nova Scotia there were some county judges who were not appointed revising barristers, and they were men who were perfectly upright and fair and honourable, and there was no reasonable excuse for not appointing them except the government wished to have friends of their own to revise the lists. I shall not say anything more about Manitoba. Other hon. gentlemen know more about it than I do. The hon. gentleman from Richmond told us, and told us very properly, that we should act independently of threats. I think this House has in the past generally acted in a fairly independent way and I am not aware that the government, or any member of the government, speaking on behalf of his colleagues, has uttered any threats against the Senate. The threats which appear in certain newspapers are not things that the Senate should take any heed of. To my mind it is an undignified position for the Senate to assume.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—On the floor of the House of Commons such a thing was done by a minister.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am rather careful about the statements I make in the House. As a rule I think hon. gentlemen should be careful about statements they make, and some hon. gentlemen I must say are not very careful. Now, I tried to be careful. I said that the government as a government had not uttered any threats and that no member speaking on behalf of his colleagues or of the government had done so. I understand that on one occasion one member of the government, perhaps a little warmed up, as the hon. gentleman from Brandon was this afternoon, and speaking outside of Parliament said something that might be construed into a threat against this House; but we do not look upon it as an act of the government or as a thing this House should notice. The hon. gentleman from Richmond said we should deal with the bill independent of threats. I say so too. I say that we should deal with this measure as fairly and reasonably as we can, and deal with it from a business point of view. Now with respect to those local lists, the hon. gentleman from Richmond made a reference to one case which happened away back in 1872. Things have improved in Nova Scotia since then; and, as I said, up to 1885 when the Dominion Franchise Act was passed, there had really been almost no public complaint of the manner in which the lists were made up in Nova Scotia. The hon. gentleman read a letter from an ex-sheriff of the county of Victoria. I may say that the county of Victoria has been, in the past at any rate, sometimes very like a western county, and more extreme things have been done by both parties—certainly by the Conservative party—in the county of Victoria than in any other county in the province. The hon. gentleman from Richmond wished this House to adopt his amendment on the ground that the Liberals were more active in municipal politics than the Conservatives in Nova Scotia. Now, hon. gentlemen, my authority is just about as good as that of the hon. gentleman from Richmond, and the feeling amongst the Liberals in Nova Scotia is that the Conservatives are much more active in municipal elections than the Liberals.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—That is not the case in the county of Pictou.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is the hon. gentleman's impression; and every hon. gentleman knows that before an election comes off the members of one party think the members of the other party are doing a great deal more and working a great deal harder than the members of their own party. Now, what is the law in Nova Scotia? It would perhaps be well to find that out first before we undertake to condemn it in this wholesale way. In the first place, I might deal with the sheriffs in Nova Scotia. In New Brunswick the sheriffs are appointed in the manner indicated by the hon. gentleman from Richmond, as the sheriffs had been appointed in Nova Scotia in former years. In the last Revised Statutes of Nova Scotia we find how the sheriffs are appointed there. The first section of chapter 15 of the revised statutes says:

> The Governor in Council shall, from time to time, as occasion may require, by commission under the great seal of the province, appoint and commission a fit and proper person to the office of sheriff of each county, and shall, in like manner, fill up any vacancies as they occur, and every sheriff so appointed shall hold office during good behaviour.

Now, hon. gentlemen, it is a fact that, as a rule at any rate—there may be one or two exceptions—but as a rule the sheriffs in the province of Nova Scotia who hold office during good behaviour—they hold their office practically upon the same tenure as the judges hold their offices—are respectable and upright men, and to my mind men who are just as likely to honestly and fairly hear appeals from the electoral lists as county judges. What is the law in Nova Scotia? I have stated there was no general or serious complaint with respect to the manner in which the lists were made up by the assessors and revisers in Nova Scotia before the year 1885. In 1885 the Dominion Franchise Act was passed; in 1889 the local law was altered and an appeal was given from the revisers to the sheriff. Now, if the House will bear with me I wish to read a little of the law with respect to this appeal to the sheriff. Section 29 of chapter 1 of the Act of 1889, which is the Act respecting the provincial elections, says :

The sheriff of the county shall attend at his office on the twenty-first day of March in each year for the purpose of hearing any appeals that may be made from the action of the revisers in making up the lists ; and he may hear such appeals at any time up to and including the thirty-first day of March ; and if he is satisfied from evidence under oath, which he is hereby empowered to receive, that the name of any person has been improperly left off or placed on the list he shall add to or strike off such name, provided, however, that in the case of any application to strike off a name it shall be shown that at least five days' notice was given to the person objected to either personally, or by leaving such notice at his last place of abode.

And here I may be allowed to observe that the hon. gentleman from Brandon seems to think that the revising officers in Manitoba acted very improperly in not striking names off without giving notice to the person whose name was proposed to be struck off.

For the purposes of this election the clerk of the municipality shall deliver the list of electors to the sheriff, who, after determining the appeals, shall return them to the clerk. The sheriff shall have power to summon witnesses to attend at the time and place above appointed to give evidence on the hearing of such appeals and to administer an oath, and to examine the parties and such witnesses on oath ; and any person who shall be summoned and shall neglect to attend without good cause shown therefor to the sheriff, or attending shall refuse to be sworn or give evidence, shall, upon summary conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, be liable to a penalty of twenty dollars, and every witness attending shall be entitled to receive the same fees and travelling expenses as witnesses attending before justices of the peace in civil suits, to be paid by the person at whose instance the respective witnesses may be summoned.

And in order that the sheriff, who is appointed as I have said during good behaviour and who takes the oath of office when appointed, may be reminded again of the importance of doing his duty, section 30 provides as follows :

The sheriff before entering upon his duties in the hearing of such appeals, shall be sworn to the impartial performance thereof, in the form following, and the oath may be administered by any justice of the peace, or by the warden or clerk of the municipality.

I. ....., sheriff of the county of ..... , do solemnly swear that I will, without favour or partiality, discharge the duties assigned to me, in hearing appeals from the decision of the revisers of electoral lists ; that I will place no name on the list of electors for the said county, and will strike no name off the same except as directed by the law under which I have been appointed.

Then section 31 reads :

If the sheriff neglects to attend to the duty imposed on him by the foregoing section, or if he shall wilfully place on the list the name of any person not properly qualified, or shall wilfully strike from the list the name of any person properly qualified, he shall be liable to a penalty of two hundred dollars in each and every case, to be recovered in the supreme or county court by any person who may sue therefor.

Then section 32 provides :

The sheriff shall keep a record of proceedings on the hearing of such appeals, and he shall forthwith after completing the lists, make a report of his doings to the provincial secretary, showing the number of appeals made to add or strike off, the number of names added or struck off, with any remarks thereon that may be necessary to clearly explain his proceedings, and the Governor in Council shall, after the receipt of such reports, fix the compensation to be allowed to the sheriffs for their services in hearing and determining such appeals.

The next section makes provision with respect to non-residents, and then there is a provision with respect to counties having two municipalities. Then finally :

The lists shall be made up, signed by the sheriff and deposited with the clerk of the municipality on or before the 10th day of April, in each year, and shall thenceforth be the registrar of electors for the county.

Now, hon. gentlemen, I do not hesitate to say that in my humble opinion, the law in Nova Scotia with respect to the electoral lists is on the whole a more satisfactory law and one which in its practical working is better than that in any other province. And I do not think that any hon. gentleman here would allege that, during very recent years, any charges of serious misfeasance have been made against a sheriff. As a matter of fact, I doubt very much whether there have been five appeals to the sheriff in the province of Nova Scotia since that Act passed in 1889. There is very little dissatisfaction with the lists as made up by the revising officers, the same parties who revised before 1889. So much for the law as it is. I do not think that any good ground has been shown why this House should undertake to interfere with the lists as they exist in the province of Nova Scotia. I may be permitted to make a few observations with respect to the wording of the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Richmond, and I wish to point out that the amendment, as submitted to the committee, does not apply to the province of Nova Scotia. It says : "An appeal from the said lists." I direct the attention of the hon. gentleman particularly to this, because this amendment seems to have been prepared by gentlemen who are not aware of the existence of the Act of 1889.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Is it possible that Mr. Borden and Sir Hibbert Tupper do not know ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think it highly probable that Sir Hibbert Tupper and Mr. Borden do not know. They have not paid much attention to what has been done in the local legislature :

An appeal from said lists as prepared by the registration clerks and revisers to the respective judges of the county courts in each of the said provinces, &c.

There is nothing said about the sheriff at all, and the list is not complete in Nova Scotia till the sheriff has made his official report, so we do not take the provincial list at all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Are they all signed by the sheriff?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes; so that you do not really take the official list at all, you take the list prepared by the registration clerks. Our lists are not prepared by the registration clerks; they are prepared by the revisers. That is one point. Then I wish to direct attention to another matter. I am talking about this as a business question, and trying to point out the difficulty and inconvenience which will arise. There is an appeal on any of the following grounds :

That the names of voters are through inadvertence or otherwise omitted from voters' lists or wrongly stated therein, or that the names of persons are through inadvertence or otherwise inserted in the voters' list who are not entitled to be voters, and shall be made to the judge of the county court at any time within twenty days after the voters' list at first made up shall be filed with the officer who, under the law of the province, has the custody of the same.

This appeal is made to the judge of the county court twenty days after the list is made up. In Nova Scotia the list is made up on the 10th April; twenty days from that date brings you to the end of April, and a party has to the end of April to give notice of his appeal. Under this amendment, the parties objecting have till the 30th April to give notice of the appeal. The notice is given in the form of the schedule, and is to be posted up in at least three public places, and published at least ten days previously to such appeal in some newspaper published in the county. So that brings you down to the 30th April. Then, in the end of the clause there is a provision that the lists, as finally made up and revised by the county court judge, shall be :

Filed at least sixty days previous to the day fixed for the nomination of candidates for such Dominion election with the officer having by law custody of the same.

Let us look at the practical result of that. The local lists are now made up finally and signed by the sheriff on the 10th April. After that you have twenty days during which an appeal may be made. Then there is no knowing how long it may be before the county judge can deal with the appeal, because in Nova Scotia there are only seven county judges for eighteen counties, and some of the judges have to deal with three large counties, and it is very clear that a considerable delay must take place before these appeals can be heard. I think a month is a very short time to allow for the appeals before the county judge, so that will bring you to about the first of June. Then you take the sixty days which the latter part of the clause provides shall intervene between the time the lists are finally made up and the elections, and you could not have an election in the province of Nova Scotia before the first of August on the lists of the current year.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Sixty days need not intervene. The lists are not to be changed within sixty days of the election. The hon. gentleman is astray.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman is entirely correct. I am pointing out what the practical operation of this amendment will be when you come to deal with it in connection with the 60 days. The lists have to be completed and filed at least 60 days previous to the day fixed for the nomination of the candidates. It will be seen that if the election is to be held in any year before the first of August, it must be run, not on the lists of the current year, but on the lists of the previous year, and it seems to me that would be a much more serious objection to the voters' list than the bare possibility that some name or some few names might have been left off or put on the lists made up by the revising officers from the assessment roll and confirmed by the sheriff.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—What time is the list made up in New Brunswick?

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—Different circumstances govern it.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—No, it is a uniform date. It is done under a statute of the province. The revising officers do not meet until October.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It has not been alleged anywhere that serious misdoings occurred in connection with the lists in the province of Nova Scotia before 1885, when the Dominion franchise law was introduced. I might make this general observation, that in the United States, which we do not take as an example altogether, the elections for Congress are conducted on the local lists, and in the new constitution which was discussed and agreed on some months ago at Sydney, Australia, the convention decided that their electoral lists for the commonwealth of Australia should be the lists of the several provinces, or, as they propose to call them, their states. We had this system in operation in this country for 18 years and it worked satisfactorily on the whole, and there is no reason why it should not work satisfactorily again. When I say it worked satisfactorily I mean that it worked on the whole better than the one which supplanted it.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I wish to express my gratitude to the hon. gentleman from Richmond for his kind interference in the affairs of New Brunswick. I have no doubt the province will be grateful to him for his legal and philanthropic efforts on its behalf. But it is the first time that I have heard there was any grievance in New Brunswick of importance with reference to the revising of the list of voters in that province. The local legislature of New Brunswick, as hon. gentlemen know, is composed of Conservatives and Liberals. They live in unity. The government is fairly divided between the two parties, and the voters' list no doubt is made up under the influence of both of those parties. I am not aware that the government of New Brunswick or the representatives of New Brunswick has found any fault or asked this parliament to interfere in their behalf. Much less do I think they asked the hon. gentleman from Richmond to do so. The representatives from New Brunswick in the parliament of Canada I know are well pleased with the present bill. They are satisfied that it will work well and that it will be satisfactory to a very large proportion of the people of New Brunswick. This being the case I trust that the House will not interfere with our wishes. It will be my duty as one of the representatives from New Brunswick to protest against this interference with our domestic affairs. We in New Brunswick were confederates and anti-confederates. Those who carried confederation came to the parliament of Canada. We have not had these disturbances, annoyances and disputes that unfortunately I have listened to every day between Liberals and Tories and other parties. There we sit apart as confederates and anti-confederates. We live in harmony and are good friends and if we dispute for an hour or two about a vote we make it up without any disturbance. With reference to the hon. gentleman from Brandon, who made some remarks about the way the voters' list of New Brunswick had been constructed, I wish to say that the voters' list of St. John, a city with a population of over 50,000, is under a revising barrister, and I know that the people of St. John are satisfied with that gentleman. The sheriff, under the new system of elections, is a Conservative and I do not see that the Conservatives in this parliament have any right to complain if that gentleman is to be the revising barrister henceforth. He was a strong Conservative appointed by a government which was part Conservative and part Liberal, and has given general satisfaction. I might say a great many more things on this subject, but I want to confine myself simply to New Brunswick. I wish to say that until the representatives of New Brunswick find fault with this new method, I do not think it is the duty of other gentlemen who are strangers to us to intermeddle with our affairs. On that basis I appeal to hon. gentlemen not to interfere with this bill. It is going to make a uniform voting system all over this country.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Yes. There are no people who could be better judges of the system under which they vote than those who belong to the local legislature, who have the power and privilege of making the voters' list.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Did not a majority of the members of the House of Commons from New Brunswick vote against this bill which is now before us?

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I am not aware of it.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—And in favour of the amendment I have moved?

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I want to say this much, that accidentally a large number of the members from that province have no right to be there, and would not be there if there was a proper revision of the voters' list.

Hon Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—They got in there by rather suspicious means—by means of men who had been appointed by a Tory government. Sleeping dogs had better be left alone, because a great deal could be said that might not please hon. gentlemen in this House. However, I do not want to raise any disturbance. I simply wished, on behalf of New Brunswick, to say that it is only fair to allow the real representatives of New Brunswick, to have the right to speak for their province, to represent the people of that province. These are my views, and I trust I have not given any offence. If the Nova Scotia members choose to adopt this amendment, I have no objection. In fact, I have no objection to the representatives of Manitoba favouring it, but I speak for the province of New Brunswick, and I was not going to say a word on the subject until I found that the hon. gentleman from Richmond who introduced the amendment, and who at first seemed to be inclined to withdraw that portion of it relating to New Brunswick, did not change it, and I felt it my duty to stand up here and oppose it.

Hon. Mr. KING—I do not propose to take up the time of the House discussing this matter further than to make a few remarks about the application of this amendment to New Brunswick. There is nothing clearer than, in the matter of preparing the voters' lists in New Brunswick, the people have all to say about it, and the government of that province has very little to say about it. The voters' lists in New Brunswick for local elections are prepared by our county councillors by two representing the parish and another appointed by the council.

There is no appeal to the sheriff, as in Nova Scotia. It is true the sheriff has a right, under the law, to strike off the names of men who are dead, but there is an appeal in New Brunswick from the list as prepared by the revising officer to the county court judge.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KING—Section 1 of the New Brunswick Election Act reads:

> If at any time after the voters' list have been deposited with the county secretary, as provided in section 36 of the said Act, the sheriff shall be satisfied that through a mistake in copying or any other error or oversight, names have been omitted from any voters' list, it shall be the duty of the sheriff to make application to the judge of the county court for an order authorizing him to add such names to such voters' lists, whereupon the judge shall, after notice to the assessors and revisers of the city, town or parish on the voters' list of which the sheriff thinks the name should be, if the judge is satisfied that the name submitted to him by the sheriff or any of them should be added to such list by reason of their having merely been omitted through mistake in copying or other error or oversight, make an order that such names or any of them shall be added to such list, and the sheriff shall thereupon add to such list such names an the judge has so ordered to be added, and thereupon the list or lists with the name so added shall be as good and valid in all respects as if such names had been included in such list or lists by the revisers.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That is an appeal from the revising officers.

Hon. Mr. KING—Yes, by the sheriff to the county court judge, and if the amendment is carried in this House I take it that it will be simply an appeal from the county court judge back to the county court judge again, because, if, through any oversight, names are left off the list, there is a chance to have them restored by application to the county court judge. It is not necessary for me to defend the action of the government of New Brunswick with regard to the electoral franchise of that province, because I may say no abuse has arisen under that law. There may have been some occasion for this amendment, but if there is I never heard of any complaints with regard to the working of the Act. Of course, as provided against here, sometimes in copying a name might be omitted, and this provision, I think, meets every difficulty that might arise in the province. As was pointed out by my hon. friend on my left a while ago, in New Brunswick we have perhaps not the best kind of government, but a government which suits us pretty well—a government composed of Liberals and Conservatives—and we have had much the same franchise since confederation, and I have yet to hear of any complaints in the province with regard to the working of that Act. I think I will be borne out in that statement by the hon. gentlemen in this House who come from that province. Personally I would not be opposed to the appeal. I think we have it there. I do not think it is necessary to have that second appeal in New Brunswick, and I would ask my hon. friend to leave out that province. I am not going to say anything about Manitoba, or the other provinces. The hon. gentleman from Brandon has told us stories about what was taken place in his province. Perhaps if the stories on the other side were told there would be equality. In New Brunswick there is not the slightest necessity for any change in the Franchise Act, and I think Liberals and Conservatives alike will resent any interference on the part of the Senate with their Franchise Act. The Government is composed, as I said before, of about an equal number of Liberals and Conservatives. If it should happen that either party felt aggrieved with the way in which the lists were made up when applied to Dominion elections in that province, I am quite sure that the gentlemen representing the Conservative party in the local government are capable of taking care of the interests of their party if an attempt were made to interfere with their rights. It would be resented at once by the Conservative members of the government and the condition of things which has existed there would be materially changed. We would have a coalition government no longer. We would have party government in the province of New Brunswick. We have not had that in the past, but if the present local premier were to resist an attempt of that kind made by his colleagues, the line would be squarely drawn at once and we would have perhaps what we ought to have. But I do not know as to that, we are satisfied with the present condition of affairs. We have a government who are prepared to do right with Liberals and Conservatives in that province. I do not think this amendment will meet with their approval.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—How does the hon. gentleman account for the action of the people's representatives in the House of Commons from that province? I am credibly informed that representative from that province, including such men as Mr. Foster, voted for this amendment.

Hon. Mr. KING—I cannot account for it. I do not think they represent the people in that province. I will say that much.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—But we have to take that fact ourselves.

Hon. Mr. KING—I think as a provision is made in the local Act of New Brunswick for an appeal to the county court judges, that New Brunswick should be exempted from that amendment.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I quite agree with most of the remarks made by the last speaker. I was a councillor in New Brunswick, in Sunbury, for seven or eight years, and we had two more distinct parties then than they have now. It was not a coalition government but a party government, so to speak, and in all that time I cannot call to memory one case where they had a protest after election as they had in Ontario. The law was administered by the municipal council who elect the revisers, and they fix up the lists, and I do not hesitate to say that the list, to my knowledge, was always considered fair, and there never was any wrangle or quarrel over it. When the franchise list was first made up by the council, for one or two years there was a meeting of the political parties; some asked to have names put on, and others asked to have names struck off, but in a year or two there was entire confidence in the municipal councillors, and never any question about it. With regard to New Brunswick, I quite endorse what my hon. friend has said, and I do not think there has been much change made in the law since I left there. We have heard time and again of the ballot stuffing in Manitoba and of the manœuvring there, and we have heard the statements made by the hon. gentleman from Brandon. I have heard it repeated over and over again outside of this House by men in that country, and if we believe the hon. gentleman from Brandon it is quite enough to warrant the government to take cognizance of the statements and I believe the government will take cognizance of them, because when a statement is made by an hon. gentleman on the floor of parliament as plainly and distinctly as the statement we have heard to-day, the government will see that it is their interest to provide that such a matter is properly guarded against and steps taken to see that such acts are not perpetrated again. I am confident of that. There is no government in any country under the sun who could listen to statements made in such a clear and concise manner, with the details which have been given, and undertake to defend such a proceeding. I hope and trust that this government will take notice of this case. I think in New Brunswick the difficulty is a small one, but in Manitoba it is a very serious matter, and I hope this government will let that amendment apply to Manitoba, if they do not to the other provinces, so that we may have the difficulty removed.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I wish to state that I can readily see why the members from New Brunswick in the other branch of parliament desire to have this applicable to their province, from the imperfection of the law. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the limited scope of investigation provided by the New Brunswick Act:

If at any time the voters' lists have been deposited with the county secretary as provided in section 36 of the said Act, the sheriff shall be satisfied that through a mistake in copying or any other error or oversight names have been omitted from the lists.

These are the only cases. If names are improperly on they cannot put them off. I can understand why the members of the other House would desire the larger and more comprehensive principles of this amendment. The second clause of my amendment reads:

Such appeal may be, at the instance of any voter or person entitled to be a voter in the polling division, the voters' list for which is appealed from on all or any of the following grounds, viz.: that the names of voters are through inadvertence or otherwise omitted from voters' lists or wrongly stated therein, or that the names of persons are through inadvertence or otherwise inserted in the voters' list who are not entitled to be voters, and shall be made to the judge of the county court at any time within twenty days after the voters' list at first made up shall be filed with the officer who, under the law of the province, has the custody of the same, and notice of such appeal shall be given in form "C" in the schedule hereto annexed, by posting the same up in at least three public places within the polling division, and by publishing the same for at least ten days previously to such appeal in some newspaper published in the county and circulating in the said polling division; and if no newspaper is published in the county, then in a newspaper published in the nearest county having a newspaper published therein, provided that in the case of an application to strike off names from the voters' list, such notice shall be mailed, duly registered, with postage prepaid, at least one week previous to such appeal, to the address of such person or persons, if known to the appellant. The judge shall hear the appeals on affidavits, or if requested by the appellant or by the person opposing the appeal on evidence viva voce under oath, and may make an order in writing directing that the name of such person as voter shall be struck out from or added to said list, and in case of more than one appeal from the same voters' list, the judge shall embody in the one order the results of his adjudications in respect to all such appeals, and such order shall be filed with the officer who has the custody of the said voters' list, who shall in pursuance of said order, strike off from or enter upon said list the names of persons as voters, and such voters' list, so amended, shall be the voters' list for the polling division.

The committee will see how much more comprehensive this clause is than the section of the New Brunswick Act, and I can readily imagine that very little redress could be got by an appeal to the judge under the New Brunswick Act, and I doubt whether there is any provision under that Act to enable the judge to strike off names improperly on the list.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—The people of the province of New Brunswick, who are so deeply interested in the matter, seem to be perfectly satisfied with the law as it exists, but my sympathy is greatly aroused by the extraordinary statement made here, not only by the hon. gentleman from Richmond, but by the hon. gentleman from Brandon and the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island. If we are to believe what we have heard the last two or three days, it is an army of missionaries that is wanted in these different sections. We have heard that the election oath is not considered an oath at all, or something equivalent to that, and that on Prince Edward Island voters go from side to side of district dividing lines and subscribe to any oath asked.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—When the hon. gentleman makes that assertion it is with regard to his own party, and not the Conservative party.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—I never heard of such a thing in New Brunswick, and the hon. gentleman has not heard of it.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—That is correct.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—I am not going to make any suggestions about what will be applicable to Manitoba or the other provinces, but I do know with regard to New Brunswick. The statement was made by the hon. gentleman from Richmond that in one constituency in Cape Breton—and I am glad it is not in Nova Scotia proper, so that you need not be afraid in passing through the province of falling in with that class of people—that three hundred or more Conservatives were struck off one list, by a partisan election officer and, more than that, he could tell us a case ten times worse. That would be a case where three thousand Conservatives names were struck off one list. Of course it may be true. I do not know. This clause may be wanted in some sections of the Dominion, but it is not at present required in New Brunswick. We have a coalition government there, and we have a Conservative sheriff in St. John, that has been represented by hon. gentlemen from that locality as most honourable and efficient. In Northumberland our sheriff is also a Conservative, and there is not a gentleman between here and that county that I would sooner trust my affairs with than that sheriff. We have not had him there during an election. He has only been appointed lately. In the province of New Brunswick we never hear of any difficulties arising under our present law. I simply rose to-day to support the position taken by those hon. gentlemen who desire to sustain the present law in New Brunswick, and my advice is not to submit to any deviation from the electoral lists as provided by the provincial law.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say the government have no intention of agreeing to the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Richmond. We cannot accept that amendment. It would practically destroy the principle of the bill. I have listened with a great deal of astonishment to the observations addressed to this House, especially by the hon gentleman from Brandon. The hon. gentleman has spoken of the law in the province of Manitoba as though it were peculiarly atrocious, a law violating every principle of fair dealing between parties, and that in that province it was absolutely impossible, under the present law and under the present administration, for a Conservative elector to have any certainty that he could get his name upon the voters' list. What is the law with regard to the revision of the list in the province of Manitoba? And that law is, so far as the appointment of revising officers is concerned, almost exactly the same as the law that is now in force in the Dominion. The law of the Dominion authorizes the government to appoint a county court judge or a revising barrister, one who is not a judge, for the purpose of revising the list. That is exactly the law in the province of Manitoba. They may take a county court judge. They may appoint a barrister of at least three years' standing, and the barrister, or the judge, the one or the other, must be the revising officer in the province of Manitoba for the purpose of revising the voters' list. So that the law which the hon. gentlemen have supported in this regard as the law for the Dominion, is the law in this particular that is being denounced as an atrocious law when it is enacted by the province of Manitoba. That is the position of things. Then the hon. gentleman has spoken about the difficulty of putting a name upon the list and the difficulty of getting a name off. I pointed out early in the session that that is the law with regard to the preparation of the voters' list for the Dominion. If a gentleman thinks there is a name on the list that ought not to be there, he must give notice before he can take it off. The person whose name is objected to must have an opportunity of being heard and of showing that he possesses the qualification. It would be a novel proceeding to introduce if you are enforcing the present law. While some complaints have been made about the imperfection of the machinery of the existing law of the Dominion, no one has ever said, and I have never heard the expression used until I heard it from the hon. gentleman from Brandon today, that it is a peculiarly atrocious thing, when a man has his name upon the voters' list, to give him notice that you intend to object to it remaining there before you can undertake to have that name stricken off. The hon. gentleman said a good deal with regard to the unfairness of the revising officers. I am not calling in question the hon. gentleman's word, but I have seen exactly the same thing under the Dominion law in the province of Ontario. I remember four years ago, the last time the revision took place in Ridgetown, a large number of names were struck off by the revising officer, and when the new list came out all of those names were printed upon the list, all that were struck off and which, when the revising officer had his attention called to it he said: "I sent the list down to Ottawa with the names off and they were put on at the Printing Bureau," and the judge had his attention called to the fact. "But you knew those names were struck off and yet you certified to the list with those names restored."

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Was he a judge?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He was a judge. I remember very well at the same time in the House of Commons, when reference was made to the list from the county of Chamb'y, where Mr. Préfontaine was elected, attention was called to the fact that at the Printing Bureau here a large number of names had been added to the list as it was revised in the county of Chambly, and Mr. Ouimet, a member of the administration at the time, defended the list and said those people ought to have their names there. I say that abuses of this sort will exist. They do exist under perhaps any system you can devise, where there are unscrupulous men, and men of very strong partisan feeling, will go a long way if they think they can serve their party, and a due protection against mischief of that sort is vigilance on the part of those who wish to see a fair electoral list and the rights of all parties under the constitution preserved. Let me call attention to another thing; we have counties in the province of Ontario, where, if you take the list of 1891—the East Riding of Elgin for instance—you will see that the number of voters on the list are between one-third and one-fourth of the entire population. If you take those under 21 years of age off, and none of them can be put upon the list, you take away a little more than one-half of the entire population. Then if you divide the remaining half into two parts, one-half are women who cannot be upon the voters' list, you have one-third, at most, of the male population 21 years of age and upwards. Now, if you had manhood suffrage you could not have had as many names upon that list as there were standing upon it as it was finally revised.

Hon. Mr. McKINDSEY—Non-residents?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend says non-residents, and a great many of them were persons who were aliens, who had become citizens of another country, and yet that occurred in a list that was subject to revision by a county judge.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Was an appeal made to a county judge and did he continue them on the list?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There was an appeal made and they were continued on the list, and they were continued largely because the county judge made exactly the same sort of objections which the hon. member for Brandon said were made by the revising officers in the province of Manitoba.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not hear what he said, so I do not know how that is.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Let me say we have accepted the provincial lists, and I say here we have the revision in the provinces of Ontario, Manitoba and British Columbia by the county judges or the district judges, and they have in Manitoba by county court judges or by a barrister of at least three years' standing. Now why does my hon. friend direct himself against Manitoba? He supported the Dominion Election Act and yet my hon. friend says—

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Did not the hon. gentleman give you ample reasons for that?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly not. The hon. gentleman's reasons lay against the manner in which the registration clerks discharge their duties, and the registration clerks are not touched by the motion of the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman appears to have entirely overlooked the fact that there is this difference between the Dominion Franchise Act and the Manitoba case, that where in the Dominion a person who is not a judge is appointed a revising barrister, there is an appeal. There is not that in Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is no appeal, the hon. gentleman says—

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is no appeal in any case, I presume.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And I do not see that there is any advantage in that. Will my hon. friend tell me now in how many cases there have been appeals under the Dominion Elections Act from a revising officer, who was a barrister, to a county judge?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We always think if there is a right of appeal that it is a great check upon a revising officer.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It serves as a deterrent.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I know what the deterrent is. We saw it in the city of London. There was a revising barrister there who was not a county judge. He decided that some two hundred names ought not to go upon the list, and an appeal was taken to the county judge and the county judge put them on, and everybody admitted, and the judge of the superior court held, that these names ought not to go on, and perhaps nothing has ever happened in the province of Ontario that did so much injury to a judge as that did to that judge in the city of London. Now I say this, that my hon. friends have made out no case at all. Take the case of Nova Scotia. There has been a succession of governments there, and have they undertaken to substitute the county judges for the sheriffs? No, certainly not; because they had only one county judge for about three constituencies.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I have told you why.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes; the hon. gentleman mentioned one case.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That is the only term that the Conservative party in the local legislature had power since federation—between 1878 and 1882.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The principle was adopted by the Conservative party in Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—In connection with the sheriffs?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I understand so, and I think I can show that my hon. friend is mistaken in this before we have done with it.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Will my hon. friend allow me to explain? In 1883 the appointment of sheriffs was given to the local executive. An appeal was given to the sheriffs from the revisers in connection with the local lists for the first time in 1889, and the sheriffs were appointed first in 1883.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Let me call attention to the condition of things in the city of Halifax. I find that under the law there the revision is annually made by an official appointed by the city council, and the local government have nothing in the world to do with it, that the city council authorize the revision by a party whom they appoint, and if that is so how can the local government—

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That is an exceptional constituency in Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Very well, we have yet to find men who have come here for the purpose of showing that any serious wrong has grown out of the condition of things existing in Nova Scotia in this regard.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Very serious. The Liberal party have held power almost uninterruptedly since confederation under those lists.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—So they have in the province of Ontario, but it has not been due to any tampering with lists, because the lists are not under their control.

At six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—As I am anxious to get on with the measure, I shall detain the House but for a very few moments. The hon. gentleman for Brandon called the attention of the Senate to the difficulties that occurred in Manitoba with regard to the admission of names to the list, and with regard to their being put off the list. But any one who has attended a court for the purpose of having the list properly revised knows that the decisions he complains of are the recognized rules that are followed by the revising officers everywhere. There is universally the same practice in the province of Ontario of which he complains in the province of Manitoba. I have always been of the opinion, and that is one of the advantages in adopting the local lists, that it is far less expensive and troublesome to make a new list than to undertake to revise an old one. In making a new list, when the matter is in the hands of a municipality, the assessment roll is the basis. When the court of revision have before them an assessment roll and they find that a man who was on as a tenant the year before, and who, because he was a tenant for certain properties the year before, was also transferred to the voters' list, when they find he is not on the new assessment roll as a tenant, his name is dropped, making a new list and so the candidates on both sides, or the representatives are not put to the expense of undertaking to examine that party, who may be outside of the constituency altogether, or examine the owner of the property for the purpose of proving that he is no longer a tenant interested in the property. The assessment roll may disclose that a new tenant has taken the place of the old one. My experience in all the revisions that have so far taken place has been that the cost to a representative, or to a party on the opposite side, to get names off the list that were improperly on, is more than the cost of everything else connected with the revision of the list put together. In my opinion, one of the very great advantages in adopting the provincial system is that you get rid of that expense, and you have simply to make a new list, which consists in nothing more than copying names from the assessment roll, and the addition of those parties who are not there and who perhaps ought to have been there, but who are known, where we have six or seven municipal officers acting together, to one or other, or all of those present. You seldom have a municipal body in which both parties are not represented. It is very seldom, except in some towns and cities, that political considerations enter into the elections of municipal offices. Each candidate is anxious to secure all the votes he can, and in order to accomplish that object, he seeks to make as many friends amongst those who may differ from him politically as he can from the other side, and so in every municipal council there are representatives of both the political parties and the interests of both parties are usually served in that way. I know in many instances that the whole revision takes place before the whole municipal body and there is no appeal whatever to the county judge, because the work is so satisfactorily done in the municipal council that it is seldom necessary to appeal. I remember but one instance, in the constituency that I for thirty years represented, where the assessor was a man of very strong political feeling and prejudices, and he left off all the farmers' sons on the opposite side from the assessment roll. It was thought the better way to do in his case was to bring an action against him in the court under the law, and that was done. The late M. C. Cameron was judge in the case, and this man seemed to be under the impression, because Mr. Cameron had been a member of the Conservative party at one time, that he did not take much risk in standing a trial before him ; but when he heard Judge Cameron address the grand jury at the opening of the court, he thought it better to escape. He went to Detroit and I do not know that we have ever had, on either side in the constituency, any trouble arising in that way after that judicial proceeding. Now, if hon. gentlemen will look at section 31 of the Manitoba Act they will find that the whole provision with regard to the revision of the list differs scarcely at all from the provision in the Dominion law as it now stands. My hon. friend opposite me here mentioned to-day that if the case was one tried by a revising barrister, under the law an appeal might be had to the county judge. There are very few instances in which that is ever resorted to. I only know of one, and as I said before that did not turn out very fortunately for anybody. Where a lawyer of fair standing is appointed, I do not know why, if that is found convenient or necessary—because the country is large and the judges are few in number, as in the case of Manitoba—I do not know why he may not be trusted. I remember in 1873, when Sir John Macdonald was in office, when it was proposed to establish the first court for the trial of controverted elections, provision was made for the appointment of ad hoc judges, and those ad hoc judges were barristers of at least six years' standing. Now, if you could entrust the trial of controverted elections to others than judges of the regularly constituted courts, to those who were in practice and who, apart from the particular judicial duties imposed upon them, were still practising barristers, surely the principle might be applied to the revision of the voters' list. If you can trust a barrister of six years' standing to be an ad hoc judge, you may trust him to revise a voters' list in order to establish who may or may not be on that list. I apprehend if the hon. gentlemen will examine into all those cases where there are variations it will be found that those variations have grown out of the circumstances of the population, and are really matters of convenience. Now, in the province of Nova Scotia you have but seven county judges, and if you omit the judge at Halifax, six. You have 18 counties, and as my hon. friend (Mr. Power), mentioned this afternoon, to require the revision of the voters' list over the whole province by those judges would occupy an inconveniently large portion of their time. I am of opinion that the system——

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Their work is very light, indeed, now outside of the Halifax court.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—However that may be, I apprehend that that system was adopted, not from any political consideration, because I find that at the beginning it was acquiesced in by both parties and adopted as a matter of convenience, and I think that whenever the appointment of the judges is more, or equally convenient, the appointment of judges will take place. Hon. gentlemen will remember that the appeals are, in the vast majority of cases, exceedingly few. I venture to say that the appeals all over this Dominion do not constitute three per cent—perhaps not one-third of that—of the entire number of voters upon the voters' list, and that being so, we are, I think, justified in looking to the question of convenience. As it is, we take out sixty days after the list reaches the printers, in order to give time for printing the entire lists of this Dominion, and if you impose those duties solely upon the county judges in the province of Manitoba and in the province of Nova Scotia, you would be obliged to add more than sixty days more to the time that would be required in order to get the lists ready to be sent to the clerk of the Crown in Chancery. I think, then, looking at all the considerations that we are bound to give weight to, that the law as it stands on the whole is satisfactory—that, at all events, if it is found not to be so, the local legislature, who represent the people specially concerned in making these lists right, who are themselves personally affected, will influence that legislature quite as strongly as they can possibly influence the House of Commons here. That law, as it stands, has met with the approval of the legislative assembly in every province of this Dominion. They have made it what it is, and it has met the approval of the House of Commons here, the people's representative in the legislature of the Dominion, and it does seem to me that it would be taking a most extraordinary step if this House, consisting of members appointed by the Crown, should undertake to alter and change the law in a fundamental particular that concerns the constitution mainly of the other House. This House is the judge, the sole judge of its own privileges; but this House assumes that the second chamber have no greater interest and no greater authority in dealing with the electoral lists than this House itself has. Now, I do not admit that. I do not question the power of this House to amend an election law with regard to its verbal phraseology; but I do deny its constitutional right to alter that law or amend it in a fundamental particular. The party that is at the present time in the majority, that has bestowed its confidence upon the present administration, went to the country in 1896 upon the adoption of the local law of the provinces for the purpose of the electoral franchise. That was one of the issues submitted to the country. This measure that is now before parliament is before the House in fulfilment of the mandate that was then given by the majority of the electors in this country to the present administration.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—That was not the issue.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend says it was not the issue That is simply a preposterous interruption. My hon. friend knows it was as much an issue as any other one that was contained in that series of resolutions adopted in this city by the three thousand representatives of the Liberal party from every portion of this Dominion in 1893.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—It was one issue.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Unquestionably it was one; I do not pretend to say it was more than one, and if there is any meaning to be attached to the doctrine of our constitution, when a party submits its policy to the country and an election takes place upon the issues thus presented, and it is sustained by a majority of the electorate, then it is bound to undertake to fulfil its obligations, and the second chamber has no constitutional right whatever to interpose an obstacle in the way. Now that is the doctrine settled under the English constitutional system in 1882. That is the doctrine accepted, and it is most elaborately and clearly set out by Mr. Leckie in his work on Modern Democracy. He points out the functions of the House of Lords, and he shows the difference between the powers of the House of Lords in respect to all questions upon which public opinion has not been sought, and the questions upon which public opinion has been sought. Take the case of the abolition of the Established Church in Ireland. Mr. Gladstone proposed a resolution on that subject in the House of Commons, approving of the abolition of the Established church. What was Mr. Disraeli's position? He said: "What you propose is a fundamental change in the constitution of this country. We, as a parliament, have a right to legislate; the measure which we adopt to-day may be changed to-morrow, but when you propose to alter in a fundamental particular the constitution of this country you ought to have a mandate from the country itself." Mr. Gladstone acquiesced in the doctrine laid down by the leader of the opposition. A dissolution took place; an appeal was had to the nation; the result of that appeal was a majority returned in favour of abolition. It was well known that nine-tenths of the House of Lords were opposed to the disestablishment of the Irish Church: they favoured the continuance of church and state in Ireland. They thought that authority of government would be weakened by the abolition; but did the House of Lords set up the private opinion of its members against the verdict of the nation? Did they express an opinion at variance with that verdict? Not at all. The House of Lords acquiesced in it, and although they may have undertaken in minor particulars to amend the resolution——

Hon. Mr. MILLER—And it is a minor matter that we are amending this bill now.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I entirely dissent from my hon. friend's view in that particular. I say it is a matter of fundamental importance, and that being so, the verdict of the country has been pronounced, and while this House may alter or amend that bill in some particular the better to perfect it and carry out the object of the bill itself, they are not at liberty to amend the bill in any particular which will alter its character. What is the character of the bill? That the qualification of the voter and the means of ascertaining it and the preparation of the list are such as the local legislatures have been——

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Is that the case with Nova Scotia under this bill?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly it is the case of Nova Scotia. My hon. friend knows quite well that the Dominion government fought the government of Nova Scotia, and my hon. friend knows that there were over four thousand men on the Intercolonial Railway that were marched like soldiers to the polls to vote against the local government, and in order to obtain a fair expression of opinion it was necessary that there should be, for local purposes, an independent electorate. That rule does not apply in the same degree to us, at all events it does not apply under the present administration, for there is no intention to control the individual vote of any voter or official.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—My hon. friend is not justified in saying that they were driven to the polls.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Does my hon. friend forget the twenty-four thousand shingles.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That has nothing to do with it; however it was in New Brunswick anyway.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We know what it meant. It is like Joseph's dream; they had a figurative interpretation.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—The hon. leader of the government in this House referred to an interruption of mine as a preposterous interruption when I said that the question of the franchise was not the issue in the general election. In 1893 there was a convention of the Liberal party which laid down a platform. In that platform I am prepared to acknowledge that the change in the old franchise law was set forth; and I do not know that it even went so far as to say it was to be based upon the provincial list. The question, so far as the provincial list is concerned, is a perfectly right one in so far as we should use the provincial list as the basis, but I do not know that it was propounded as a policy of the Liberal party that we should abandon the national position of the question and relegate entirely the control of our franchise to the provinces; that we should let go that principle, which I think is a sound principle and a principle we should retain, to maintain the national character of our franchise and the national character of this parliament in every way. The hon. leader of the government says, it having been made a part of the platform of the Liberal party, that therefore it was preposterous for me to interrupt him as I did. Now, hon. gentlemen, since 1893 a complete change came over the minds of the people in regard to the issue the general elections were fought upon, and that was the settlement of the Manitoba school question. That was the great issue, at any rate in that province where the large majority was obtained by the government by which they were sustained and brought into power. Outside of the province of Quebec I think that the balance between the two parties was almost even, in fact, if I remember rightly, in almost every province there was a slight Conservative majority and the majority upon which the government attained power was entirely the support they obtained from the province of Quebec on the settlement of the school question, and, therefore, when I say that it was not the issue, and when I say that the country did not take the ground that the hon. leader of this government is taking at the present moment, were it not sustained outside of the school question, I do not think the words "preposterous interruption" are justifiable under the circumstances, when all the provinces outside of the province of Quebec, when the school question overshadowed everything else, gave an even balance, there is no great preponderance of voting power so far as this particular question of the franchise is concerned. Now, hon. gentlemen, with regard to the amendment itself, while I have the greatest respect for my hon. friend who sits in front of me here, I do not think myself that it is wise for us to make this amendment; and I will give you my reasons for thinking so. In the first place, I think the law itself is defective in a great many instances as a Franchise Act, to succeed the one that has been abolished. The main feature of it, according to my mind, is the absence of that national character that I think should be retained. The amendment is only for the purpose of altering the Franchise Act in one or two minor particulars, that is to say, as regards the provinces of Nova Scotia, Manitoba and New Brunswick. My hon. friend from Wolseley (Mr. Perley) was formerly a representative from New Brunswick, and he thinks that the alteration should not been made in so far as the province of New Brunswick is concerned. I do not know that we are justified in making any alteration in so far as Manitoba is concerned. And why? Because the law in the province of Manitoba with regard to an appeal to a judge or a revising barrister, is identically the same as the Dominion law which was passed by the former government, and therefore, if the laws are exactly the same in that particular which we were working under before the present government came into power, I do not think that we are justified in making a change in that direction. The fault is not in the law of the province of Manitoba. It is the fault of the government. It is the fault of a government who desire to utilize the franchise in order to perpetuate power by corrupt means, if the statements made by the hon. gentleman from Brandon are correct. I myself live so far in the interior, away from the large centres of population, that I am not acquainted with these matters so much as my hon. friends who live more in the centres of population; but if the statements are anywhere near correct that were made by the hon. gentleman from Brandon, it shows that it is not the law that is defective in regard to the matter, but it is the appointment of corrupt men who will utilize the power that is placed in their hands for a short time in order to manipulate the franchise in the interests of the government and in the interests of the party.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—If such a bad use has been made of the law in our province, is it not well to improve upon it?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—When we come to discuss broad questions of this kind we have to take precedents into account. Our own law, which has been in force a number of years, is the same as the provincial law. Well, our own law is bad in this respect.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—We should improve the law.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—It is a question how far it is wise for us to make the change. We do not anticipate that the province of Manitoba is going to be in the hands of the present government for ever. I hope we have not got into that system by which a government, having once reached the treasury benches, is there for the life of two or three generations. If that is the case, the people have got into a very unfortunate position, so far as their party instincts are leaving them to be blind to the interests of the country, if they are enabled to hold office by patronage or pelf or whatever it is called. I do not believe that public feeling has come to that. I believe there is a feeling, which is lying dormant now, which only needs to be roused to lead us into higher channels. In the province of Manitoba it is not so much the fault of the law, as it exists there, but it is the fault of the government who appoint men who use that law to the disadvantage of the people in the use of the franchise. I do not pretend to know anything about the province of Nova Scotia. As I understand, that province has a law by which the sheriff is the judge and the man that is appealed to. How far this amendment will improve that position I am not prepared to say. They are both public officials. The sheriff is a public official, and I have heard it is an annual appointment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No, during good behaviour.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I understood it was an annual appointment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—If it is a life appointment during good behaviour, he stands very much in the same position as a judge so far as his independence is concerned.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—He is appointed during the pleasure of the government.

Hon. Mr. POWER—During good behaviour.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—In New Brunswick they are appointed annually.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—No, they are not.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—It resolves itself down to this; while I would be ready to support the amendment to correct what the hon. gentleman considers a weakness so far as that province is concerned, is it wise for this House to return the Franchise Act at this late period of the session with an amendment which the government refused in the Lower House, and which the leader of the government in this House has also refused? What would be the result of our action in regard to that? The result of the action would be to send the Franchise Bill down with a small amendment, and then we enter into a conflict with the House of Commons at this late hour of the session. The Commons will send it back to us, refusing to accept that amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is quite right.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—If the hon. leader in this House represents the views of the government in regard to that matter, what is going to be the position of this House if we pass that amendment and send it down to the House of Commons and it is sent back to us? We have either to accept the refusal of the Lower House and pass the bill, or else we have to throw it out altogether. Is this House prepared to accept the responsibility of that? The Plebiscite Act, which is one of the planks in the platform of the Liberal party, is contingent upon the passage of this Franchise Act, I think.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Not at all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, certainly.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It need not be.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The promise was given that the vote should be taken on this.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—What trouble would there be in amending the Plebiscite Bill in order to have the vote taken on the local lists?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Lists prepared five years ago.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That is what I meant when I alluded to attempts to coerce this House.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—However, that is what I understood. At any rate, leaving that point out of the question, it is for us to consider how far it is wise for us to urge such a small amendment. If the hon. gentleman had gone further and attempted to say that the present government has taken away the national character of the franchise, which is an essential, a constitutional point, I say this House would be perfectly right in taking cognizance of it, I do not agree with the hon. leader of the House in that particular respect when he says we have the power, but it is a most unusual power to exercise, to interfere with the franchise which pertains only to the Lower House. But when such an essential point as altering the character of the franchise is brought up, I say we would be perfectly justified in taking that position. Unfortunately, the government has brought down these important measures just on the eve of prorogation. I have been told that prorogation is to take place on Saturday, and that would leave only two more days.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—The statement was made on the authority of members of the government, but I know it cannot take place. I know that the Senate has to finish its deliberations, and no matter how long it may take, we must have time to consider the important measures which are still to come to us, the postal and other bills. Prorogation cannot take place until the Senate has passed upon these measures. With regard to this particular bill, after hearing the debate, I may say that my sympathies are with the hon. gentleman from Richmond.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I would sooner have your vote.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Well, if my judgment led me in that direction, after hearing what I have heard, I think I would not like to be a party to sending this bill back to the House of Commons at the present moment, with the prospect of its being returned, and we would not know what to do.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I wish to say a few words in reference to something which was said about this being a question before the electors at the last election. It was one of the issues, but there was very little said about it. There were several other issues. Are the government going to carry out all the promises they made before the people of this country, or only one of them? What were the promises they made to the country? They promised economy in all the public service. They promised that all works should be let by tender to the lowest bidder. Are they carrying out those promises to-day? They are giving contracts to their friends in the country without calling for tenders, and I say now that I will have much pleasure in supporting the amendment offered by the hon. gentleman from Richmond, for the reason, that if we cannot get what we want, we should try and improve what the government have given us, in order to give the people of this country some chance of recording their votes without being influenced by the government of the day. The position now is that the government of this country, composed of thirteen, fourteen or fifteen gentlemen, are declaring to the world by their action that they are not able to devise and produce a Franchise Bill in order that the electors of the country may return members properly to the House of Commons. And why? They hand it over to the local legislatures, thus declaring that they are not able to do it themselves. At the same time, I am bound to endeavour to improve this bill, and I think the proposed amendment will have the effect of improving it. It makes no difference, as far as I am concerned, whether the House of Commons send it back or accept the amendments. I am not carried away by the same feelings and fears as the hon. gentleman from Shell River. I am here to do my duty to the people of this country, and I shall discharge my duty as far as I can. I take this course in the interest of the people of this country in order to give them fair play, and I think this amendment will have that effect. This is a very important question; it is just a question whether we are going to have an honest election in this country or not. If we pass this bill without amendment as urged by the hon. gentleman from Shell River, do hon. gentlemen suppose we would have an honest election?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I do not want it to go through, but the amendment will not stop it.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—It will improve it. Certainly an appeal to the judges will improve it. The government of this country declare by their action their inability to give a Franchise Act to the people of this country to enable them to record their votes honestly, and they hand the responsibility over to the local legislature. If my vote will improve the bill by assisting to pass this amendment, I shall be glad to record it, and I would say to the government that I hope they will carry out the other pledges they made to the electors of this country. But they have not done so and they will not. I do not desire to impute motives, but it seems to me the only object of this bill is to enable them to handle the franchise so that they can keep themselves in power. They should not be afraid of the honest electors of this province, and should give them a chance to record their vote. I consider I would be doing a wrong if I let the bill go through without this amendment. Some people say "Let them go, give them rope enough and they will soon hang themselves." I will not wait for that. I want to do my duty honestly from day to day to the people of this country, and I consider I shall be doing it by supporting this amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I desire to say a few words in reply to the position the hon. Minister of Justice has taken as to the effect of the proposed amendment tothis bill. He has made the statement, that it is a direct and positive interference with the Franchise Acts of the local provinces. I concur in the position taken by the hon. gentleman in reference to the duty of an Upper House after a principle has been confirmed by the people. Therefore I shall not discuss that question with him. I may say to my hon. friend from Shell River, however, that his argument was in opposition to any interference with the franchise altogether. His argument was in favour of a uniform Dominion franchise, with which I am in full accord. But the party now in power went to the people with that as one of the planks of its platform, and the people, we have a right to presume, having elected them, affirmed the principle of returning to the local franchises, and for that reason I shall not consider myself justified, as a member of the Upper House, in moving the rejection of the bill. If it occupied the position of the other bills which we have rejected, if it stood in the same position as Acts which were passed by the House of Commons in England, the principle of which had never been submitted to or approved by the people I would then join with the hon. gentleman from Shell River, and if no one else would move its rejection, I would not hesitate to take the responsibility of doing so myself. We know that this, among other planks of the liberal platform, was approved of by the people, and though the parliament of Canada to-day are taking a retrograde step, in my opinion, it is in accord with the popular will as evinced by the last election. My hon. friend touched upon other matters, to which I shall refer briefly afterwards. If I were to term the arguments and statements made by the hon. Minister of Justice as disingenuous, I do not think I should be using too strong language. My hon. friend says that the Senate of Canada has no right to interfere with the Franchise Bill that has been approved by the House of Commons. He admits, however, that we have the right to amend the law so far as it affects the carrying out of the principle of recording the votes and of securing an honest ballot, if possible. Now, he says that to pass this bill would be a direct interference with the election law—he did not say the Franchise Act —but the election laws of the province. There is a difference, because the laws upon the statute-book clearly define the distinction between the franchise and the election law. The franchise is given to the people upon certain conditions, whether they be of age, property qualification, as in the province of Quebec, or manhood suffrage, as it is virtually in the province of Ontario. Then there is an election law placed on the statute-book for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Franchise Act. All that the amendment which my hon. friend from Richmond offers, proposes to do, is to perfect, as nearly as possible, the election laws of the country, and it does not interfere directly or indirectly with the franchise.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It interferes with the lists.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to know in what way. The law in my own province will illustrate the necessity for this amendment as well as any other. A man has the right to vote, provided he is on the assessment roll. It provides that if he is improperly put on the election list another elector may apply to the court of revision to have his name taken off. If they refuse to do it, he can take an appeal to the county court judge as to his qualification, not as to how he shall record his vote. It does not interfere with the Franchise Act in any manner whatever.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The question is whether he shall have a vote or shall not.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is interfering with the voters' lists.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That provision is made in all the laws of the different provinces. It is only a different mode of reaching that end. My hon. friend has no right to be on the voters' list, if he be not of age, for instance. If he is on the voters' list and is not of age, he has no right to vote, and consequently his rights are not interfered with by his name being struck off the list. If he is an alien he is in precisely the same position. Now, the only proposition that the amendment makes, and which my hon. friend from Richmond intends, is to ascertain the fact whether that man is entitled to vote, or whether he is entitled to rights of franchise under the law of the province, as it exists. That is all he asks to do. If it is such a sacred right—if the provincial lists are so sacred that they are not to be touched, and it has become almost, according to the speech of my hon. friend, sacrilege to interfere in any way, or by any means, with the voters' lists, why have they placed in this very bill before us a clause which interferes directly with the Franchise Act and the right to vote and the disqualification of voters in one province? The law of Prince Edward Island says that a man occupying such and such a position, shall not have the franchise. That man has no more right to vote under the laws of Prince Edward Island than if he were a minor or an alien. But this bill says he has a right to vote, thereby interfering directly with the provision of the Franchise Act of provinces in which a certain class of people have been disqualified. Yet they tell us it is a sacrilegious act to appeal to a judge to have justice done if an injustice has been done. I gave a practical illustration the other day in reference to my own case. That was an actual, palpable case in which the officer, whose duty it was to make the assessment, served me with a notice, and when I looked at the notice I saw that Mackenzie Bowell was assessed for a certain lot for a certain amount. I did not object to the value placed on the lot, because it gave me a vote, and I had been assessed at that rate for a number of years. But that assessor, before returning it to the municipality, reduced that assessment, for no other purpose than to disqualify me from having a vote in that riding. What other object could he have had? The object of every assessor and township council is to collect as much as possible from property, and wherever it can raise the value of property owned by what they call absentees—that is gentlemen who own property in other than the riding in which they live—they put the assessment up as high as possible so as to get as much taxes out of them as possible, so there could have been no other reason. My hon. friend says if in a case like that in Nova Scotia you give the voter a right to appeal to the county judge for justice, you are interfering with the fundamental principle of the Franchise Act.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not know how any man of common, ordinary reasoning powers—I will not say common sense—could come to any such conclusion, unless he is prepared to take this position, that the election law which governs and controls the manner in which you shall vote, is of the same character as the law which gives you the right to vote. If the two are similar and analogous then my hon. friend is right, but we know that it is not so. We know that the one has nothing at all to do with the other. On the contrary, the amendment that is proposed is for the purpose of securing for the elector the right which he should enjoy if any attempt is made to take it from him; and instead of it being an interference with the Franchise Act, it is an amendment to secure to each and every individual the right which he possesses as a free subject and which the law should give him. But, in the case of Prince Edward Island, the Minister of Justice is giving votes contrary to the Franchise Act, contrary to the laws of the provinces which say that certain persons shall not have a vote; yet he says that if a man has been deprived of his vote, in Nova Scotia or Manitoba, he shall not have an opportunity of appealing to the courts to have his name recorded. I cannot, for the life of me, understand how a simple proposition of this kind, to secure beyond a doubt or peradventure, the rights of each individual, can be considered an interference with the great and fundamental principle of a right under the Franchise Act. The object of the amendment is nothing more nor less than to secure to a man who has a right to vote that right when an attempt is made to deprive him of it. The hon. Minister of Justice says that the government is not prepared to accept this amendment. The government is not prepared to accept anything that is suggested, if it is not in accordance with their particular view and idea. I take it that the duty of the legislature, where they do not go beyond the powers vested in them, whether in the House of Commons or in the Senate, is to make laws of this character, particularly where they affect the right of the people to exercise their judgment in making the law as clear as possible, in order to secure the rights to which each individual is entitled. That is the way I view it. The hon. gentleman says if you pass this amendment he will drop the measure altogether. So far as I am concerned, individually, I prefer a Dominion franchise on the principle of uniformity rather than the disjointed system proposed here, having a different standard of voting in each province, but the government having decided to change the system; every member of the Senate, whatever his individual opinion may be in reference to the general principle itself, has assented to the change and our only desire is to make the law as distinct, plain and equitable as it possibly can be made. That is the only object of the amendment of my hon. friend from Richmond, and I repeat that that amendment is no more an interference with the voter, nor so much, as the amendments which have already been accepted by the hon. gentleman who has intimated to-night, that he is prepared to accept some of them so as to make the bill workable in some of the provinces, in which, as the bill is now presented to us, it would be impracticable to operate. My hon. friend, as usual, with that solemn shake of the head, dissents from that point.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is an extravagant statement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The House knows whether amendments have been made since the bill came here, and we know that the Minister of Justice stated to the hon. member from Marshfield (Mr. Ferguson) that he would accept amendments not interfering with the principle of the bill, which would make it more workable in Prince Edward Island, though in some cases it would be different from the laws of that province, because they are made for an open vote, whereas under the Dominion statute it is to be a vote by ballot. Why, I should like to ask, is that interfered with? If the people of Prince Edward Island believe in open voting—as I do, though I know I have often got votes under the ballot than I would not have got otherwise—if the principle of adhering to the local laws is so sacred, why is open voting departed from in Prince Edward Island? Is that not a much greater interference with the right of the voter than the proposition made by the hon. senator from Richmond? It may be that they prefer the ballot in Prince Edward Island. If they do, why should not the local legislature place it on their statute-book? But you are going to give the voters in Prince Edward Island, a secret vote for Dominion elections, while the law of the province provides for an open vote. I do not object to that. I do not know but it is an improvement, because it makes the law to that extent more uniform throughout the Dominion, but I say it is a direct and palpable interference with the mode of voting in that province. We do not propose to do anything of that kind by this amendment; all we propose to do is to secure the rights and privileges of men who can be, have been, and will in the future, be deprived by violent and unprincipled partisans when they have an opportunity of doing it, of the right of casting their vote. The hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Power) used the usual tu quoque argument in reply to the hon. gentleman from Brandon. He asked what did Mr. Howell say in reference to the iniquitous Conservative party in Manitoba. Supposing all that was said by Mr. Howell was correct, and the iniquities to which he referred had been perpetrated by the Tory party, and they put it in juxtaposition with the wrongs and fraud of the Grit party, does that make it right?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I did not use it as an argument; I used it as an illustration.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I admit there is no argument in it; it is not very often the hon. gentleman indulges in a thing of that kind. You made the statement simply in reply to my hon. friend behind me, who pointed out how voters might be deprived of their vote, and to show that the Tories were just as bad as the others. If ninety-nine hundredths of what was alleged by Mr. Howell to have taken place were true, then every man of them ought to have been sent to jail. I quite agree with my hon. friend there, and in that respect there is this difference between the two. The member for Brandon stated facts within his knowledge as to the frauds which had been perpetrated, the manner in which they accomplished their end, and Mr. Howell stated at the Public Accounts Committee that certain wrongs had been done for which he received over $12,000 as a fee to try and right.

Hon. Mr. POWER—He spoke under oath.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What are the facts? Mr. Sifton had Dominion money placed at his disposal for the purpose of prosecuting these cases in Manitoba. He went to the courts, and before the grand juries, and he succeeded in only one case in getting a conviction. My hon. friend then insinuated that all these jurymen were perjurers, because that was really the effect of the statement made by the hon. member for Halifax. I take it for granted that the jurymen and the inhabitants of the province of Manitoba, most of whom formerly lived in the eastern portion of the Dominion, are just as honest as we are in this section of the country, and are no more likely to perjure themselves when a criminal case is brought before them, or any case in violation of the law, than gentlemen in Halifax, Ontario or Quebec. Hence an insinuation of that kind was uncalled for, and a reflection upon men just as honest as ourselves ; more than that, this Mr. Howell was the lawyer who had pocketed some three or four thousand dollars more than the Minister of Justice, after taxing the bills, said he was entitled to. Whether they are going to make him pay it back, or not, I do not know, but if there is any supposition of a prejudice existing, I fancy it would be on the part of the legal gentleman who was making the money out of the transaction and desired to impress upon the committee and the public, who had to pay this money, that he had earned his fees.

Hon. Mr. POWER—He was stating facts under oath.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend says he was stating facts under oath. The hon. gentleman is making a statement of which he has no knowledge whatever.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The witness is sworn.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You said he was stating facts. He no doubt was stating facts as he understood them. I have known Mr. Howell from his boyhood. He was a resident of my town, and belongs to as respectable a family as is in the country, but I say he was acting as the solicitor of the government, and no doubt was impressed with the idea that what he had done was right, and that the parties he was prosecuting were guilty, but he did not succeed in convicting, and we have the right to assume—

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think if he had a jury composed of men of the same character as the majority of this Senate that he would convict them no matter how strong the evidence was that he brought before them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should be very sorry to say that the vast majority of the members of this Senate were of the calibre and had the same opinion of the hon. gentleman, that he has attributed to them. That is just as much as to say that when it came to a question of party, the members of this Senate were ready to perjure themselves. That is an insult that would not be tolerated outside of the House if applied to any hon. member of it. That is all I say in reply; from the hon. gentleman's present statement I am led strongly to believe that he is judging others by himself. There is another case, the Prince Edward Island case, to which I will devote a few moments before I sit down. In 1874 the franchise of the Island of Prince Edward was interfered with by the House of Commons, and in the interference in the readjustment, if I may so use the term—

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Well, in establishing a franchise for the Dominion. Will that do? I think I am correct.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Where am I wrong?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There were two franchise lists at the time, one for the election of one House and the other for the election of the other, and it was the franchise for the election of members to the Upper House that was adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is true; but the law as it was passed by the House of Commons disfranchised a large number of the electors in Prince Edward Island who before the passage of that Act, had the right to vote.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the fact; we have the evidence of it here in the Senate reports. There is no question of it at all, because when the question came before the Senate, the Hon. Mr. Hamilton, who was in the chair, a proposition was made to amend, and did amend, the law which interfered with the right of electors in Prince Edward Island to vote. The vote in committee was 23 to 23, and the clause as it came from the Commons was amended by the casting vote of the chairman in the committee. When the question of concurring in this amendment was made, by whom do you suppose it was made? By no less a person than Hon. Mr. Letellier de St. Just, when the bill received its third reading. I must do Mr. Letellier the justice to say that he took very much the same position that my hon. friend does as to the rights of the Senate to interfere with the Franchise Act, but he approved indirectly of the course which the majority of this House had been pursuing. I will read his language:

> The Hon. Mr. Letellier de St. Just moved that the amendments made by the committee of the whole to the Election Bill be concurred in. (Hear, hear). At the same time he held that this chamber should not have made any change in the bill as it was one which related entirely to the other House. Notwithstanding the slight amendment which had been made to the bill there was still enough in it to commend it to the favour of the country, and if the amendment would make the bill more acceptable to the people of Prince Edward Island he would the less regret that it had been made. After a few remarks from Messrs. Wilmot and Haviland the motion was carried.

Such was the action of the Senate on that occasion; reserving the rights of those who formerly had votes to exercise that right in the future. That is what the ministers have done to-day in reference to the disqualified voters in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia, so that they stand on parallel lines; the government of the day have taken the same course, so far as that class of voters is concerned, as the Senate took in 1874, in reference to the voters in Prince Edward Island who had been deprived by the Commons of their rights; and it is a remarkable fact that of the six Liberals at that time representing the province of Prince Edward Island in the House of Commons, every man jack of them voted to disfranchise that large class of people who had not the hundred pounds qualification on the island. It is the old adage that where you find a man continually prating about being Liberal, scratch his back, and you will find a tyrant. I can tell the hon. gentleman that so unpopular was that movement in Prince Edward Island that it drove Mr. Laird out of public life, for when he went back to the island, owing to the attempt of the government to disfranchise those people, the resentment was so great that he did not dare to show his face in any constituency. He came back after his term as Lieutenant Governor expired in the North-west, and received the fate that all men should receive who acted as he did, in assisting in disqualifying their fellow-electors. My hon. friend referred to a case which affected my hon. friend, Sir John Carling. If my recollection serves me right, my hon. friend was not strictly correct in the manner in which he put that case to the Senate, nor was he correct in his statement in reference to the Elgin case. If these iniquities to which he referred did occur, all they had to do was to go to the judges and have them rectified. I may say parenthetically that we had a case—and I look upon it as an illustration of the impartiality of our judges in the province of Ontario, only at this last election, a dispute arose as to one vote, whether the ballot had been properly marked in this same county of Elgin. The election depended on one vote—my friends from Ontario will remember the case very well—and the Conservative judge gave his decision in favour of the Liberal and returned him. The case was appealed to a superior court and Mr. Justice McLennan, a well known Liberal, who was appointed to the superior court bench by my late leader, the Hon. Sir John Macdonald, when I was in the government, after taking the case into consideration and deliberation, reversed the vote and gave the seat to the Conservative candidate. I merely mention that to show that, so far as we are concerned, we the people of Ontario have unbounded confidence in all the judges that sit on the bench. Now, there was a difference of opinion; I believe that Conservative judge honestly gave it to the Liberal because he thought the ballot was spoiled, and Mr. McLennan, believing he was wrong, changed the vote and gave it to the Conservative. Of course it has gone to the Court of Appeal. In the London case a Conservative, Mr. Fraser, gave a decison which would disqualify a large number of voters, my hon. friend said 200.

Hon. Sir JOHN CARLING—It was not 200, it was over 100.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That was appealed to the judge. Mr. Fraser was not a judge, he was revising barrister appointed, as I explained the other day, because Judge Elliott had been appointed reviser for another county, and Judge Elliot decided that, from a want of compliance with the law of the land, these men had a right to be on the list. They were on the list and they had a right to remain there. It was appealed to another court, and that court decided, if my recollection serves me, against the decision of Judge Elliot, and then it was carried to the Court of Appeals, and there it has remained till this day, and they have never given any decision, the only inference we can draw from this fact is, that the Court of Appeals cannot decide among themselves, hence a decision was never given.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Was a decision given by the Court of Appeal?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, but it was not because of the reason given by the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—One thing is certain, they did not give a decision; but I can tell my hon. friend this, that when the decision of Judge Elliot was published his interpretation of the law was sustained by nine-tenths of the judges of the county courts, and others who gave an opinion on the subject, and the matter has remained in statu quo from that day to this. My hon. friend, however, kept his seat all the time, and that was ample compensation to the voters of the city of London. No one supposes for a moment that any one can make a law so perfect that fraud will not be perpetrated; but what we desire to do, is to give a man the right to go to the highest tribunal in order to secure to himself one of the dearest rights that he possesses as a British subject, and that is the right to cast his vote. I do not propose to proceed further on this question, although there is a great deal more that might be said. All we ask to-day is to place the voter in the position that, if his rights are interfered with, he will have an opportunity of having his name placed on the voters' list so as to enable him to cast that vote when any opportunity presents itself. It has been said in the way of a threat that if this bill is not passed—

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I did not make any threat.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not say the hon. gentleman did. The threat was made by other members of the House, and I watched particularly to see if my hon. friend would reiterate it. Threats have been made that if the Senate dare to make this amendment to the election law—not to the Franchise Act—that they would drop the bill, and that no vote would be taken on the plebiscite. They are the gentlemen who must assume so grave a responsibility. It is not we who will assume it. I am quite willing to accept all my responsibility, notwithstanding all the abuse which has been heaped upon the Senate by the organs of the hon. gentleman. Whether my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, is a constant reader of the great organ of his party I do not know. I know one hon. gentleman opposite told me that he did not read it very often, and the hon. gentleman behind him was very impressive when he denied that he was responsible for anything that appeared in it. This organ laid down a principle, I do not know whether it was intended to hit my hon. friend because he had expressed an opinion in favour of the second chamber or not. The editorial said:

> It is a piece of arrogance for this House to attempt to interfere with the Franchise Act as it is sent up to them from the other House.

The only interference in the Franchise Act has been made by the hon. gentleman opposite, who is responsible for it, and consequently if the arrogance applies to any one it must be my two hon. friends opposite. We have not interfered with the franchise at all. My hon. friend opposite ought to thank the hon. gentleman from Marshfield (Mr. Ferguson) for the cool, calm and dignified manner in which he has pointed out to them the impracticability of the bill as it stands, and I was pleased to see that the hon. Minister of Justice was prepared to accept the suggestions, because his desire should be, as our desire is, as we must have this law to make it as perfect as possible. I have no doubt amendments will have to be made after it has been tested, but we must endeavour to secure to every man the right he inherits as a British subject.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I may say a few words with respect to a personal charge made against me by the hon. leader of the opposition. I wish to have an opportunity to set myself right.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would not have referred to the matter if the hon. gentleman had not interrupted.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am not troubled by what the hon. leader of the opposition said, because the hon. gentleman is in the habit of exaggerating the statements of his opponents and putting them in an unfair light, as I propose to show. The hon. gentleman from Brandon (Mr. Kirchhoffer) made some statements with reference to the trial of those parties in Manitoba who had been accused of offences in connection with the last general election, and I said, half in jest, that I presumed the reason verdicts were not found was that there were too many good Conservatives on the juries, and then the hon. leader of the opposition undertook to say that I had accused the jurors of being perjurers. The hon. gentleman knows very well that that was not a fair statement to make. I stated then, by way of illustrating my meaning in the present case, that I should not care to bring a case of that kind before a jury composed of men of the same feelings as the members of this House, and he said I was accusing the members of being prepared to perjure themselves. Any man of common sense knows very well that on a jury, or any similar tribunal, one is influenced by his feelings, whether they are political feelings or feelings of other kinds. Take the case of the electoral commission in the United States, appointed for the purpose of deciding whether Tilden or Hayes had been elected. That tribunal was composed of some of the ablest men in the United States, having amongst its numbers several judges. There were seven Democrats on one side and seven Republicans on the other, and the fifteenth man happened to be a judge. He was looked upon as being fairly impartial, and he took the Republican view. That is one tribunal made up of judicial minds who went according to their party convictions, and it is no crime to say of this House that members would be influenced by their political opinions. I think probably I am nearly as cold-blooded as the average member of this House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—More so.

Hon. Mr. POWER—And I have no doubt if I were a juror on a trial, of a political character, that I would, even though I were anxious to do what was honest and right, be influenced by my political feelings, and any hon. gentleman here who says he would not be influenced by his political feelings does not understand himself.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am glad to hear the explanation, but it is not strictly correct. When the hon. gentleman interrupted the hon. member from Brandon it was in another portion of his speech altogether, and the instance in which I thought the hon. senior member of Halifax had insulted every member in the House, was, when he interrupted me, when I was referring to the fact of the jurors not convicting the men who were prosecuted by Mr. Howell, who said they were guilty of such and such acts. Then the hon. gentleman interposed by saying he had no doubt the same thing would result if it went before a jury composed of men of the same feeling and character as the majority of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And no deduction could be drawn from his language, either then or now, other than that which I deduced from it; and I regret exceedingly that such expressions should be used. I may use strong expressions from a party standpoint, but I hope I may never so far forget myself as to impugn the character and reputation of nine-tenths of the members of this chamber, as was done by the senior member from Halifax, simply because they dare to differ from him upon questions of state.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I thought that some senior member from my province would rise to challenge some of the statements made in this debate. I would like to record my protest against the proposed amendment which may defeat this bill, in view of the verdict rendered in the province of Quebec on the 23rd June, 1896. I may state that the repeal of the Franchise Law was one of the most important questions debated in that election. We had great difficulty in our province with reference to the franchise, because in Quebec the word "registration" was absolutely unknown. Up to the day that that law was passed, we had our municipal councils doing all the work, and the electors hardly ever had to go to the secretary of the council to see if his name was on the list. We had a perfect system of registration which did wrong to no one, and it hardly needed supervision, because the council generally represented both parties and we had a perfect system of registration which worked automatically without the parties being disturbed in the least. But after that law was passed, both parties looked at each other with distrust, expecting that the revising barrister would not give satisfaction, and they appointed attorneys to represent, and considerable expense was involved through this law coming into operation. It caused such a perturbation in the province that when a vote was taken in the House of Commons a few years ago a certain number of Conservatives voted against it. I remember that the member for Laprairie and the member for L'Assomption abandoned their party allegiance to vote against what was termed an obnoxious law in Quebec. Therefore I cannot allow the statement made by the hon. gentleman from Shell River, that it had cut no figure in the election in the province of Quebec, to go unchallenged, because, as a matter of fact, there was not a speech delivered on the platform, or a sheet of campaign literature sent to the electors, where that law was not discussed. It was asked generally in the convention of the Liberal party in 1893, that there should be a repeal of the Dominion Franchise Law. That sweeping declaration, pure and simple, a repeal of the law, made it clear that we wanted to go back to the old regime, and it was so understood by the electors, and that is one of the reasons why it seems to me this House should not try to amend the bill. Some of the members of this House want to amend the old system which prevailed from 1867 to 1885, and to change the condition of things which prevailed at that time, contrary to the will of the people expressed in the vote of the 23rd June, 1896. As a matter of fact, we are now entering upon a conflict with the House of Commons, which has been elected to re-establish the old system which prevailed before 1885, by adding an amendment granting a right of appeal in three provinces, one of which, New Brunswick, declares through its members it does not want it.

Besides, such an amendment constitutes an assault upon the rights of those provinces. This new Franchise Act accepts the provincial law through all the provinces, and puts them on an equal footing. The proposed amendment disturbs this equilibium and puts these three provinces in a state of inferiority towards the others.

The statement is made that the government will assume the responsibility of abandoning the plebiscite if this law is rejected. There may be a plebiscite this year and there may not, but if this Franchise Bill is not passed, it will be materially impossible to take the vote. Why? Because we will not go to an electorate one-third of which is disfranchised, to vote upon a list which is four or five years old, and if we have to return to the old law, we will have to appoint revising barristers, or use those we have to start a revision which will cost a large amount of money in order to ascertain the opinion of the people upon this issue. It seems to me the government, having rejected an amendment similar to this, will not accept this amendment and therefore we are entering upon a conflict with the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. MASSON—We are no better in the province of Quebec than the people here. In Quebec we have an appeal to the judge. We desired an appeal over the heads of the councillors. The fact that there was that appeal prevented the officers putting a good many names improperly on the list because they knew they would be struck off by the judges in the end. That is why we appear in a better position, although we are really no better.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Will the hon. gentleman admit that there was a desire on the part of the province to return to the system of having the lists made by the municipal council?

Hon. Mr. MASSON—I do not say that. The question before us to-day is not whether we should pass this law or not. We are ready to pass it. But we want a small amendment to have our revising officers' work revised by the judges. That is the only point in question. We all admit that it worked well in Quebec.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But if you defeat this bill you thwart the will of the province of Quebec.

Hon. Sir JOHN CARLING—I do not wish to take up the time of the House, but I did not happen to be in the chamber before six o'clock when the hon. Minister of Justice made his statement. I understood that the hon. gentleman cast some reflection on Judge Elliott.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He did not mention his name.

Hon. Sir JOHN CARLING—I have known Judge Elliott for the last forty years and I think I will be borne out in the statement that a more upright gentleman does not live in this Dominion, and his action was according to law. He rendered his decision and afterwards he received letters from all parts of the province, some of them from judges, highly approving of the decision that he had given and the course he had pursued during that trial.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—All I did was to refer to the case of the London election. I said that there was there a revising barrister, Mr. James Fraser, who decided one way, and there was an appeal to the judge who reversed his decision, and public opinion approved rather of Mr. Fraser's views than those of the judge. That was my statement. My hon. friend went farther just now and referred to a judge on the Queen's bench. The judge of the Queen's was in favour of Mr. Fraser's view and not of the view of the judge. The question went to the Court of Appeal. My hon. friend says it was hung up there, but the fact was this, the county judge being given a conclusive jurisdiction in the matter of these appeals with respect to the revision of the voters' lists, neither the Court of Appeal or the Queen's Bench had power to control his action, and having no power to control his action, the Court of Appeal took no further steps, but I think there was little room to doubt what their view was. I was making no reflection on Judge Elliot or anybody else. We were discussing the question, at the time, of an appeal from the revising barrister to the county judge. While I am on my feet, I will speak a few words to my hon. friend who complains of the hard words used by my hon. friend from Halifax. But my hon. friend forgets that when he began his speech he declared that the observations which I had addressed to the House were very disingenuous. I do not think my hon. friend behind me said anything harder with regard to the hon. senator than my hon. friend's remarks were to myself; but I did not think it was necessary to complain. My hon. friend has also said that, in discussing this question, I have confused the election law with the Franchise Act. It was my hon. friend who did that—I did not. The voter is not a voter, in all the provinces except Prince Edward Island, until his name goes on the list, and the question is how his name shall go there. The question of the list is part of the provincial law, and when you are adopting that you are adopting a provincial law relating to the voters' lists. My hon. friend said also that the Liberal party had undertaken to disfranchise, when we were in power, a number of people in Prince Edward Island, and he complained of that disfranchisement. Now, my hon. friend argued in favour of national lists, as he calls them, and in favour of a uniform franchise.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not argue in favour of it; I said I was in favour of it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That has been the law since 1885 to this moment. My hon. friend knows that if you adopt the principle of uniformity you have to cut into the local law somewhere, and so the principle for which he contends as a vital principle in the preparation of the voters' list, does the very thing which he says that we did. But that is not all. At the time the Act was adopted to which he refers, Prince Edward Island had two qualifications, the one for the election of members to the one house, the other for the election of members to the other house, and both were elective at the time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So they have now.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The question was which electoral list should be adopted. I might say it is a matter of history, and there is no harm in stating it, that so far as the Liberal party are concerned, with the exception of those in Prince Edward Island, they were in favour of taking the franchise for the popular branch of the legislature. But Mr. Liard pointed out that, being without a voters' list, while he approved of the franchise of the popular branch of the legislature, until they had a voters' list there would be a great many voting who were not entitled to vote. Men came in from the United States, fishermen and others, went to the polls in time of election, recorded their votes and left, and until they got a proper voters' list they were not safe in taking the manhood suffrage of Prince Edward Island rather than the property qualification required. There was no departure from a list. It was a question whether it should be the list of one house or the list of the other, and the representatives from Prince Edward Island preferred the list of the second chamber until a proper voters' list should be prepared under the law for the election of members to the most popular branch of the legislature. That is the whole case.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman has made a statement somewhat similar to what he made in his speech when introducing this bill, and that is, that the principle of uniformity, which was strongly claimed for the Dominion Franchise Act of 1885, was not adhered to, that there is a lack of uniformity in the Dominion franchise, and that that has continued up to the present time. I know that my hon. friend and his friends have made a great deal of that point in the discussion on the Dominion Franchise Act, in 1885, but whatever there was in it at that time, I can assure my hon. friend that there is nothing whatever in it now. All the departure from the principle of uniformity that was made at that time, so far as it relates to Prince Edward Island, was this, that it was provided in the bill that every one who possessed a qualification under the provincial law at that time should continue to have that privilege so long as he retained the qualification and no longer.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But you put Indians on also.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Not in Prince Edward Island. The hon. gentleman referred first to Prince Edward Island and now he refers to the matter of Indians. That lasted only a few years, and for the last two revisions of the voters' list there has never been an application to put anybody on the Dominion list the old franchise of Prince Edward Island. The persons who were so registered in 1886 changed their qualifications, and so they are all merged in the Dominion list. My object in rising was to bring my hon. friend to task for a statement he made a moment ago, and repeated before, with regard to the case of Prince Edward Island in 1874, to which my hon. friend the leader of the opposition has referred. My hon. friend tries to get out of the position that his party placed themselves in at that time by saying that there were two sets of qualifications in Prince Edward Island, one for the Upper House and one for the Lower House, and that all the Liberal party did at that time was to take the qualification of the Upper House. That is true, but instead of taking the franchise by which the popular branch was elected, they discarded that and took the qualification of voters for the Upper House, which was £100 freehold, and by that means attempted to disfranchise nearly one-half the people who voted in Prince Edward Island for the popular branch of the legislature. It remained for the Senate to make that right and it is a remarkable fact that the six members representing Prince Edward Island in the House of Commons at that time all participated in the wrong that was then attempted in taking away the qualification of electors for the popular branch—they all concurred in that act of the Liberal government of 1874, while the four senators representing the province in this House helped to make it right. It is a fact that the Hon. Mr. Haythorne, a Liberal well known to members of this House, voted with his Conservative colleagues from the island on that occasion to retain the franchise to the electors of Prince Edward Island for the popular branch, and I heard the Hon. Mr. Haythorne say, when he returned to the island, at a public meeting, what he had stated to myself personally before that: "I told the hon. gentlemen of the Senate that I could not return to Prince Edward Island and look the young men of the province in the face if I had been one of those who attempted to deprive them of their vote." I mentioned that to show the view taken by Hon. Mr. Haythorne on that occasion, and he was a Liberal, and a Liberal of the old school. I want also to call the members of the government to another case in which the Senate had the assistance of a very eminent Liberal in righting a wrong, in regard to an electoral question, which was attempted by the House of Commons. I refer to the Tuckersmith Bill and the Hon. Geo. Brown is on record as declaring that the action of the Senate at that time was right. What was the action of the Senate then? A bill had passed the House of Commons providing that the township of Tuckersmith, in the county of Huron, should be transferred from one riding to another. It was immediately after an election and the electors of Tuckersmith, which was a large township, had already recorded their votes largely in favour of a Liberal candidate in the general election. Mr. Cameron, the member representing one of the ridings of Huron in the House of Commons at that time, had his seat protested and he expected to have to run his election again, and he had a bill introduced in the House of Commons detaching the township of Tuckersmith from the riding in which it was, and attaching it to his own constituency, in order to help to give him a majority in the election which was to follow. The township had already cast its vote in one constituency and this attempt was made to have it added to another riding and to give the electors a second vote for the same parliament. The Senate took the stand that this was tampering with the franchise and should not be tolerated, and they amended the the bill, and the Hon. George Brown is on record that the Senate did right. If the Senate had a right to amend the election law of 1874, introduced in this House by my hon. friend the hon. Secretary of State, representing the Mackenzie government, and if the Senate did right, as Mr. Letellier appears to have thought they did, for he moved concurrence in the amendments made to the bill which was carried unanimously—surely we are within our rights now if we do merely, in a matter of detail, a matter of routine as it were, which does not affect the ground of any body's qualification, amend this bill. It is only a mode by which the real merits of the qualification of a voter shall be ascertained, and if we are wrong in making that amendment the Senate must have been very far wrong, and the Hon. George Brown must have been far wrong, the Hon. Mr. Haythorne must have been wrong when they concurred in the action of the Senate on the occasions to which I have already referred. I can sustain, and I do so in the strongest language possible, the words of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition when he says that the action of the Senate with regard to Prince Edward Island in 1874 was sustained by the people of that province. There was never any Act of parliament of Canada that was more universally approved of. I never heard of a man who was prepared on a public platform to defend that bill which proposed to take away the vote of one-half of the electors of the province, and there never was to my knowledge a man so poor in the island as to do it reverence. My hon. friend was quite correct in saying that whether the Hon. Mr. Laird, a respected citizen of our province, and a man who has played an important part in the affairs of the country, was responsible for that act or not the reputation of that hon. gentleman and his popularity in the province of Prince Edward Island were greatly affected by what was done on this occasion. As far as I am personally concerned my only desire is that we should join together and make this bill as good a one as it is possible to make it. We do not dispute the right of the government to pass a measure of this kind based on the provincial franchises. Whether the people clearly understand the issue or not, there is no use to argue that now. The Liberal party had a majority at the polls, and we admit that they put this question before the country; we admit further that they have done fairly well in the matter of preserving the votes of the Dominion officials. That they have departed somewhat from the principle of the bill is, I think, something for which they are to be commended, their object being to make the bill as good as it possibly could be. It takes away the very radical objection that lay against it, that is, when they adopted this clause 6 in the House of Commons; we admit all this. I desire to put on record in the strongest way possible my desire to assist the government in making this bill as workable and as good as it possibly can be made, so as to give the fullest exercise of the will of the people of every part of Canada as far as it is possible to do it in connection with the system they have adopted. I do not think it is a good system. I think it is a bad system. I think it is very hard to make it workable. I believe it will be found to be beset with a great many practical difficulties; but nevertheless, as the government are wedded to this principle and have brought down the bill, I have no desire, as I said before, but to assist the government in making it the best possible bill on the lines they have undertaken.

The committee divided on the amendment which was carried by a vote of 34 to 16.

On clause 20.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We have now come to one of the sections which relates to the Prince Edward Island difficulty, the question of making the provincial oaths applicable which I referred to the other day when we were considering clause 5 subsection (a). My hon. friend will remember that he then told me he would endeavour to meet the difficulty when we reached this section.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—In considering this matter, I may say to my hon. friend that it seems to me the better way would be to add a short clause at the end, that the Governor in Council may take power to alter the oaths as required by the provisions of the Act.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is all right. Would it be better to pass the section till that is finally done?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, make a separate section.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 21.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I may say this clause reaches the very heart of our difficulty on account of our not having a voters list. I have prepared an amendment to this which would require some little alteration in other clauses, in order to fit in, and I was going to suggest to the hon. leader of the House, as it is now half past ten, that he should consent to the House rising and I will give notice of these amendments and in that way every hon. gentleman could see how they fitted into the other provisions of the law. I think it would really facilitate matters very much because it would be quite possible then to understand them and it would take a good deal of explanation to make them plain now, because it is a local difficulty.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am unable to see any difficulty in the way. Certain verbal changes would require to be made in the local oaths, and with such an additional section as I have suggested, the whole difficulty would be met. I would therefore suggest that the clause be carried.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The difficulty here is a very grave one It effects the qualifications and the franchise of the province very seriously. The suggestion that I have made would prevent or render unnecessary very many explanations. Otherwise, I will have to make the explanations the best way I can, in order that hon. gentlemen may know what I mean. The objection to this clause arises from the fact that in Prince Edward Island we have open voting and no registration. In every other province in Canada there are lists, and in the preparation of these lists there are some officers entrusted with the duty of deciding after a man has made a declaration, or after his qualifications have been put before the authorities whether a man has a vote or not. There is no such provision on the island. On the contrary, every man is at liberty to go to the poll and claim the right to vote on election day. He will do that under this law. The oath may be presented to him, it is true, but as some men will do, in the towns especially, supposing he will go into the poll on election day without a shred of qualification and take the oath. If a man takes all the oaths presented to him, his vote will have to be taken and his name entered on the poll book, and a ballot given him, and when he records that vote he may be only one of a hundred bad votes, and there is no way by which the man with the good votes can be elected.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Has not every man a vote?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In no country under the sun has a man who is under 21 a vote. Supposing a young man under 21 should come in and take the oath, supposing a tramp, a bird of passage, who goes from one place to another, should come in and take the oath. There is this class of people in Charlottetown the same as other places.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Does the hon. gentleman propose that the returning officer shall sit as judge and refuse votes?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not propose anything of the kind. I propose a method of dealing with those votes by which the ultimate decision will be by the county court judge. My suggestion is that when a man comes into the poll and offers his vote, the oath can be offered to him and if he takes the oath and the scrutineer is morally certain the man has no vote, he can make an objection and it can be recorded on the poll book. And the very same course should be pursued as has been pursued under the Dominion Franchise Act in the undecided appeals: that a ballot shall be given with a number on it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Every man might take a numbered ballot.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That suggested itself to me at first, but it would be no advantage to a candidate to object to people indiscriminately. In fact it carries with it a responsibility and an odium. His friends will object to good men being challenged and there is some hesitancy about objecting to a vote because it may offend some one. The question of the validity of the objected vote would reach the county court judge on a recount of votes. My hon. friend raised the objection that the presiding officer should not be a judge. He would have nothing to do under the suggestion I make but to take the votes and make the numbers correspond and treat the vote the same as any other vote in the box and count it, except that he would leave it in an envelope.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is an open vote.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No, it is not an open vote by any means. It is just the same as the ballot vote which is provided in Ontario for all the voters. They are numbered in England in the same way. It is not an open vote, because no person in the poll will know how the man voted. In the counting of the vote it would be difficult to observe these numbers; still there is a bare possibility of that occurring, but the scrutineers are sworn to secrecy. There is that difficulty in the undecided appeals, but no person would have any business to interfere with the vote until it reached the county court judge to whom the matter would be referred, who would decide on the validity of the vote.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Somebody has to be declared elected within a certain time and that decision might not be given for months.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No person is declared elected, if a recount is demanded, until the recount is over, and this would come up on the recount and the county court judge would only have the right to examine the ballot when the vote had been declared bad. The vote had already been counted, and if it were a good vote, no harm would be done; if it were a bad vote the county court judge would have power, under the law, to expose the ballot and find whom the man had voted for in order that he might remove one vote from the candidate who had received the bad vote. When you come to look at it in that way, there would be no inquiry into how the man voted until the vote was declared bad.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Then it could not be counted.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes, it would be counted precisely the same as all other votes at the close of the poll by the deputy returning officer. You would put the ballots in an envelope, sealed and numbered.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Then you would know to whom the ballot belongs and you will know which way he voted.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No person will have any opportunity of knowing until after the investigation and until after the county court judge has declared the vote to be a bad one, and then it will come out.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not agree at all with the principle which my hon. friend contends for. The whole provision of this bill is that these parties in Prince Edward Island, where there is no registration of votes, have in addition to the ordinary oath to make a further declaration, where required, as to their qualifications; and then the protection against persons voting fraudulently is the possibility of their being prosecuted under the Act.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The existing law provides for similar cases. A man comes up and finds his name has been taken by another elector; he makes his declaration and a ballot is given him but that ballot is numbered—

Hon. Mr. MILLS—You know how he votes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If it goes before the court.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have only just one word to say. Perhaps I have still failed to make myself plain, but what I wanted to say is this: the fact that ultimately, if this vote was a bad one, it would become known in the recount before the judge, who voted and who cast it, would not be at all a serious matter, that is, when the vote has been declared bad before even the judge could see it. I do not think there is any great principle involved, but there is a great object to be gained. I do not think there is a great object in maintaining secret a vote with a disqualified voter of that kind. There is some objection to this suggestion, but if my hon. friend will suggest any way to get over the difficulty I shall be delighted. I have consulted with some of the members from Prince Edward Island, and they think with me that this is the best and simplest way of getting over the trouble. In the island at present, at our provincial elections, we have open voting, and the consequence is it is known how every man votes, and when a candidate or his agent finds a vote being recorded against him, they have an objection marked, and then there are two scrutineers, one before the returning officer and another in the process of an election trial, by which these votes are sifted and found out whether they are good or bad. I tried to suggest a way by which some remedy might be found. My hon. friend's object is to carry out the mode of election and the objects attained by the provincial law. Now, my object is to attain precisely the object that is attained under the provincial law, and which my hon. friend cannot possibly get unless he adopts some plan of this kind. Under the provincial law, if bad votes are recorded, the candidate against whom they are recorded has a judicial remedy, and the bad vote is struck off by the court, and finally the man who has the majority of good votes is elected. But under this bill, the man who has the most votes, good or bad, retains his seat and there is no court or power that will take that right.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I would be obliged if the hon. gentleman would just tell me, under the bill which is now before us without amendment, how it is possible, if bad votes come in, as they may in a great many cases, and the oaths are taken and the presiding officer—who has no right to be a judge when the oaths are taken—gives the ballot and it is dropped in the box, I should like my hon. friend to tell me how it would be possible for a man honestly elected to get there, supposing 100 bad votes had been recorded against him, and that gave the majority to his opponent.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman is asking me a question. I am told on the Island of Prince Edward that you cannot go into a single community where you can find a man who would be an entire stranger to all the rest of that community; that the vast majority of the voters are of the rural population that belong to the island, and if a man has no qualification, that fact is known to all his neighbours, and if the oath is presented to him he is not likely to take it, for he would be instantly arrested by people who knew he was committing perjury, and in consequence of the rural character of the population, their isolation, they are mutually known to each other and there are fewer fraudulent votes recorded in Prince Edward Island than in any other section of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Is there no chance of impersonation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is no chance for personation there.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I have heard of hundreds of them.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—In the cities.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No one would be more delighted than I would be if what my hon. friend says was the case, but I am sorry to say, without any disparagement of Prince Edward Island that there are just as many bad people there in proportion to the population as anywhere else. I believe the hon. gentleman never was in Prince Edward Island, and I think from the remarks he has made that he is like some others I have talked to, who think the place is so small that you could hardly let a horse go at full speed for fear that you would not have time to pull him up again before he would be in the water. But my hon. friend will recollect that the city of Charlettetown has from twelve to fourteen thousand inhabitants. And take any city of that population, there will be hundreds of people that will present themselves at polling places that the agent or the returning officer had never seen before. These men will come in and claim a right to vote. Now my hon. friend thinks there is a remedy because there is punishment for perjury. My hon. friend knows very well that there is no crime in the calendar so hard to prove as the crime of perjury. A man might not have perjured himself at all, and still have put in a miserably rotten vote and believe he had a good vote, and you could not possibly attach the crime of perjury to him, and still the vote was bad. That did not help the candidate against whom the vote was recorded. I tell my hon. friend, wherever he got this information to the contrary, that I have a good deal to do with elections in Prince Edward Island under the provincial law, and I have no hesitation in saying that if it were not for the remedy that we have afterwards by which we could bring repeaters before the presiding officer, and prove the fact of voting twice, and if it were not for the fact that we have a remedy by going to the court of law afterwards, there would be not infrequently a bad expression of public opinion in Prince Edward Island. It is a pretty loose system, and admits of wrongs almost under any circumstances, but when you connect non-registration—every man proving his vote in the polls—with a ballot system, the ballot as soon as it is given, being put into the box, and that is the end of it, you will see at once it opens the door for any amount of bad voting, and the popular will can be defeated on every side. I move the following amendment as clause 21*a* :

In the province of Prince Edward Island, if any person desires to vote whose right to vote is objected to on the ground of want of qualification, and if a candidate, or any agent of a candidate, or (in the absence of such agent) any elector acting in the interest of a candidate, so objects in the presence of the elector, the deputy returning officer shall number and place his initials upon such ballot paper before delivering it to such person, and shall place opposite to the name of such person in the poll-book a corresponding number, and thereupon such person shall be entitled to receive such ballot paper and to vote.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—My hon. friend should move that it be inserted as a special clause. I think any one who has looked over the provisions of this bill must come to the conclusion that there should be some means of checking the vote in Prince Edward Island other than provided in this bill. Under the provisions of the bill as it stands, whether a man in Prince Edward Island is entitled to vote or not, if he takes the oath tendered to him, his vote must be received. We know that in the other provinces of the Dominion there is a remedy for any wrong of that kind, and I do not see why the government, or any party, should object to there being a remedy in Prince Edward Island the same as in Ontario, where a man attempts to record a vote which he is not entitled to cast. It would be only fair to provide some remedy there where persons not qualified attempt to vote and to enable persons to vote who are entitled to do so, but who, by some fraud on the part of the revising officer, are left off the list. The clause proposed by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield is, perhaps, the only provision that can meet a case of that kind, and I certainly think it should be incorporated in the bill.

The committee divided on the amendment which was carried : Yeas, 18 ; nays, 7.

On subsection one, clause 23.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I move to add after the words "produce" in the 31st line of this subsection :

And in the province of Prince Edward Island the words "objected to" opposite the name of such person voting whose right to vote has been objected to under section 21 of this Act.

The amendment was carried on a division.

On clause 26.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I move the following as subsection 26*a*:

In the province of Prince Edward Island the deputy returning officer shall also, in counting the ballots, place in a separate envelope or parcel all ballot papers numbered and initialled under section 21*a* of this Act.

The amendment was carried on a division.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In addition to the other amendment I wish to move the following amendment as 26*b*:

Section 57 of the said Act shall not apply, in the province of Prince Edward Island, to the determination of the qualification or non-qualification of any voter whose ballot paper has been numbered and initialled under section 21*a* of the said Act as amended by this Act.

Carried on division.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I move this amendment as subsection 26*c*:

Section 58 of the said Act as amended by section 8 of chapter 11 of the statutes of 1888 is hereby further amended by striking out all the words from "candidate" in line four to "of" in line nine, and by inserting after the word "papers" in line ten the words "and of the ballot papers numbered and initialled by him under section 21*a* of this Act."

I may explain that this amendment so far as the words to be struck out are concerned is to correct an error in drafting. They refer to the appealed votes and these words that are being struck out are not struck out in the interest of the amendment that I am making, but they are struck out as they have reference to the undecided appeals and they should have been taken out along with other references to the same in other parts of the bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Really, I cannot follow the hon. gentleman's amendment. I do not know whether those should go out or not. I think that making an amendment of so important a character without any kind of notice to the committee is unreasonable. We ought to have time to examine and see.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend is right, and that is what I suggested, that I should be allowed to give notice and the hon. gentleman would have had it in his own hands.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend ought to have done that a week ago.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend has no right to say that, because he gave me some assurance that he was willing to do it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is the voters' list.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I was expecting until to-day that my hon. friend would provide a remedy for this difficulty himself. He gave some hope that he would try and do it, but he has not. It is quite plain, my hon. friend will see, that the words that are being struck out here have reference to the undecided appeals. The amendment that I wish to get in, and which is important, could not be attached to this bill without striking out these words.

The amendment was carried on a division, and clause 26 as amended was adopted.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman is obliged to resort to an official of the House to find out what his amendment is. I hope the official and the member will be able to fix up what we could not do. I am greatly obliged for the courtesy.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not an unusual thing for a member of the Senate to go to the law clerk for advice on matters of that kind.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If he is the author of the bill, and has charge of it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If he is the author of the amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If he is the author of the bill and has charge of it, he not only obtains the information but assistance in the wording of it, and members of the Senate often go to the law clerk, and ask him how a bill will affect the laws of the land. It saves them the trouble of looking into the law themselves.

On clause 5.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I have a consequential amendment to move to subsection c of clause five. It includes the subsection c with the qualifications necessary in consequence of the passage of the amendment. It reads as follows:

(c.) The voters' lists shall, except in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba, be those prepared by the several polling divisions so established and which on the sixtieth day next preceding the day fixed for the nomination of candidates for such Dominion election were in force or were last in force under the laws of that province for the purpose of provincial elections, and in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba, shall be the voters' list as amended under the provisions of clause a of this Act, which were prepared by the registration clerks or revisers for the several polling divisions so established for the purposes of provincial elections and were filed at least sixty days previous to the day fixed for the nomination of candidates for such Dominion election with the officer having by law the custody of the same.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have no objection. I am not supporting it.

The amendment was carried on division.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I wish to suggest an amendment to clause f of subsection 5 :

But nothing herein shall enable any person to vote by schedule or otherwise than by personally appearing and recording his vote.

The amendment was adopted.

On clause 27.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I move to add in clause 27 after the words "twenty-eight" the following :

And by substituting therefor the following :—(3) In the province of Prince Edward Island that any person not duly qualified to vote in such electoral district has so voted.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think there is the same objection to making this amendment in this way that there was with respect to the amendment proposed to be made to clause 32. My hon. friend's amendment does not bear at all on section 64 of the Election Act. The amendment should bear upon the section which it proposes to amend.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It bears precisely upon it. The scope of this amendment is that the returning officer has to make his report to the superior court judge in Quebec, or the county court judge in other places, first, ballots that he has improperly counted, and, secondly, ballots that have been improperly rejected, and, thirdly, that in the province of Prince Edward Island any person not qualified in such electoral district has so voted, and the county court judge has duties to discharge in connection with these matters. These are matters which are germane to the clause.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, I think so.

The amendment was adopted.

On subsection 2.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I wish to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the amendment. It is not germane to the Prince Edward Island matter at all, but he will find in the 49th line of section 64 of the Dominion Election Act that there are three lines that relate altogether to the undecided appeals matter, and I want to call my hon. friend's attention to it, because all other references to it, as far as we know, have now been removed from the Election Act, and ask whether he thinks it would be right for this committee to rise and leave this provision in it :

The ballots used at such election, or the original statement of the deputy returning officer, as the case may be, and also that the duly certified copy of the formal order of judgment on any such appeal as above mentioned in respect of, or in consequence of which such recount is to take place.

That has reference to a judgment that has been given on these undecided appeals, and should not be allowed to remain in the Act. It is not my particular business, but as they stand in the Act they have no business there, because all these undecided appeals have been put an end to, and all the other references in the Act have been removed.

The subsection was adopted.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I wish to call my hon. friend's attention to section 43 of the Dominion Elections Act :

Each elector shall, subject to the provisions contained in the next following section of this Act, be entitled to vote only at the polling station of the polling district, or one of the polling districts, upon the list of voters for which his name is entered as such voter and no other ; and the deputy returning officer shall secure the admittance of every elector into the polling station, and shall see that he is not impeded or molested at or about the polling station.

To my mind that would prevent any person in Prince Edward Island from voting at all.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say to my hon. friend that we wish to insert a clause with regard to that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is inferentially repealed and we had better repeal it directly.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I therefore move that the following be added to the bill as clause 27*a* : "Section 133 of the said Act is hereby repealed."

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does that repeal the 43rd clause ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend refers to this, that there is a prohibition in section 43 in regard to parties not being on the voters' list; consequently, there being no voters' list in Prince Edward Island, it is not applicable and yet at the same time it may prove misleading.

Hon. Mr. POWER—You might put that, section 43 of the said Act shall not apply to Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The last legislation in point of time will stand but there is no objection to do with that what we did with section 133. I therefore move that there be added to clause 18 the following as 18*a*:

Section 43 of the said Act shall not apply to Prince Edward Island.

The amendment was carried.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman informed the House that at the close of the bill he would insert a short section regarding the provincial oaths. I just call the hon. gentleman's attention to it to suggest whether it should be done now or at the third reading.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Let it be the third reading.

Hon. Mr. WOOD, from the committee, reported the bill with several amendments.

THIRD READINGS.

COLLECTORSHIP OF CUSTOMS AT ALBERTON, P.E.I.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON inquired of the government:

If it is decided to make a change in the collectorship of customs at Alberton, Prince Edward Island; and if so, who is to be appointed to that position?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say, in reply to the hon. gentleman, that John P. Brennan was removed by Order in Council on the 25th of May, 1898, and that he was notified of his removal, and that James F. White was employed as acting sub-collector in his place at the same salary of $400.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I did not cover the point by inquiry, and perhaps my hon. friend is not prepared to say for what reason he was removed.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not in a position to say. I know nothing about it.

TRAVELLING EXPENSES OF MINISTERS.

The Order of the Day being called:

By the Honourable Mr. Landry:—

That he will inquire of the government:

1. How much did cost the voyages which were undertaken in 1897 by the Right Honourable the Prime Minister and the Honourable the Solicitor General, to Europe, to the United States and elsewhere?

2. Are these travelling expenses the expenses incurred by each of these two members of the administration individually, or do they comprise the expenses of a private secretary or of any other persons composing the following of each such member of the administration?

3. Were these members of the administration accompanied by their private secretaries?

4. Had these two members of the administration in their service other persons than a private secretary? Who were such persons and in what quality were they employed?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY said: With the permission of the House, instead of making the inquiry of which I have given notice, I desire to move that an humble address be presented to His Excellency that he will cause to be laid before the Senate a statement of the cost of these voyages. Of course if there is any objection I will simply give notice of the motion now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Better make it a notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I will do so.

THE PAPAL ABLEGATE.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to:

Draw the attention of the government to the following extract from a letter which the Right Honourable Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Prime Minister of Canada, addressed to His Eminence Cardinal Rampolla, Secretary of State of the Roman Court, of date the 30th of October, 1897, which reads as follows:

"OTTAWA, 30th October, 1897.

"EMINENCE,—I made known to you, in the month of August last, when Your Eminence did me the honour to grant me an audience, the happy result which the mission of Monseigneur Merry del Val had accomplished among the Catholics of Canada, and the profound impression which his high Christian virtues and his talents as a statesman—I say statesman, and the expression is not too strong—had created in all classes of our population.

"Having now returned to my country for several months, I wish to make known to Your Eminence that, if these happy results are to remain permanent and efficacious, it is desirable, if not necessary, that the mission of Monseigneur Merry Del Val should be renewed, or rather continued, and that he should be present in the midst of us for a more or less prolonged time as the accredited representative of the Holy See.

"I have established, since my return, that there is among a certain class of Catholics an underhand agitation against the work accomplished by Monseigneur Merry del Val, a work of pacification, concord and union.

* * * *

"The same reason of state which inspired His Holiness in the affairs of France, and which caused him to prescribe to the Catholics of this country the duty of abandoning the old strifes of the past and to accept the state of things agreed upon, has quite as much force in Canada as in France.

"Such is the opinion of a great number of the Catholics among us. I admit that it is not the unanimous opinion; this very divergence of opinion only renders more necessary among us the presence of a man at once firm and conciliatory like Monseigneur Merry del Val, and of one who above all would understand all the danger there is of exasperating the men who are sincere, convinced, and who wish to be faithful to their duty as Catholics, while remaining faithful to what they believe to be their duties as citizens.

"May I be permitted to ask Your Eminence to be good enough to lay these considerations before His Holiness, while assuring him at the same time of my profound respect and of my filial attachment.

"Accept, Eminence, the expression of the high consideration with which I remain, etc., etc."

And that he will ask:—

1. Whether the Right Honourable Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Prime Minister, did on the 30th October, 1897, wrote and address a letter to His Eminence Cardinal Rampolla?

2. Did that letter ask the Most Eminent Secretary of State to send back Monseigneur Merry del Val to Canada as the accredited representative of the Holy See and for a time more or less prolonged?

3. Was that letter sent directly to His Eminence Cardinal Rampolla or was it entrusted to Mr. Charles Russell with a mission to him to deliever it himself to the Most Eminent Secretary of State, in a journey which he was to make, and which he did in fact make, to Rome about the 26th November, 1897?

4. Are the foregoing extracts true extracts from the letter in question, and if they are not true, in what do they sin against exactitude?

5. Has the Right Honourable Sir Wilfrid Laurier received an answer to his request?

6. What is this answer?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I must give to the hon. Senate the same answer that I gave the other day. I do not know that there is any such letter written by Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The hon. member has not established that fact to the satisfaction of this Senate. He has given to the Senate no evidence that there was such a letter written. He has undertaken to put questions to me as a member of the administration about a letter that I do not know was ever written by Sir Wilfrid Laurier. If there was such a letter written it is perfectly clear that it was a private letter written to Cardinal Rampolla, and how can that private letter have come to the possession of the hon. gentleman?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Purloined I suppose.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, by somebody, and does not my hon. friend know that that letter has come improperly into his possession, if there be such a letter written by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and until my hon. friend satisfies me, in the first place, that there is such a letter, and that the letter is properly in his possession, that it was not a private communication and it is in his possession with the consent of Cardinal Rampolla, I do not think I am called on to answer the hon. gentleman's questions.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is a new theory. If the hon. gentleman had taken the trouble to inquire from Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who is not as far from here as Mr. Russell is—Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the hon. minister I think sit at the same table in the council—it would have been very easy for him to know from his own colleague if there was such a letter.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is not my place to inquire with regard to a letter that has come improperly and irregularly into the hands of the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is a fact that is controverted, and the hon. gentleman has no right to come here with controverted facts; he has no right to come here and say that the letter did not come into my possession in a regular way. What does he know about it? Does he know anything at all?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Until I do know something I am not prepared to answer.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is a better answer.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before asking this honourable House to adopt the motion which I have on the order paper, I beg leave to offer a few explanations which I hope will convince hon. gentlemen that I am justified in following the present course. As a member of this honourable body, I think I have an indisputable right of putting, as Mr. Bourinot says, questions to the ministers of the Crown on any subject concerning the public. I thought, and I still believe, that the different trips made to Europe or elsewhere by the members of the present administration, trips which involved the expenditure of public money were questions of public interest. I thought, and it is still my firm belief, that negotiations entered upon by members of the present administration, who went to Rome accompanied by their private secretaries, or by employees of the government, and whose expenses were paid by the country, were negotiations of a public character and that I had a perfect and undeniable right to put all those negotiations in full light before this House and before the country. When the hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier sent his memorial to Rome did he sign such document as a private individual? No. He affixed to his name all the titles that could give it lustre and weight, and it was as Prime Minister of Canada that he entered Rome. When Mr. Fitzpatrick, accompanied by Mr. Charles Russell, called on Cardinal Rampolla, did he send his private card? No, he sent him the card of a public man, the card of the Solicitor General of Canada. When introduced, a pleasant incident occurred. The official reading the card omitted the word "solicitor" and cried out "General Fitzpatrick." General Fitzpatrick was introduced and the following issue of the Italian papers announced to the universe that Gen. Fitzpatrick was within the precincts of the Eternal City. This incident, or accident, would certainly never have occurred if Mr. Fitzpatrick had gone to Rome in his private capacity and not as Solicitor General of Canada. And why did these gentlemen go to Rome? Was it to settle a private affair of a domestic character, or to solicit and invite the Pope's intervention in a question of public concern? Was the school question of Manitoba a private domestic affair in the solution of which the people of Canada had nothing whatever to see? Is it not here a matter of public and undeniable notoriety that this parliament was called on to settle that question by remedial legislation? Is it not an admitted fact that the solution of that burning question was the real issue at the last general election? This, we had granted here last evening by the different members who spoke on the question of the Franchise Act, The hon. prime minister made public statements throughout the different provinces of the Dominion, on every platform, during the last elections. I read all those public declarations and I heard them myself when I happened to meet the then leader of the opposition in different ridings. The press published them. The organs of the Liberal party made them known to every elector of our province. It was, therefore, I think, my undeniable right to inquire of the government if those declarations were genuine as reported by the press. What kind of an answer did I receive from the hon. gentleman? The hon. Minister of Justice, when I first put my question to him, gave me to understand that he had never communicated it to the prime minister, that he was not aware of the correctness of these reports made by the press, but he told me if it was any satisfaction to me he would let the question stand on the paper and he said, "I will bring the question as it stands under the notice of the prime minister." My question stood on the paper. I supposed that the prime minister would be communicated with by the Minister of Justice and that the question would be put to him. It was on a public matter concerning the country, it related to the declarations of the then leader of the opposition who since became the prime minister of Canada. What was the answer? All had been forgotten. I was told that the prime minister did not recollect if he had promised to appoint Sir Oliver Mowat at the head of a commission to settle the Manitoba school question. He knew nothing of the pledges he had given to the country. While I am on my feet I will show the manner in which the ministers treat questions which we put to them. This is one illustration. Does the House desire another? I asked of the government if, in the course of the year 1897 any member of the present administration had made a voyage to Europe, to the United States or elsewhere? What were the names of the members of the administration who had absented themselves from the country? The hon. Secretary of State gave me the names, omitting the name of Mr. Fitzpatrick. I asked the hon. gentleman if he had mentioned Mr. Fitzpatrick. The hon. Secretary of State said, "No; he is not a member of the government." The hon. gentleman had not even looked at my question. He had not seen how it was framed. My question was, "In the course of the year 1897, did the prime minister or any member of the present administration," and so on. The hon. gentleman answered me that Mr. Fitzpatrick was not a member of the government. I told him I was not asking that, but that I was asking as to any member of the administration. The hon. Secretary of State then said that Mr. Fitzpatrick was not a member of the administration; but, being corrected by the hon. gentleman to his left, he admitted that Mr. Fitzpatrick was a member of the administration, and that he would inquire of him. Then, what was the answer to these questions? We would not credit it if we did not see for ourselves what the answers were. The hon. gentleman answered me:

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I sent the hon. gentleman's inquiry to the several members of the administration who had left Canada last year, and whose names I gave him on a former occasion, and I will now advise him of the answers I received from them.

I was inquiring in the second place about the expenses incurred by those ministers who were travelling abroad, and I wanted to know what it cost the country. Here is the communication given by the hon. the Secretary of State:

From Sir Wilfrid Laurier I received a reply that he could not at the moment give the exact figures, but the amount could be had from the Auditor General's report when it was published.

That is one answer. To the second question, as to the expenses of the private secretary, the premier replied that he was accompanied by his secretary and the accounts of the secretary would no doubt appear in the Auditor General's report. That is the kind of answer I got. Put over to next year! As a matter of course the Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick was entirely forgotten. I called the attention of the hon. the Secretary of State to that fact and he said he would inquire. He did inquire, and told me that Mr. Fitzpatrick did not answer at all. I asked the hon. gentleman to allow my motion to stand on the paper and I would give him time to inquire. He said it would be of no use, that I would not get any answer at all. That is the way a member of the Senate is treated here by the hon. gentleman. But I will show more. I inquired about those trips to Rome by Mr. Russell. He is an employee of the government. I asked if, since the 1st July, 1896, the government, or any member of the administration, had authorized Mr. Charles Russell, of the firm of Day, Russell & Co., of London, solicitors, to go to Rome with instructions or permission to speak or act in the name of the government, or the prime minister, or any member of the administration, with regard to the Manitoba school question. The answer given by the hon. Mr. Mills was:

I am informed that he was not authorized to do so either by the prime minister or any member of the government.

Then I came to a more direct question. I asked the hon. gentleman if Mr. Charles Russell had been to Rome to urge on the authorities of the Vatican, the appointment of an apostolic delegate to remain permanently in Canada for the purpose of assisting directly or indirectly in the settlement of the Manitoba school question. The hon. Secretary of State replied "My answer to the first question is no." I thought my question was too leading, and I put a general question including the Hon. Mr. Laurier, the Solicitor General and Charles Russell. At that time I had the letter of Mr. Laurier in my possession. I called the attention of the House to the words of my question:

At any time between the first of July, 1896, and this date has the government or the prime minister or any member of the present administration or Mr. Charles Russell, solicitor, at the request or to the knowledge of or by the authority of the government or the prime minister or any member of the present administration directly or indirectly solicited, asked or invited the intervention of the Holy See for the settlement of any question and of what question.

Has there ever been for the said purpose any voyage undertaken to Rome either by the prime minister or by any member of the present administration or by Mr.

Charles Russell or by any other person at the request or to the knowledge or with the authorization of the government or prime minister or any member of the present administration.

Has any one whatsoever at the request or to the knowledge or with the implicit or explicit authority of the government or the prime minister or any member of the present administration made any overtures whatsoever to the ecclesiastical authorities at Rome to obtain from them any intervention whatsoever.

What were these overtures?

What was the nature of the intervention which was solicited?

Has any one whatsover at any time been authorized to ask in the name of the government or of certain members of the government the nomination of an apostolic delegate to a permanent residence in Canada? When and by whom has any such command been made?

For what object was the nomination asked?

The hon. Secretary of State answered me:

I may say in general terms that the government of Canada have had no communication with the Holy See.

Further on he says:

I have answered that the government have had no communication with the Holy See on any question.

And when I persisted in getting an answer, the hon. Secretary of State reiterated his remarks and said:

I do not propose to give the hon. gentleman any answer beyond what I have already given. That is all the hon. gentleman is entitled to. He is not really entitled to that, but I explained that the government of Canada have had no communication with the See of Rome on any question.

I asked:

Has any one in the name of the government been authorized?

The hon. Secretary of State answered me:

My answer covers that. The government have not by themselves or any other person authorized any communication with the See of Rome. The former answer covers that completely.

In face those general negations, I brought up Mr. Charles Russell's letter and asked as I have asked to-day, in reference to Mr. Laurier's letter to Cardinal Rampolla some information that the government are able to give me. The hon. gentleman to-day says he does not know if those letters even exist. They have not been produced. I did not produce the original of those letters as a matter of fact. Does that prevent me from asking now if those letters exist and if the government acknowledge them to be genuine and if the extracts I gave are true extracts? It would be very easy for the hon. gentleman to see the hon. premier and inquire for me. Sir Wilfrid Laurier is here. If he did not write the letter he can say so. If he wrote the letter he cannot deny it. If he did not write the letter and if I am bringing in a letter which is forged, it is very easy for Sir Wilfrid Laurier to deny it and confound me; but the government are unable to do that. But what they are able to do is this; when I brought up Mr. Charles Russell's letter the hon. Secretary of State on the 12th of May said this:

There is an extract on the minutes from a paper I never heard of, the authority of which I have a right to question. The hon. gentleman produced a document written by some one in the province of Manitoba.

That is a clerical error: he means the city of London.

To one of the ecclesiastics of the church to which I belong which I may say, if the document is genuine has been purloined from Charles Russell or Cardinal Rampolla. It has been improperly obtained and it has been obtained in such a way that no gentleman would use it in a matter of this kind.

Then when I said the hon. gentleman had stated it was a private letter he replied:

I cannot tell anything about the letter. I said, and I say again, that if there was such a copy obtained either at Rome or London, it was purloined or stolen from the party, and I say it is an improper document to be made use of in parliament.

That was the hon. gentleman's answer to me. I am performing what I think is a public duty and that is the way I am treated by one of the ministers of the Crown. With a logic that a seven years old boy would be ashamed to make use of, the hon. Secretary of State concludes that the letter must have been purloined. What does he know about it? That letter has been sent to Rome together with many other letters. Does the hon. gentleman ignore that they are to be found as an appendix to a memorandum which has been circulated amongst the cardinals? And yet the hon. gentleman jumps to the conclusion that if I have a copy of those letters it must have been purloined. My honour obliges me to repudiate that accusation and to ask the hon. minister to withdraw it. It is for that purpose I have brought this question before the House, and I say that an hon. member of this House, in performing a public duty, must have full liberty to do what he thinks it is honourable to do, and what he thinks it is his duty to do. If I consider it my duty to place the government in the true light in which they ought to be placed, why should I be assailed by the reflections of the hon. Secretary of State? He has no right to make the imputations he has made. He has no right to try to cast any imputation upon my character, and in order that he may be forced to substantiate and prove his insinuations or withdraw them, I now submit the following which appears on the order paper :

I call the attention of the Senate to the following utterances made by the Honourable the Secretary of State, on the floor of the Senate, on the 12th day of May, and reported in the official debates of the Senate, page 831, as follows :—

"Hon. Mr. Scott—There is an extract on the minutes from a paper I never heard of, the authority of which I have a right to question. The hon. gentleman produces a document written by some one in the province of Manitoba (City of London), to one of the ecclesiastics of the church to which I belong, which, I may say, if the document is genuine, has been purloined from Charles Russell or Cardinal Rampolla. It has been improperly obtained, and it has been obtained in such a way that no gentleman would use it in a matter of this kind.

* * * * * *

"Hon. Mr. Landry—The hon. gentleman said a moment ago it was a private letter.

"Hon. Mr. Scott—I cannot tell anything about the letter. I said, and I say again, that if there was such a copy obtained either at Rome or London, it was purloined or stolen from the party, and I say it is an improper document to be made use of in parliament."

And I move :

That such statements appearing upon the records of the Senate of 12th May, 1898, page 831, line 25 and page 832, line 16, are a reflection upon the honour and character of the honourable senator from Stadacona, who is thereby inferentially, if not directly, accused of having improperly obtained such document in a way that no gentleman should use it, being a document alleged to have been purloined or stolen, and which was, for that reason, an improper document to be made use of in parliament ;

That such utterances having been made by a member of the Senate who is also a minister of the Crown, are not only offensive, but an imputation upon the character of an hon. senator, which, if true, unfits him to associate with gentlemen ;

That since these statements were made, the hon. the Secretary of State, though ample time has elapsed to substantiate them by an official declaration of any of the parties interested, has utterly failed to bring forward any proof whatsoever in support of his accusations, and the hon. the Secretary of State having publicly admitted that nothing has been done to obtain any proof of the kind ;

That the hon. senator from Stadacona has, in defence of his own honour, a right to ask and that the dignity of this Senate requires, imperatively, that such accusation be proven or withdrawn ;

Therefore, be it resolved, that provided the hon. the Secretary of State do not withdraw such accusations, a special committee be appointed with instructions to inquire into the facts, and report their conclusions to the Senate ; that such committee have power to send for persons and papers, and to take such other steps as they may deem mete in the premises, such committee to consist of Hon Messiers—

I gave no names because I did not like to suggest the members of the committee myself. I leave it to the Senate. It is a question in which I am too deeply interested to be permitted to choose my tribunal, and I leave it to any hon. member to name those who should compose this committee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it scarcely comports with the dignity and character that the Canadian Senate have enjoyed in the past, that communications that might pass between the members of a particular church and the heads of their church should be made the subject of a public inquiry before this body. The See of Rome has no official status under the British constitution. The Crown could not recognize any representative of the See of Rome as such. The Roman Catholic body of Canada might recognize such a representative as a higher ecclesiastic of their church, just as the members of the Church of England would recognize the bishops of their church, or the members of the Church of Scotland the moderator of that church. I ask hon. gentlemen to reverse the picture and imagine the Roman Catholic members of this House bringing forward letters that passed between Presbyterians and their moderator, what would be the indignation of this body that such private matters should be discussed here. We would be told that they should not be inquired into, and were not a proper subject of investigation before this honourable Senate. The hon. gentleman has steadily, for the last six weeks, been dragging this question before parliament, and it seems to me that conduct of that kind is an entire departure from the ordinary amenities that ought to prevail. It should not be permitted, because it is not a matter that the public have anything to do with. What I write to Cardinal Rampolla or what Cardinal Rampolla writes to me is not a matter that parliament should inquire into. When the hon. gentleman first produced that letter, or alleged letter, I doubted its authenticity. I made an inquiry from a source that I thought was well informed, and was advised that a cable had been received from a gentleman who ought to know, that three letters had been purloined from the Vatican. That information may or may not be true. The information was given me by the gentleman, who said he had a cable to that effect, and I saw a letter from Mr. Charles Russell, in which he said that certain letters had been stolen at Rome. That is the authority on which the statement is made. The hon. gentleman is not entitled to have the statements that he makes credited unless he produces the original letter. The presumption is altogether against the propriety of the hon. gentleman having possession of those letters, because such letters, if written, were written by a gentleman in London to a gentleman in Rome, Italy. That alleged copies of them have fallen into the hands of the hon. senator is no presumption that they were come by fairly, and if copies were obtained by any indirect means, surely they are not a proper subject of discussion on the floor of this House. They might be used on an election platform. If gentlemen were disposed to lower themselves and discuss matters of that kind on a public platform they might do so, but certainly before the Senate of Canada it does seem improper that, at this stage of the session when so many important matters are waiting to be considered, we should be engaged in a discussion of this kind. I regret that the hon. gentleman has brought forward this irritating subject day after day. He has assumed, what he has no right to assume, that the expenses of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fitzpatrick have been charged to the country. He has no right to make that statement. It is wholly indefensible and unjustifiable. If Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fitzpatrick went to Rome they went there as Catholics at their own expense and in the interest of peace amongst Catholics in this country. Was it not very proper and desirable that they should do so? Are we not all interested in a peaceable solution of that kind? Catholics were very anxious to secure the approval of their church of the settlement that was affected. There were differences of opinion about it. It was not a settlement such as I would like, but I hoped it would in the end be made satisfactory. I have had forty years' experience of the school question, and it was always the fact that, with the tolerant spirit in Canada, slight concessions have been made from year to year as time goes on and prejudices subside, those who differ from the Roman Catholics on that subject, yielding from time to time for the sake of peace, and I believe the same results would follow in Manitoba on the school question. But it will not of course if firebrands are perpetually interjecting their views making arguments for people outside of this House to use to prevent a settlement of this question and keeping that question in such an irritating condition that a settlement would be absolutely impossible. I have stated to the hon. gentleman the source from which I got my information. I cannot give the names of the individuals. I am not bound to do that. The very fact of the hon. gentleman professing to have a letter which he does not produce the original of, is evidence, of itself, that it is improperly in his possession. That is the presumption. The hon. gentleman shakes his head, but that is the fair presumption. Certainly it has no right to come to his hands. If I got hold of a letter that was written at Washington to some one in London it would be fair to ask "How did you get that letter?" That is a parallel case. Hon. gentlemen should not lose sight of the fact that a letter of that kind could not be obtained fairly and honourably, and if obtained was certainly never intended to be made the subject of discussion on the floor of parliament. I should regret exceedingly if the Senate so far forgot itself as to appoint a committee to inquire into the relations of the Roman Catholic members and their Church.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is an exceedingly unfortunate discussion, and I regret for more reasons than one that the hon. gentleman has not thought proper to take a more conciliatory course than he has pursued on this question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have endeavoured to be conciliatory. If the hon. gentleman knew the irritation I have been subjected to for the last six weeks he would understand it. The question should have been ruled out of the House in the first instance.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think I can understand the irritation to which the hon. gentleman has been subjected. I not only understand it, but fully appreciate it, and sympathize with him. There is just this difference between the position the hon. gentleman has taken and that which has been taken by the hon. senator from Stadacona, and I shall give the reasons why I think so. I speak upon this question simply because I think it is one that affects not only on the dignity of the Senate, but the reputation of one of its members. I am fully in accord with the hon. Secretary of State in his introductory remarks, that private letters sent by members of any church, whether Catholic or Protestant, to the heads of their church, are not subjects for discussion in any deliberative body, and more particularly in the Senate, provided they are dealing with questions which are of a private nature, or which are matters of conscience between those who direct and control the church to which he belongs and the individual himself. But when public men, occupying the highest positions in the gift of the people of this country, communicate with any person or any eccleiastic, no matter how high, or how low he may be, asking his interference in matters pertaining to the general welfare of the population and the country in which he lives, then I ask does not that become a public question, with which a public man or a deliberative body would have a right to deal? That is the distinction.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not interrupt the hon. gentleman when speaking.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You are not stating it fairly. I say it is a matter entirely with Catholics.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I say it is not, and that is the difference between us; and it is that tone in answering questions that characterized the remark the hon. gentleman made to me just now, that has brought about this difficulty. He had no right to say to me that I was not stating this question fairly. I put the question hypothetically. I said if it be a question between a member of the church and the head of that church, it is a question with which this House and the public, I take it, have nothing to do.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is what it is.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then, I said further that if it be dealing with a question of a public character, and more particularly one which has agitated the country for a long time, and in which a large portion of the community have taken deep interest, and different sides, for two or three years, that it becomes a public question with which the public has a right to deal. If that is putting it unfairly, I do not intend to do so. I do contend that any communication of that kind upon a public question, can not take place, that is not of public interest. If it were a private individual writing to his clergy, upon a private question, the hon. gentleman would not be justified in bringing it before the House; but when during an agitation upon a very important question, the head of the government, and the Solicitor General, and the solicitor who is paid for whatever he does for the government, all take action in order to obtain the influence of a church to direct, either directly or indirectly, what shall be done in dealing with a question in Canada, then it becomes a public question with which every one has a right to deal. Now, that is the distinction that I draw between the two; and the complaint made by the hon. gentleman is very simple and very plain. He says, he puts upon the notice paper a letter which purported to have been written by Mr. Russell, and asks the question, "Is the government aware that Mr. Russell wrote such a letter, and if Mr. Russell wrote such a letter did he write it at the instance of the authorities of the government of the country, not as individuals, but under the instructions of the ruling powers in Canada."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I answered that question in the first instance, that Mr. Russell had no authority from the government of Canada.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not say that you did not. Do not get angry; I can quite understand the irritated state of the hon. gentleman's mind. But I desire to put this question as I think it ought to be put from a public standpoint, and it would not take me half as long to do so, if the gentleman would keep his irritation to himself and not get so excited. Then my hon. friend asks the question, "and was that at the expense of the country?" Had he not a right to do that? The hon. gentleman said no. Then he said, I answered it. It is true he answered it; but in making an answer he made an accusation against a member of the Senate in saying that that letter had come into his possession improperly, that it had been stolen and, inferentially, that he knew it was stolen, and if it were stolen and knew it was stolen, then it was reprehensible. I do not hesitate to say that had that been true it would have been extremely reprehensible in him to use it in any way. He denies, as I understand him, that it did come into his possession improperly. He says, so far as he knows, it was not stolen, and if he has it in his possession he now desires to have the fact established, that he is neither the thief nor the accessory to the stealing of that letter. That I take to be the position of the hon. gentleman, and he has used in that motion the language which is used upon all occasions of this kind when the private character or reputation of a member of the House of Commons is assailed, as any one who has studied these precedents know. Whenever it is declared by the House of Commons, that a man has conducted himself in the manner which has been imputed to the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, he is considered unworthy to sit with or associate with gentlemen. Now, I am fully in accord with that theory, which has been laid down the last century in the Imperial Parliament, and also established by the House of Commons upon the lamentable occasion when the expulsion of a certain member who had been elected was moved for. If my hon. friend has been guilty of stealing that letter or been accessory to its theft, or obtained it in some surreptious manner, then let the condemnation of the House fall upon him. If he has not, then it is the duty of the Secretary of State to state, and he would avoid a great deal of trouble if he would frankly state, that he believes it came into the hon. gentleman's possession properly, that he is very glad to learn it did not come into his possession improperly, and that he regretted that any imputation was made upon him. I think that is due from one gentleman to another ; and if not done, the hon. gentleman has taken the only course he could take under the circumstances to maintain his own honour as a man and as a senator. Now, I must be permitted to differ entirely from the position taken by the hon. Secretary of State that unless the hon. gentleman has in his possession the original letter, he has no right to bring it before the House. Why, hon. gentlemen, do we not almost every day call the attention of the government to statements made in the newspapers and ask whether they are correct or not. The other day I asked the hon. gentleman whether a statement which appeared in the Montreal Star and one or two other papers, in reference to the bonding system, was correct. I had no official documents. I had not the original that had been written and submitted to the council by the United States authorities in my possession, but there was a question which affected the commercial interests of the country, and I got a courteous reply. There was no accusation against me that I had not the original, that I had stolen it. It appeared in a newspaper. Supposing my hon. friend will tell you, as I understood him to say a moment ago, that these letters appeared in print in Rome, published in a pamphlet or small book, giving an account of what took place between Mr. Russell and the authorities in Canada from the Prime Minister down, in reference to the Manitoba school question, and that the pamphlet occupied with the people of Rome the same position precisely, that our blue books do, in which matters are placed before the notice of the people of Canada, would my hon. friend, or any one, be accused of stealing, or surreptitiously obtaining, or obtaining improperly the facts which are contained in that book ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no parallel at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No? Why ? Because one deals with a question which affects and irritates the hon. gentleman, and the other with the public generally. I say this is a parallel. If the question be one of a public character, which affects the government of Canada, the parallel is very strong indeed, and every man living in Canada, and every public man, has a right to ascertain whether the facts contained in that document to which the hon. member from Stadacona referred are true or not. That is the position I take. I have no desire to interfere, directly or indirectly, with a question of conscience between the hon. Secretary of State, the Prime Minister or Mr. Fitzpatrick, who belong to a certain religious body. That is none of my business, but if they deal with any foreign country, or with any public man, I care not whether it is a government or not, affecting the general weal or affairs of this country, of a political character, which this has really drifted into ; or constitutional question, as this was, and upon which difference of opinion existed in the country, one taking the ground that the province of Manitoba had no right under the constitution to deprive the minority of that people of certain rights which they believed were granted to them under the constitution, another party taking the ground that it was purely a local matter with which the Dominion parliament had nothing whatever to do, was not that a public question? Has not that agitated this Dominion, from the very centre to the Pacific and to the Atlantic? There is scarcely a hamlet in the whole country in which this question has not been discussed politically, in one respect, and in the other by those who do not desire to make it political, treated as a constitutional question. If that difficulty occurred and these gentlemen to whom we have referred, not private individuals, but the head of the government and the Solicitor General, because he is of the government, though not of the cabinet, it is only a quibble to say that he is not a member of the administration, and the paid solicitor of the country, then I would like to know what becomes of public questions with which this Senate or public may have to deal? That is the only ground upon which I would justify the action which the hon. member for Stadacona has taken in placing this motion upon the notice paper. Either he is a party to the stealing of that letter, if stolen it was, or he is not. If he has been accused of being a party to the stealing of that letter——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not accuse him.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then it becomes the duty of the members of the Senate who made that charge, directly or by insinuation, or innuendo, to withdraw it; or it is the duty of the Senate to sustain its dignity by defending one of its members by making an inquiry as to the truth of these innuendoes. My hon friend who sits opposite to me, just now used an expression which he ought not to have used. In answering the hon. gentleman from Stadacona he used this language:

> It is not my place to inquire with regard to a letter that has come improperly and irregularly into the hands of the hon. gentleman.

Let me ask my hon. friend this question: unless the Minister of Justice knows that this letter to which he refers came improperly and irregularly into the hands of the hon. member from Stadacona, was he justified in making that accusation?

He might, but I suppose that is his business, have asked, how did you get that letter? He might have answered in a dozen different ways from the way he did. I think if I were occupying his position, I could have answered that question in parliamentary language, without making any statement reflecting upon the reputation of the hon. gentleman asking the question. However, that is a point in parliamentary etiquette for himself to decide, and not for me. I have no desire to criticise or to suggest, much less to dictate the manner in which he should answer questions. But the whole conduct of the hon. Secretary of State, and also of the Minister of Justice, in answering these questions, has been not only irregular, but also irrelevant, and instead of giving a plain answer that Mr. Laurier did or did not write that letter, or if he had written it, said: "That is a private letter with which the public has nothing to do, and for which the premier takes the responsibility and I have no further answer to make," that would have answered it. But if you consult the Debates you will find there is not a single answer that has been given yet, particularly by my hon. friend who sits opposite me, in which he has not read a lecture in addition to simply answering the question I am not going to pursue this subject further, I have given my reasons why I think the hon. member from Stadacona is justified in the position he has taken, and I regret very much that the Senate should have to be asked to appoint a committee in the line in which his resolution goes. I hope that before this discussion closes, we may be relieved of that responsibility by the Secretary of State and the Minister of Justice, saying distinctly and positively that they had no intention of impugning the honour or honesty of any member of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend has pointed out what he thinks my failings are in answering questions concerning this subject; and he mentions among others that I am on every occasion giving lectures. Well, I do not admit that; I think I have not; but if I had done so, I would have been simply following the very high example that my hon. friend adopts on almost every occasion, and of which the present occasion is an illustrious example.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not a minister answering questions; if I were your lecture would be pertinent.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is giving a lecture on what he thinks my duties and the duties of my colleagues are, and where we have erred and the mistakes we have made in dealing with this subject, I am not going to enter into any controversy with my hon. friend on that subject, but I have just risen for the purpose of saying that I do not agree with the views he has expressed and the general proposition he has undertaken to lay down with a view of dragging in a series of irrelevant, and I must say somewhat offensive questions, which the hon. member from Stadacona has almost daily submitted to the House on this subject. I do not admit for a moment that because a gentleman is in public life therefore any communication he has with the officials of his church, upon a church matter, are necessarily public, and that he has not the same privilege in his communications that belongs to any other citizen of the country, whether he is in public or in private life.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—This is a public political question.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend says it is a public question, but it is also a private question. My hon. friend has no right to appear in a meeting of the Catholic bishops or officials in that church for the purpose of entering into a controversy with them and disputing their views upon this subject and saying that this is a public question, and that therefore he has a right to be heard and discuss this matter with them. In the public arena, on the public side, in so far as public action is called for, the hon. gentleman is at liberty to discuss this question. But this question has an ecclesiastical side as well as a secular side, and the Catholic population of this country whether they are in or out of public life, have the same right to appear in any way they may see proper on a public platform, or in communication with the officials of their church, discussing this question just as freely as if it were not a question that had been the subject of controversy at all. We recognize in this country, in a large degree, the separation of church and state. But my hon. friend lays down a proposition that, so far as public men are concerned, that rule does not apply. Let me call attention to this: supposing the Solicitor General of England and the Solicitor General of Canada, or the Prime Minister of Canada, as members of the Roman Catholic Church, thought that the ecclesiastical discussion of this subject in this country in the way it was conducted was not in the interests of the church, that it was calculated to make division, that it was calculated to be made a subject of controversy amongst those of other religious bodies of this country, then it is his right, the rules of his church permitting, to discuss that question with the head of the church or with the officials that stand round the head of that church. That is his right and he is not to be called on in this House or the House of Commons to give a reason or undertake to justify his exercise of that right. I say that if the Prime Minister, or the Solicitor General of this country, or any other official, chose to go to Rome and to say to the head of the church or to any official with whom he may communicate upon the subject, that in his view the position taken by the bishops of the church in his province was not one in the interest of the church, he has a right to say so, and the fact that it is a subject of political controversy does not debar him of that right, and does not entitle anybody in this House or the other House to call him to account for what he has said on that subject. Let me suppose for a moment that eminent ecclesiastics were to withold the sacrament of their church, or were to deny church rites to persons who took the view that the Prime Minister did or that the Solicitor General did, and that they had gone to Rome on that subject, that is the question on its ecclesiastical side. What right has my hon. friend sitting opposite me, or the hon. gentleman from Stadacona to stand up in this House and to call in question what they do in that regard.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That is a different matter. The one is entirely ecclesiastical and the other is not.

Hon. Mr MILLS—My hon. friend will see that it is precisely the ecclesiastical side. Let me suppose that the Prime Minister and I am putting it merely for the purpose of supposition. I am not admitting it——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If that is all true, does it justify you in insinuating that the member for Stadacona is a thief?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That has not been said of any hon. gentleman in this House. You cannot find that in the Debates.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is stated that the letter which was used was stolen.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, in my opinion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And that it was irregularly obtained.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That implies theft. The receiver is as bad as the stealer.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If he knew it to be stolen. This letter reads :

Having now returned to my country for several months, I wish to make known to Your Eminence that ff these happy results are to remain permanent and efficacious, it is desirable, if not necessary, that the mission of Monseigneur Merry del Val should be renewed, or rather continued.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Will the hon. gentleman please read on to the end and he will see that he says "as the accredited representative of the Holy See."

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am just going to discuss that. With regard to that Sir Wilfrid Laurier could not write that in his official capacity. As a public man he could not invite an official representative of the Roman Catholic Church into the British Dominion.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I am only taking what is in that letter.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am only taking what is in that letter and pointing out that every man who does an act must be supposed to do that act in a way consistent with the law. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, as a representative of the Catholic Church, is at liberty to say he would be pleased to have a representative of the Catholic Church, Monseigneur Merry del Val, in this country, because it would contribute to the peace of the church. If that is his opinion, he has a right to say it, but he could only be here in his spiritual capacity. He could not be here in an official and political capacity, because the law of the land does not permit him to occupy that position in this country. My hon. friend knows that, or ought to know it, and why should he rise in his place in thise House and put a question based on the assumption that this letter was not written by the Prime Minister (assuming it to have been written) in his capacity as a member of the Roman Catholic Church, but that it was written in his political capacity as a member of the government of Canada. I say the hon. gentleman has no right to assume that, and this House has no right to put, either to the Prime Minister himself or any of his colleagues, a question on this subject, even though that letter had come regularly into the hands of the hon. gentleman. The hon. member says he put a question to us with regard to the bonding privilege of this country, and that my hon. friend the Secretary of State answered him civilly with regard to that matter. Certainly he put a question with regard to the bonding privileges, and is not that a question relating to the government of this country? Is it not a matter affecting the commerce of this country? Is it not within the legitimate sphere of the government of this country to be informed on these subjects, and is it not the right of the House to have communication with the government on that subject? But does that entitle any man to put to me a question as to what my relation would be with the bishop of the English Church in this diocese, nor would he be entitled to put a question to a member of the Roman Catholic Church as to the relation of any member of the government who is a Roman Catholic with his church, or any communication a Roman Catholic member of the government may have with his church or the officials who stand at the head of his church. That is a matter that is not our business. It is a matter that is not before us and does not concern us. It is a subject with which we have nothing to do. It is a question affecting the relation between these men and the church of which they were members, and if they see that political opponents are undertaking to use the ecclesiastical authorities in this country as instruments for the promotion of their political designs, then they have a right to communicate with and to call the attention of the head of the church to what they think is an abuse of authority, and to ask that that course may not, in the interest of the church, be persisted in. That is their right, and I say that the hon. gentleman in undertaking to drag this matter before the House and to pretend that this House has jurisdiction over it, and that because a minister of the Crown seems devoted to his church and is not desirous of seeing it divided or rent asunder for political purposes, and chooses to communicate with the head of the church with a view to conciliation, or with any view, that is within his own province and we have nothing to do with it here. It is a most unwarrantable and improper thing to bring these matters constantly before this House or the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There seems to be an impression in the House that I charged the hon. gentleman from Stadacona with theft. I did nothing of the kind. My observations will not bear out any such interpretation. The language I used, as he read to the House to day, was as follows :

> There is an extract on the minutes from a paper I never heard of, the authority of which I have a right to question. The hon. gentleman produces a document written from some one to one of the ecclesiastics of the church to which I belong, which, I may say, if the document is genuine, has been purloined from Charles Russell or Cardinal Rampolla. It has been improperly obtained, and it has been obtained in such a way that no gentleman would use it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is a short paragraph in this evening's Free Press, in which the innuendo which my hon. friend from Stadacona has practically applied to himself in the matter has been taken seriously by this newspaper and likewise applied to him. The hon. minister will observe the injury it might do the hon. gentleman from Stadacona.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not answerable for what appears in the newspapers. I am not given to offending hon. gentlemen, as a rule. That is not my reputation. But I do feel I have a substantial grievance in having this matter dragged along day after day for six weeks in this chamber. So far as I could, I gave the hon. gentleman as full answers as I could get. I have read the language which I used, and I stand by that language and maintain that it is defensible. The hon. gentleman has not produced the letter, and I have not had an opportunity of looking at it. Even if the hon. gentleman had produced it, unless he gave a succinct account of how he came by it, I have a right to draw my own conclusions. At any rate, I say it is not a subject to be discussed on the floor of this House.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—The hon. gentleman proposes to give a succinct account of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think it is a matter for inquiry, and I dispute the power of a committee to inquire into that matter.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Cannot the hon. gentleman defend his character ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not propose to make a charge against the hon. gentleman from Stadacona.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend will see the result of the charge in this article because it is a charge that he is in possession of a stolen or a purloined letter.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And my hon. friend will see the application which the public have made of that charge. This article reads :

> Senator Landry has delayed rather long in moving for a committee to investigate the cause of his indignation at certain words, spoken by the Secretary of State in the Upper House on the 12th of May in a debate on the school question. There is now no time for such a committee to do anything this session and the public will probably be asking why the senator, after putting a certain cap on his own head complains of the burden at this stage of the proceedings. There is an element in the Senate which would do well to regard the Manitoba school question as settled and accept the inevitable.

This paper could not very well go any further than it has and escape an action of libel being brought against it. It certainly, in as veiled language as renders it easy to be read, has accused the hon. gentleman of Stadacona of having in his possession a stolen letter, and it has attached to him the opprobrium which such a charge would naturally create. I am satisfied that the hon. Secretary of State would be the last member of the House to cast any aspersion or reflection upon the character of any of his fellow members, and in the interests of harmony and good will in this Senate he should withdraw the offensive statement. If he does not do so, it will only result in a committee being appointed, and that committee will doubtless make an inquiry and a report to this House that an official document has been issued by the Vatican authorities, containing copies of all the correspondence which took place between the officials and members of this government with reference to the Manitoba school question, and that this is an official copy of the document issued under the imprimatur of the Vatican authorities, and which must necessarily be taken as a copy of original letters in the possession of those authorities. That being the case, I think my hon. friend will at once conclude that he is in no sense humiliating himself to say that, under the circumstances, he withdraws the aspersion made upon the hon. gentleman of Stadacona.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I made no aspersion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Certainly there was the innuendo which has been so accepted by the press and been applied to the detriment of that hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Does not the hon. gentleman from Calgary (Mr. Lougheed) think that if this letter is embodied in a volume having the official imprimatur of the authorities at Rome, it would have been the duty of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona to have submitted that document to the House so that we would be in a position to judge the character of it? Instead of that the hon. gentleman has thought proper to submit a document without anything at all to authenticate its genuineness. I do not propose to enter into a discussion of this subject. It is not one that is proper for discussion here, and I think it is one as to which the feelings of the hon. gentlemen who are more directly interested are likely to become somewhat warm and it is desirable that there should be further time to consider about the matter. For that reason, I call the attention of the House to the 14th rule of the Senate, which says that no motion prefaced by a written preamble is received by the Senate, and consequently the motion made by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona is out of order. The motion is given in the latter part. There is a long preamble in which he calls the attention of the Senate to certain facts. Clearly, the motion is out of order. Of course, the hon. gentleman can put himself in order another day, but it is as well he should have time to think over the matter and for that reason I press the point of order. I am asked why I did not take the point of order before. I think this is a good time to raise the point of order.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would point out this is not a preamble.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is pure and simple.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—He says he will call attention to certain facts.

Hon. Mr. POWER—He does that and says he will move. It is as much a preamble as anything could be.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You might as well say that if a motion is made that a member will do so and so, it is a preamble.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—All questions of privilege are made in the form I have adopted. If you look in the proceedings of the House of Commons you will see that all questions of privileges are statements of fact on which a motion is based. I do not think the point of order is well taken. This is not a preamble at all. I state the facts on which I bring up the question.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman is explaining what a preamble is, a statement of facts of which a motion is based.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—At first blush I was inclined to agree with the hon. gentleman of Halifax, but this is a question out of the ordinary proceedings of any deliberative body. This becomes a question of privilege in which the character and honour of a member of the Senate are involved, and if you look at the proceedings in the House of Commons you will find that a similar course has been pursued there.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think that they have the same rule in the House of Commons.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Precisely the same rule. I have a little recollection myself, because the present Speaker of the House of Commons took upon himself the responsibility once of alleging I had done something wrong and the whole facts, as he considered them, were recited, in when it was alleged that I was party to a certain speculation in which I had used the position I held as a minister of the Crown to make money. I did not at the moment take exception to his motion, although he put it on the motion paper to move at a future day. It appeared among the notices in the morning, and I challenged him in the afternoon of the same day to appoint a committee. He alleged what he believed to be certain facts copied from evidence in a court and from statements made in the press and on that he made a motion to send it to the Committee on Privileges and Elections to ascertain whether I had been guilty of malfeasance in office or had acted improperly, I had no desire to lie under that imputation and I rose in my place at the first opportunity and challenged the hon. gentleman to proceed with the investigation at once. The result I need not refer to now. This motion is of a similar character, only it affects the personal reputation of a member instead of his public reputation as in the case of the attack on me. It is wholly and solely a question of privilege, in which a man takes a position to vindicate his charactor, I agree with the hon. gentleman from Halifax in saying that this is a matter which creates a good deal of feeling and which should not go any further. Even if it should be ruled out of order the hon. gentleman will only have to put another notice on the paper. If he would act on the suggestion which I make, if it would meet the views of the hon. gentleman from Halifax, let the matter stand until to-morrow or Monday so as to enable those who are interested to think over the matter and in his cooler moments the hon. Secretary of State will probably come to the conclusion to say that it was not intended that any such inference should be drawn from the language used by him, and that it was not intended to impugn the character of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. It is easily done. If not, I do not see any other way, in justice to that hon. gentleman but to grant the committee and let him have an opportunity of showing whether his statements are correct.

The SPEAKER—If I thought for one moment that the honour of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona was at stake, I should be the last one to encourage the letting of that opinion go abroad. I never understood by the language of the hon. Secretary of State that he wanted to accuse the hon. gentleman of having personally stolen the letter. If I had so understood I would state my decision in some other way, but as I have to decide a question of order I must lay aside any personal feeling. Rule 14 provides that "no resolution prefaced by a written preamble is received by the Senate." In my opinion, if there is anything like a preamble it is certainly the wording of the four or five paragraphs which precede the motion. I cannot otherwise consider that as anything but a preface to the motion, and I am of opinion that the motion cannot be put in its present shape.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (158) "An Act respecting the London and Lake Huron Railway Company."—(Hon. Sir John Carling).

Bill (126) "An Act respecting the Saskatchewan Railway and Mining Company."—(Hon. Mr. Lougheed).

Bill (125) "An Act to incorporate the Ottawa Interprovincial Bridge Company."—(Hon. Mr. Clemow).

Bill (149) "An Act to authorize certain contracts with Steamship Companies for cold storage accommodation"—(Hon. Mr. Mills).

BOUNTIES ON IRON AND STEEL AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (159) "An Act to amend the Act to provide for bounties on iron and steel made in Canada."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the bill be read the second time on Monday next.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. Secretary of State tell us what the provisions of the amendment are.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it is to carry out the policy settled last year. So I understood from the Finance Minister. It is in accordance with the policy laid down last year and which has not been carried out. It is not making any new thing.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There must be something new, because the tariff last year provided for what should be done.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It provided that it should be held to come into force from the 1st July, 1897.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is to have a retroactive effect.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, it is to correct a mistake.

The motion was agreed to.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to inquire of the Secretary of State if there is any progress made in preparing the return that I asked for—the one of last year?

Hon. Mr SCOTT—The papers came over to-day to council. I will be able to give them to the hon. gentleman on Monday certainly. All they required was to complete the ordinary front page. If the hon. gentleman would like them this evening, I will send for them.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Monday will do.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—May I expect the papers that I moved for relating to the Soulanges Canal, on Monday?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Before I came here to-day, I asked the deputy minister to telephone to Mr. Schreiber to ascertain the cause of the delay, and his answer was that it took more time than we imagine to copy the papers. I told him I thought not.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—I wish to ask the Minister of Justice whether we can hope that the report of the commission on elections will be placed before this House. I see that the Printing Committee has refused to print it, and I should like to know what the government intend to do about it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—When a copy of it was brought to the House of Commons by the Solicitor General I suppose it would be printed, but if they have decided not to print it I shall bring down a copy of the report to this House. The evidence is very voluminous, some 4,000 pages, and I do not think it would be in the public interest to go to the expense of printing it. The report itself can be brought down.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I might say, with respect to this matter, that the question was before the Joint Committee on Printing and they felt that the report was one which should be printed by the department and not by parliament.

THE ELECTORAL FRANCHISE BILL.

CONCURRENCE IN AMENDMENTS.

The Order of the Day having been called:

Consideration of the amendments made in Committee of the Whole on Bill (16) "An Act to repeal the Electoral Franchise Act, and to further amend the Dominion Elections Act."

Hon. Mr. MILLS said: I suppose that it would be most convenient to take these amendments up seriatim, beause there are some of them in which I have acquiesced and which I am willing should stand. There are others of them that I feel it my duty in the public interest to move that they be struck out. I move to that effect.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The amendments mentioned on page 537 of the Minutes are not objected to, and I move concurrence in them.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The next amendment is the one found on page 548, clause 10*a*, moved by the hon. gentleman from Richmond. I do not move concurrence in that. I am opposed to it.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I move that the House concur in that amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Before concurring in this amendment I should like to make a few observations, because I think the subject is one of very great importance, and I should regret exceedingly that the Senate should be on record in an important matter respecting the House of Commons as placing themselves in conflict with that House. The House of Commons, by a very large majority—I think a majority of over 40—had rejected this very amendment, which I understand was proposed in that House. It was considered by the members of the House of Commons that it struck at the principle of the bill and should not be accepted. It was practically authorizing another tribunal to finally settle the voters' lists from that laid down under the law as it exists in the several provinces It cannot be said, and I do not think a case has been made out, that this amendment is of such importance as to really invite friction with the other House. No case has been made out that it has worked injuriously to the political party which is now seeking to have the clause introduced. The history of the Franchise Act shows that when the franchise was based on the provincial laws, as it was from 1867 to 1885, the Liberal-Conservative party carried four of the five elections that came off, and it cannot, therefore, be said that politically it was a proposition that would work injuriously to that party. On the contrary, if hon. gentlemen would realize the position taken by the present government for a moment, they would see that we are practically taking a step to place the two great parties on the same plane. We say they were on the same plane up to 1885, but since that time the Liberal-Conservative party had a distinct and positive advantage in the nomination of the officers who framed those lists. That was the ground of objection taken at the time in 1885, and it has been a grievance ever since; so that if the Liberal party at the present moment were looking to their own individual advantage, they certainly would prefer that the system which now prevails should continue. No one can deny the extraordinary powers possessed by the revising barrister, and if one looks to the past and the changes that were made by the revising barristers at the periods when these revisions took place, he will be surprised to recognize the extraordinary opportunities that were presented to the revising barrister if he had any political leaning. Now we all know in the matters of this kind that although an official may be very high minded and a man of great integrity, still if he is appointed by a political party, and in sympathy with that party, his judgment is necessarily influenced by his party proclivities.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Like the Nova Scotia sheriffs.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know how the Nova Scotia sheriffs are, but what I say is that during the years 1867 to 1885, the parties were on the same plane. In order to get an idea of what division takes place, I asked the Crown Clerk in Chancery to give me a city and a rural constituency and to give me the number of changes that were made. I supposed the changes would be probably from ten to fifteen per cent. He selected East Toronto as a city constituency, and it would appear that in 1891 the number of votes on the list was 14,892 and in the revision that followed, the number of voters struck off the list was 9,401, and the number of names added on that list was 6,197. Hon. gentlemen will see, therefore, what an extraordinary power the revising barrister had in this particular case. The same results, in a very much less degree, are found to exist in the rural constituencies. Take North Oxford, which probably would be regarded as a constituency in which changes are as few as any other; it appears there were no less than 1,451 names struck off and 1,817 added on that revision. That points to this fact, that the revising barrister had an extraordinary power, and he had the opportunity of favouring the particular feelings he entertained. I merely mentioned those two cases as illustrations of the extraordinary powers possessed by the revising barristers, and it would manifestly be to the political advantage of this government to continue that, because the government in power for the time being has no doubt a very great advantage where they have the selection of the revising officers, and therefore the proposal the present government have submitted to parliament is an endeavour to really place the two political parties on the same plane so that they will have each of them equal advantages. No one can, for a moment contend that, so far as our municipal councils are concerned, anything like a gross number of names would be added to or taken from a list year by year without it being known, or attention being called to it. The number of changes made year by year would be comparatively few. The number of changes made every fourth year are very little, and it gives a wide latitude to the official who is charged with the duty of revising, and we all know very well that, although in some constituencies where political feeling may run high, the two political parties watch the lists, that is not so in the majority of constituencies. I know many constituencies where the list is prepared and when parties are appealed to and are urged to go and take some interest in it, they say, "It is none of my affair," when an election was not immediately expected. So a great power is possessed by the revising barrister, and his feelings would naturally be in the direction of the political party with whom he is in sympathy; and, therefore, this proposal to come back to the system which existed before 1885, is one that is to the advantage of the gentlemen who are to-day opposing the acceptance of this bill in the form in which it has come to us from the House of Commons. I think it is a fair argument to use that, as the present administration have framed what they consider a fair bill to both sides, it ought to be accepted. I should regret exceedingly that the fact of our insisting upon this amendment would be to bring us into collision with the House of Commons. Necessarily, they will not accept it. That, I understand, has been the conclusion already reached.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—If the government will not accept this bill, what will be the next step taken?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There will be a conference with the delegates of the two Houses to discuss it.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The government will not withdraw the bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot say to that part of it.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—It is only a member of the government that can answer that question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The government have not considered what they will do. They have not anticipated that possibility. They had no right to anticipate it.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Then it is fair to infer that they will have a conference of the two Houses?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I merely say what the rule is in those cases, where one House insists upon a bill in the shape in which it passed and the other House moves an amendment which is sent back to the Lower House and they decline to accept it. The next step in all these cases is that a conference is held.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not necessarily; it comes back to the Senate with the disapproval of the Commons. Then it will be for the Senate to say whether they recede from their position; if they do not, then the conference takes place.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is right. I was coming to the conference by taking a shorter cut.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I would like to ask a question: Was there a promise made by the Solicitor General in the other House that they would induce the provinces to amend their electoral laws to meet the very object of this amendment if the Conservative party had dropped the amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not hear it personally; but on looking over the debates of the House of Commons I noticed that that statement was made, that is as far as Manitoba was concerned, I did not see the statement made with reference to any other province—that the government there would be asked to so amend the law that there would be an appeal to the judiciary. I have not it officially from any of my colleagues, so I am not in a position to state whether the promise was made.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I am not going to debate this question, but that being admitted by the government, why object to this amendment.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Time enough to jump the stile when you get to it.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I would like to ask the government another question. This government has a reputation of turning out the officials of the late government. I should like to know if it is the intention of the government to displace any of those revising barristers and appoint new cases?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that the government have nothing to do with the appointments under this plan.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—But under the old plan.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I cannot answer my hon. friend that; the government will do what they think proper in the matter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not what they think is proper in the matter, but what the law will permit them to do, and if I understand it, the revising officers hold their positions on the same terms as the judges of the land, during good behaviour. This was inserted in the law providing for the appointment of these officers for the very purpose of making them as judges or arbitrators of this question, so that you would have to prefer the charge of malfeasance of office before you could dismiss a revising officer, just as you would have to make a charge against a judge, and then it would have to be tried according to parliamentary usuage.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I see there is a good deal of impatience to get a vote upon this as it is approaching six o'clock, and, therefore, I will make no further remarks upon the subject.

The House divided on the motion to concur in the amendment adding subsection 10*a*, which was adopted by the following vote:—

On clause 5.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I now move the consequential amendment of which I spoke. I move that the following be substituted for subsection (c) :

(c.) The voters' list shall, except in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswiek and Manitoba, be those prepared by the several polling divisions so established and which on the sixtieth day next preceding the day fixed for the nomination of candidates for such Dominion election were in force or were last in force under the laws of that province for the purpose of provincial elections, and in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba, shall be the voters' list as amended under the provisions of clause (a) of this Act, which were prepared by the registration clerks or revisers for the several polling divisions so established for the purposes of provincial elections and were filed at least sixty days previous to the day fixed for the nomination of candidates for such Dominion election with the officer having by law the custody of the same.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think it escaped the attention of the hon. gentleman from Richmond that the House decided to take up these amendments seriatim, and we have dealt with the first amendment to clause 10 and there are several other amendments.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The House did not decide anything of the kind.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have the floor and I state that the hon. Minister of Justice moved that the amendments be taken up seratim.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Well surely I will be allowed to make an explanation.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have the floor. The hon. gentleman has no right to rise when I am on the floor.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I want to make an explanation, and if the hon. gentleman objects to it I will not make it; but it seems to me a p culiar kind of courtesy.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do object to it, and I am not going to take lessons in courtesy from the hon. gentleman. He is the last gentleman in the House from whom I would take lessons in courtesy.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The hon. gentleman needs lessons badly.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The House decided to take up the amendments seriatim. There are several amendments between the one which has been adopted and the one which the hon. gentleman has just moved, and if we are to preserve any semblance of order we should obey the decision we arrived at a few minutes ago. The amendment which the hon. gentleman has moved now will be adopted as a matter of course. There will not be any opposition to it, but we had better proceed decently and in order.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That language is rather extraordinary,—that we should perceed decently and in order. How are we proceeding indecently? What has occurred in the House to justify the use of such extraordinary language on the part of any hon. member of the House? I simply rose to make a motion. I understood the Minister of Justice to say that there were certain amendments to the bill which he accepted, which he would ask the House to concur in, and that he would take them up and proceed with them in order, which I understood him to, and then he called upon me to move my amendment. My first amendment was subsection 10*a*, and the consequential amendment which followed that amendment consecutively, and follow this amendment in clause 5, and I rose to move this amendment. My principal amendment had passed, and I was, as a matter of course, following that with the consequential amendment to it and I do not think anything could be more in order than that course, and it was not in contravention of the course recommended by the Minister of Justice. But with that peculiar spirit of contradiction and hostility which characterizes the hon. gentleman, he interjects this objection to my proceeding, in order to stop me, I presume. I ask the House to proceed with my amendment, and if the hon. gentleman has any motion to make contrary to that let him make it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I suppose the regular way of proceeding in this matter, having charge of the bill, when we came to those amendments of which I did not approve, would be to move that they be not concurred in, and then the motion would be taken up on the non-concurrence.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Yes, perfectly right; but the hon. gentleman suggested a different course.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the hon. gentlemen turn to the minutes they will find the amendment which has been moved——

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The hon. gentleman has already spoken to the motion before the House, and I object to his speaking.

The motion was carried on division.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understood there was a clause to be added.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. minister move that clause at the third reading?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes. I purpose to give to the Governor General in Council power to prepare the oaths that are to be taken under the provincial Acts, so as to meet the requirements of this Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would suggest also if the hon. gentleman wants to make the Act clearer, where it is not workable because of the territory being too great, that he should take power to appoint a judge ad hoc, or revising officer, to perform the duties pertaining to cases of appeal. That will remove all the difficulties which the hon. gentleman has suggested. There may be cases where it might not be necessary to do it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend refers to Manitoba, where there are forty-two electoral divisions, where there is a revising officer in each, and where there are only five judges in the province, and so it would be necessary that the judge should have over eight electoral districts under his supervision for the purpose of revision. If I supposed for a moment that the measure was going to stand in this form I might seriously consider the proposition my hon. friend made.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I might also say that if I considered the bill was likely to become law, I would feel it my duty to move against the 10th subsection of the 10th clause, because on further consideration of it I feel satisfied that though the injustice, grievance, or wrong that might occur under that clause, as indicated by me is one that would be an exceptional, and not a general thing, still under that clause it would be an easy matter, if a corrupt intention existed between the revising officer and the candidate on one side or the other, to prevent this getting to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and it would compel them to fall back upon the list say for the provincial elections, and thereby a list that had been revised for the federal elections, and to which two or three hundred names had been added of Dominion officials might go astray, and if they had to fall back upon the local lists all these votes would be lost. It was suggested by the hon. Minister of Justice that my objection could be got over by making a reference in the clause to another clause which provided for putting on men who had been left off. But supposing a corrupt understanding existed to put on two or three hundred names which should not be there, there would be no means of getting them off. The amendment of the hon. Minister of Justice would be sufficient I dare say, to enable the names which had been taken off to be put on, but if the local list had been doctored with the intention of committing a fraud, there would be no means under the Act of striking off any names which were improperly on the list. I think it is liable to that objection, but, as I do not think this bill is likely to come law this session, I probably will not move against it. If I should decide to do so, I hope I will not be put to the inconvenience of putting a notice on the paper.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—There is no necessity for a notice. The hon. gentleman can move it on Monday.

It being six o'clock the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

LAND TITLES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (132) "An Act further to amend the Land Titles Act."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will point out the changes as we proceed. In some cases they are not very important. The only important points were those to which the hon. senator from Calgary called attention the other day, which we partially discussed. If necessary we could postpone those particular clauses until he arrives.

On clause 4.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The change in subsection 2 is that the words "municipal officers" are struck out. There is no such office in the North-west.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is one expression in this subclause that I cannot exactly understand.

2. The registrar shall not receive or enter in the day-book, any instrument, except executions against lands, caveats, mechanics' liens, transfers by a sheriff or by order of a court or a judge, transfers on sale of land for taxes, or certificates or orders of a court or a judge, and except a mortgage before issue of grant pursuant to subsection 2 of section 73, unless required by the order of a court or judge, until the duplicate for the land affected by such instrument is produced therewith to him so as to enable him to enter the proper memorandum thereon.

It seems to me the language should be made clearer. What is meant by the words "and except a mortgage?" It should read "or mortgage."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I think it is right as it is. The words are the same in the original.

Hon. Mr. POWER—But the original is not very clear.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 5.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This clause is new.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It seems rather remarkable power to give to any member of the executive council. The preceding subsection of the original Act provides for a notification to their registrar from the Minister of the Interior, but here it says "a notification from any member of the executive council."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, every closing of a trail or road allowance had to come down to Ottawa and an Order in Council passed. It was purely a local matter and should not be brought down here.

Hon. Mr. POWER—But it is left in the hands of any member of the executive council.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 6.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I would like to know what the hon. gentleman from Calgary thinks about this clause.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think it is very desirable, for this reason: The onus is thrown upon the purchaser to secure a certificate of taxes from the treasurer of the municipality in which the lands may lie, and persons receiving certificates of title very well understand that the certificate is not a certificate as against taxes. They have to satisfy themselves as to taxes by inquiry from the municipality. I think on the whole it is a very great improvement on the Act.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 9.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I will point a difficulty which has prevailed in the Territories for some time past, a departmental difficulty. The department has seemed to arrogate to itself the right to dictate to the registrars what they shall do. Now the functions of a registrar are largely judicial; consequently we find a very great deal of conflict prevailing between the instructions sent out by the department and the proper exercise of the functions vested in the registrar under the Act. My hon. friend, the Secretary of State, has referred to instructions sent by the department to the registrar. It seems to me another startling proposition that the department should proceed to advise the registrar what to do under the Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They have the law clerk who professes to be familiar with those subjects, and I suppose he really gives advice.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It gives rise to a very great number of appeals and senseless expense.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

INDIAN ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (144) "An Act further to amend the Indian Act."

(In the Committee.)

On clause 1.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is this an entirely new feature in the Indian Act?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; as the law now stands, only the Indians who work upon farms within the reserve are liable to perform statute labour, and it is found that that is not quite fair, and that the Indians who loaf about and do nothing should perform statute labour as well as those who work the farm. The law at present reads "Indians residing upon any reserve and engaged in the pursuit of agriculture as their chief means of support, shall be liable," and so on. We have struck out the words "and engaged in the pursuit of agriculture as their chief means of support."

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Has any work been done in the North-west by Indians?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I should think very little.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I should think not. I never heard of it. I think you will find it most difficult to get this work done.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Oh, it has been done for years.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is it that under the supervision of the Indian agents the Indians in the territories would work under the statute labour ordinance which has just been introduced?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If directed by the superintendent general, but the law at present applies only to those engaged in agriculture as their chief means of support. All Indians are put on the same plane.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Should there not be an age limit?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I suppose it is twenty-one years.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Does it apply to Indians on the reserve in Prince Edward Island? That reserve has not been acquired by the government of Canada, but has been devised for the benefit of the Indians by a local charity. They have never been required to do any statute labour before, and I should think it would be scarcely fair that they should have to do any now.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Why not?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—They are on a reserve there. It is not a government reserve and it is a small territory.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think it would be held to apply to them. It is more particularly for the North-west.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 2.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—At the present time, where the Indians part with the title to any of their property, it is nesessary to have a surrender, but very often it is to the advantage of the Indians that wild grass or dead and fallen trees should be disposed of, and it was thought better that there should be a discretionary power with the superintendent general to dispose of those articles for the benefit of the Indians without having the Indians called together and a vote taken upon it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—This refers to farming lands I suppose?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It refers to any lands.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 4.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Where is the distinction between the present section and this clause? It is section 56 of the old Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is just one word struck out, the word "exclusive," speaking of exclusive possession.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why is that dropped?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The reason is that heretofore it has been usual, under that word "exclusive," where privilege was given to any one to go in and cut trees he had exclusive possession; it is found now in the interest of the Indians that a certain man should be allowed to cut one kind of tree and another man another kind of tree on a certain property, so that we would not give to one man the exclusive possession.

On clause 8.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This clause reads as follows :—

The section substituted for section 73 of the said Act by section 9 of chapter 33 of the statutes of 1887, is hereby repealed and the following is substituted therefor :

73. The superintendent general may also stop the payment of the annuity and interest money of, as well as deprive of any participation in the real property of the band, any woman who deserts her husband or family and lives immorally with another man, and the superintendent general may apply the same to the support of the family so deserted.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Are these powers exercised to any extent ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I suppose only in glaring cases where they are brought under their notice, but not in all cases.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I may say, in connection with clause 7, that in the North-west Territories, about five miles from Wolseley, where I live, there are some reserves ; the North-west Assembly passed their statute labour ordinance, and the North-west council or government proclaimed a certain district a statute labour district, and the people meet and elect an overseer, and proceed according to law. How will that affect the Indians south of that ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It rests with the superintendent general to authorize it.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—It will not come under the North-west government ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no ; it must be through the department.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (113) "An Act further to amend the Acts respecting the North-west Territories."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The provisions of this bill are very simple. The first section provides that the words "Lieutenant Governor in Council" in the Act shall be superseded by the words "legislative assembly," words which the altered circumstances of the territory, it practically having representative government, necessitates.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (S) "An Act to amend the Companies Act."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have adopted the suggestions which were made when this bill was under consideration before, in restricting as far as possible the powers that given to foreign companies to mining in the Yukon territory.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—You will confine it solely to mining ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Solely to mining.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B. C.)—How many claims could a company of that kind take up ?

Hon. Mr SCOTT—A free miner could only take up one claim.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—They can purchase then ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does not the hon. gentleman think "carrying on mining operations" a very comprehensive term ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As it is now, I suppose the provinces could check the exercise of the powers that foreign corporations profess to have in Canada. I know very many companies do business in Canada without a license or having their charter confirmed here. It is very common in British Columbia. A great many companies having been formed at Spokane and are doing business in British Columbia without having obtained charters or licenses in Canada. I think there is some recent law passed in British Columbia requiring such companies to register, but beyond that and paying a fee, they comply with no other requirement and there is no check on them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The difficulty in many of those cases lies in this fact. If you want to proceed against any of those companies or to examine the officers for discovery, the court in most instances has no jurisdiction because the books of the company are in a foreign country. The difficulty is to follow them and obtain the satisfaction which litigants may seek.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have put in some restrictive clauses since the bill was before us, requiring each company to designate an officer to represent them in the Yukon country to receive notices, &c. Before getting a license they must be prepared toaccept process in all suits.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Does that clause go on to say that the service of process on the officer shall be sufficient?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes. They shall designate the agent or manager within the Yukon district authorized by the company to represent the company and to accept process in all suits and proceedings against the company for any liabilities incurred by such company therein.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The government should reserve to themselves in some way the power to withdraw the license upon such company withdrawing its books in case of legal proceedings being taken against it in the district. The difficulty that confronts litigants in proceedings against a foreign company is to ascertain the standing of the company, as to whether creditors can get anything from the debtors of the company. If the books are in a foreign country it is impossible to find out this. It seems to me that the government should take to itself that power to withdraw the license on the non-production of the books in the event of litigation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have added this clause, that every company to which a license has been granted shall make a return of all business done by it under such license.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That would not meet the difficulty.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Of course that only makes them show what their business is.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I would call attention to section 7 of the mining regulations. According to that a company can get a license passed for fifty or sixty men as a company and that would override the regulations.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Under the regulations the employees of a mining company are required to take out a license. They would still have to do it; this is all subject to the regulations.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The company would be entitled to only one miners license.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think they can compel where a company get a license, each man employed to take out a license.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is there not a great deal of force in what my hon. friend says that if a foreign company comes here, and asks to be registered they have all the rights of the free miner? These regulations provide:

> No joint stock company will be recognized as having any rights or interests in, or to any placer claim, quartz claim, mining lease, bed-rock flume grant, or any minerals in any ground comprised therein, or in any water right, mining ditch, drain, tunnel or flume, unless it, and every person in its employment, shall have a free miner's certificate unexpired.

That would not mean a license; that means a certificate to enable them to mine. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that these regulations having been circulated through foreign countries, and more particularly in the United States, has misled a number of companies.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the origin of the bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And owing to that, it was the origin of the bill; well, if you will read the interpretation to the regulations I do not understand well how any misunderstanding could possibly arise under this law, under the circulation of these papers, because it says:

> "Joint stock company" shall mean any company incorporated for mining purposes under a Canadian charter or licensed by the government of Canada.

A foreign company would have to come to the government of Canada and obtain a license which you are giving yourself power to give them, and then go to work under their corporate powers. As the government thinks it better to recognize these companies, I am not going to take objection to it further than to say that I think it is exceedingly bad legislation, that you should permit a foreign incorporated company to do business in this country by simply granting them a license to work. I must equally state that the restrictions which have been incorporated in this Act makes it less objectionable to my mind than when it was first introduced.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Outside companies have applied for a license. The department say you must get a license from the government of Canada. The government of Canada have no power to issue a license, and the object of this bill is simply to give them that power to issue a license.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—But this will not override the regulations.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Clause 1 was adopted.

On clause 3.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the object?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We often put in bills that are given to those companies, impose an obligation to make a return if we think fit, if any inquiries about the company are made and we want to know what they are really doing.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That I understand, but what is the ulterior object in asking a man or a company for a statement of their transactions, if it be for no other purpose than to ascertain whether they have made a hundred dollars, or whether they made a million dollars?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It may be interesting in case companies incur obligations; it will assist in ascertaining what their revenues are, and creditors will inquire what has become of their money.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is a very proper provision and a reasonable explanation; but have you made any provision in this clause to reach the property in the interest of a creditor? If not, would it not be well, as suggested by the hon. member for Calgary, to do so? Otherwise how are you to reach them?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The parties who are the creditors may reach them under the ordinary process of law.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have added "in default the license may be cancelled if they do not furnish the returns."

Clause 3 as amended was adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would it not be well to adopt the suggestion made by the hon. member for Calgary, and say in case of failure to comply with any of the provisions of the law to withdraw the license?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I will do that.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY, from the committee, reported the bill with certain amendments.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was then read a third time.

LAKE BENNETT AND KLONDIKE RAILWAY AND TRAMWAY COMPANY.

AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved concurrence in mendments made by the House of Commons to Bill (31) "An Act to incorporate the Lake Bennett Railway and Tramway Company."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would like to know what these amendments are.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Hon. gentlemen will doubtless remember there was an amendment made to this bill by which the company were empowered to build a wagon road over their line of railway from the Hootalinqua River to Marsh Lake, if I mistake not. When the bill was before the Commons it was further amended by providing practically that any other company obtaining a charter over that same line might confiscate this wagon road. To that we are assenting. We cannot do otherwise.

The motion was agreed to.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (130) "An Act further to amend the Dominion Lands Act."

(In the Committee.)

On clause 3.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is the clause to which the hon. gentleman from Calgary called the attention the other day. It refers to co-operative farming. As the law originally stood, the minister had authority to grant permission to homesteaders to form a settlement. It is now felt that it is absolutely necessary to broaden the section, because the settlers who are now going to the North-west, the Russians, Germans and Galicians, are in the habit of farming upon what is called the village principle, and the intention is to give them odd and even number sections, and allow them to live together in a village, and to work their farms in a radiating space outside. We have already allowed that rule to prevail with the Mennonites and other settlers who have gone into the North-west, and the conditions as to the value of the improvements are preserved. That is, they must have at least one hundred and fifty dollars worth of improvements before they are entitled to their homestead privileges. The hon. gentleman rather criticized this on the ground that it was not best for them, but of course we cannot make those changes immediately. It is extraordinary how the changes are made because I have seen it noted in the newspapers that the Galicians who came out a few years ago looked entirely different from the Galicians who came out this year, that the mere fact of their association in congregation as they are now, that even the incidental contact with the other population.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is the best tribute to the existing law.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You cannot get them to do that. Our object is to fill the country. It makes no difference to us. It is the opinion of a great many persons, including Sir William Van Horne, that we could have filled up the North-west if we had allowed them to settle in numbers. It is the feeling of isolation that drives them away. It is the opinion of Sir William Van Horne that it is a marked obstacle in the settlement of the country.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I saw in the Witness the other day that the government agent complained that there was no shelter for them when they arrived. Some eight hundred men arrived the other day and were without shelter. It is for the government to see that immigrants of that class who cannot speak the English language should have some shelter on reaching here.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is a matter the Department of Agriculture should look after.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Can the hon. gentleman tell me if the Galicians who are brought out now are receiving assisted passages?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think so. I see that they have saved a great deal of money. They are assisted to this extent, that when the steamer which brought them over was quarantined for three weeks on account of several cases of small-pox, the government will pay their expenses while they are in quarantine. We cannot detain them there.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—But there is no assisted passage?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It seems to me that the very principle which you propose introducing by this clause is extremely objectionable. I know that for some years past the authorities in Ottawa have been importuned by various parties going into the North-west Territories to reserve large territories of land so that they might live in the primitive condition practically in which they lived in the country from which they come, and separated from their fellow citizens. If I recollect rightly the Salvation Army some years ago made an application to the government for a somewhat similar privilege. The principle was recognized as a bad one, and its seems to me that ample provision has been made in section 37 of the present Act by which the minister has power to dispense with any of the settlement provisions which seem onerous upon a number of farmers settling in a particular district, and of practically assisting those farmers in settling in hamlets. But the difficulty that confronts the country, particularly that western country, in the proposition which is now made, is that power is asked to give the Minister of the Interior authority to withdraw both odd-numbered and even-number sections, areas without any limitation, for the purpose of settling in whatever area of land may be withdrawn from settlement, foreign settlers; because it would only be foreign settlers who would make such an application, upon those lands to the exclusion of their own people. That is to say, the representatives of a foreign community, such as Galicians, Poles, Scandinavians, Mormons and others, will come into the country and go over the whole of the North-west. The delegates they send out for that purpose are usually very capable men, and they select the very choicest lands of the whole territory for the purpose of settling those communities upon them. Having selected the choicest lands, application is made to withdraw those lands from settlement, and these foreigners are settled upon those tracts. They live in an isolated condition and in no way become merged with the interests of our country. They maintain all their foreign customs, and they in no way become interested in our institutions and in no way assist the country. It is almost unnecessary for me to point out to hon. gentlemen that if you take 500 Galicians and settle them down in an isolated part of the country, withdrawn from settlement, so that no other persons can settle in that vicinity, you practically build a barricade round about them, and they in no way make progress. If that North west is to become a progressive country, it will only become progressive by settlers merging with our own people and becoming part and parcel of the population of the country. I would be one of the last to seek to throw any hindrance in the way of the government settling that country. No one is more anxious than I am to see it settled, and it seems to me that under the existing law ample opportunity is given for the purpose of carrying out the hamlet system. Where twenty farmers have a desire to settle upon a particular tract of land, the Minister of the Interior can relieve them from any onerous duties of settlement, and they can enjoy all the privileges they want. I lived in that country before it was opened up by railway, and I have not seen any cases in which settlement has been driven from that country by reason of the limitation of powers vested in the Minister of the Interior to accommodate the conditions which arise from time to time in regard to settlement. Furthermore, I find very small requirements are to be exacted from those who settle in the country under the proposd system. They have only to make $150 improvements, whereas, under the present law, a Canadian going into that country, to comply with the Dominion Lands Act, would certainly have to expend $500. But I am not complaining about that. I am complaining about the principle of the bill, which I think is vicious.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman complains that the government are asking to set apart certain lands for the purpose of colonizing them by persons who desire to form colonies. If experience had not shown that such a provision was necessary, the government would not resort to it. My hon. friend speaks of adopting a different method and declining to set apart certain lands for certain communities. If that principle were adopted, those people would not be here, and it is simply a question whether we shall adopt such a system and obtain very considerable foreign emigration, or whether we shall act upon the views expressed by the hon. gentleman and exclude these people. I do not think there is any one in this line—and I am sure there are not outside of this House any very considerable number of people—who is not anxious to secure the colonization and settlement of the country, and in order to do that you have got to pay some attention to the previous habits and prejudice of the population, if you choose so to call it. My hon. friend who leads the opposition knows very well that at the time the Mennonite settlers were induced to come to this country from Russia, a gentleman who lives in Winnipeg was induced by the government to visit those people in Russia and there was only one condition upon which they would come, and that condition was that they should be allowed to settle in a community. Their notion of living in communities and holding their lands practically in common, was a notion altogether foreign to our ideas, and if the views of the hon. gentleman from Calgary had been acted upon none of these people would have been secured as settlers in Canada. All these people make very excellent settlers, and have been here over twenty years.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You got special legislation for that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We are getting special legislation for this.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You are getting general legislation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We are asked for what we asked them. We made an application to set aside specific districts. We cannot do that on this occasion where we are getting people to come from Prussia and Poland and from the Austrian dominions. We simply know what their views are, and we undertake to provide a system that will meet their wishes, and these people are a hardy industrial population and, so far as we know, very satisfactory settlers. Look at the position of the Mennonite settlers. That system of communities to which they have adhered, and which they regarded as indispensable in order to secure settlers in this country, is gradually breaking down and they are adopting the habits of the rest of the population. Each one is settling on his individual holding, and to-day I believe the majority of them are cultivating their own property. Each farmer cultivates his own property.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It applies more particularly to the younger generation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Quite so, and we must expect that the old population will not in many cases throw off their original habits; and so with regard to the Icelandic settlement, we granted certain territories and excluded others from the territory, and induced them to come to this country on those conditions, and now those people are scattered among the rest of the population and have adopted the habits of the other members of community, and there is very little difference between a native born Canadian and one of the children of those Icelanders who came to this country twenty-five years ago. And so it will be in the North-west. If we had a homogeneous population, if the people coming from the continent of Europe had the same ideas of property and settlement that we have ourselves, the probability is that we need not ask for legislation of this sort, but what we desire first and above everything else is to secure immigration to that country. We have built railways at an enormous expense for the purpose of securing settlement. Those railways, under the system of survey we adopted, of alternate reservations, have not secured to us a population, and we are adopting the recent system with regard to those who desire that system to apply. My hon. friend says that we do not permit Canadians to go into those communities; foreigners want their people to settle together, and no Canadian is very anxious to be in the mist of Galicians in preference to natives of his own country, having his own views and speaking his own language. We hope they will all become one people in time, but we want to get the material out of which to build up a nation, and we have got to accommodate ourselves to the feeling and prejudices and habits of those who we desire to secure, and we are doing the best we can in that direction and I think we are taking a step that is calculated to secure to us the largest number of foreigners as residents of this country.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Does the Act propose to alter the survey at all?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I do not object to having those Galicians, or whatever you call them, settle on the even-numbered sections, as might be prescribed by this bill, but leave the odd-numbered sections as they are. Now, I will tell you the advantage of that. In a township that is six miles square, by settling those people on the even-numbered sections and giving each a quarter section, there would be seventy-two families in an area of six miles square. If the government are anxious that those people should prosper, and I have no doubt they are, they must put them where they can make a living. A German colony near where I live occupy the even-numbered quarter sections, and use the odd-numbered quarter sections to cut hay and to pasture cattle on. During the early history of the settle ment of that country, if this mode of settling is pursued, the settlers will have the benefit of the odd-numbered sections and thus be able to make a living by making butter and raising beef. They will not go into wheat raising, as they would have to do if all the quarter sections in the township were settled upon. That would give a total of one hundred and forty-four families in the township, and the result would be that they would be paupers all their lives, if they could make a living at all. The German colony to which I have referred, are a prosperous and industrious people. By their mode of settlement on the even-numbered sections they are able to raise large herds of cattle, and in a short time they will be able to buy odd-numbered sections that they are now using to pasture their cattle and cut hay upon. I know, in my own experience, I have had to buy a large amount of land around me to pasture my cattle upon, and I am satisfied that in the early history of the country, if every quarter section had been settled upon, the people could not have made a living; but they have had the railway lands on which to cut hay and pasture cattle, and now they are in a position to buy those lands and are doing so rapidly. It will be the same way with the new settlers. The policy that the government are adopting in this bill is one which will keep these people poor all their lives. They are not accustomed to our climate and the ways of our people and our mode of farming, but they are accustomed to raising cattle, and if you leave the odd sections unoccupied, they can use them for the present and buy them afterwards. That is what the German colony near my place, who are a most prosperous and thrifty people, have done. Some of them had to be assisted at the beginning, but they are to-day prosperous people.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I do not know that I can endorse what my hon. friend says. We have always had a hamlet law on the statute-book. I do not know that it has been taken advantage of by our own people, who are of a more independent character, but there are many foreigners, like the Mennonites, who prefer to settle in villages. After they become familiar with the ways of our country, they adopt Canadian habits and take independent paths. I do not think the experience of Manitoba bears out the view of my hon. friend from Wolseley, that it is unwise to settle every quarter section. The Galician idea of farming differs from ours. They come out here and cultivate, say, twenty-five acres, most of it in gardening, so that there is not the slightest danger of the prairie becoming crowded. One of the most prosperous parts of Manitoba is where all the odd and even-numbered sections were open for settlement.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Where is that?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—In the neighbourhood of Neepawa.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—That is a fine farming country.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I do not attribute the prosperity of the community altogether to the quality of their lands; but people do like to have neighbours, and one will gradually buy out another and thus changes will take place. The best town we have on the line of the North-western Railway is Neepawa, because all the lands in the locality are settled upon, while in the neighbourhood of other towns, like Minnedosa and Birtle, the odd-numbered sections having been withdrawn for railway purposes, are vacant. Those who are on the even-numbered sections have the advantage, it is true, of pasturing these lands, but very few have the ability to put cattle on them. I do not know whether this bill is merely renewing the hamlet law or improving upon it, but I know that it is a wise provision, and that we have better towns where the settlement in a township is closer than where half the lands are vacant. I do not think it is wise for the government to colonize distinct nationalities apart from the rest of the community, but as the Minister of Justice has said, we must meet the requirements of the older people when they first settle in the country and not take them away too much from the habits of the countries from which they come. They will gradually assimilate themselves to Canadian ways.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The Mennonite reserve is the best section in Manitoba. A large section of the country was reserved for them, more than was settled upon, which bears out what I say; they used the vacant lands for pasturage and cutting hay. Neepawa is one of the best settled parts of the country and has railway facilities, but these Galicians, I am told, have been sent far away from railway facilities, where they cannot raise wheat. At Neepawa if you raise wheat you have a market for it; but in the North-west a man cannot raise wheat successfully more than fifteen miles from a railway. That is why we need railways in that country so badly. As I have said, the Mennonites lived in one of the best sections of the country and the government reserved a large area of land for them. It was such a large area that when I was in the North-west Council we memorialized the government to open that reserve for settlement. The settlers at Neepawa must have been a very different class of people from these Galicians.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—They settled close to each other.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—They were not paupers, almost, as I understand these people are in the country from which they come.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall be very glad to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the remarks of the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—With a great deal of what the Minister of Justice has said I concur, but there is a great deal of force also in what has been said by the hon. gentleman from Wolseley, who has spoken with regard to the reservation of odd-numbered sections. I have long since come to the conclusion that it was a mistake, in the settlement of a country, to attempt to colonize it as we have done, for the reason that settlers had been obliged to locate lands at some distance from each other. I know I was responsible for that policy, but I have learned something by experience. The system was a mistake, although it was adopted with the best possible motive.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was supposed at the time, and believed firmly by myself and by those with whom I was associated, that in the settlement of the country, by reserving the odd-numbered sections, the sale of those lands would compensate for the surveying and other expenses incident to the building of railways, the subsidies which were given, and for all other purposes; but after all, I believe it would have been better if a small amount had been charged for the lands and settlers had been allowed to locate as near each other as possible. I have no doubt the statement made by my hon. friend from Wolseley about the German settlement is quite correct; but any settler could have gone into that section and selected a quarter section for a homestead, and pre-empted the adjoining quarter section, and thus secured land for pasturage. I see that this clause is confined exclusively to co-operative farming. Why should that be? Why should not twenty or thirty of our young men be able to locate lands close to each other, as they can do in some of the Western States. I am sorry to say I have known a young man who had gone to the Western States from the rear of my own county, where only about one-third of the lands are arable, come back and take away a whole group of twenty or thirty persons from the county to settle in the Western States as a colony. Why should not a similar privilege be given in the North-west Territory, in the same manner as these foreigners are allowed to do under the co-operative system?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the laws are broad enough to do that?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I doubt it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It does not mean that all their earnings go into a common purse, but they can assist each other.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If such be the case, then they must form themselves into co-operative farming societies.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend speaks of the law as this makes it for a special object. I think the power that he considers desirable, could be exercised by the minister under the existing provisions of the law.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why insert the word "co-operative" at all? It would be much more liberal without it.

Hon Mr. SCOTT—The first part of the clause covers that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does that give them the power to settle on the odd-numbered sections?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It does.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think that the fact is generally known. That being the law, and this bill being for special purposes, it is not objectionable. I think the whole system—although you cannot avoid it—as pointed out by the Minister of Justice, of settling in communities is a mistake ; I care not whether those communities be people of any particular nationality, creed, or class. It prevents the introduction of other elements, and is not as good, either for themselves or for the country, as if they were mixed up with other races, creeds or classes. I have noticed that where people of a particular race settle in one colony, and form a little community by themselves, they do not break away from their old habits, but adhere to them as long as they live. I have seen the contrast between such a community and another in the same township where men of different races had settled together. The very same class of people who, in the close community, showed the same shiftlessness which characterized them in their original homes, were, when mixed with other races, as thrifty and prosperous as any of their neighbours of other races.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is perfectly true.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But my hon. friend says, and says with a great deal of truth, that experience has taught him that people who have been brought up in older countries, and who inherit prejudices centuries old, are not likely to abandon the ways in which they were brought up. The improvement takes place in the younger people. The Mennonites, who settled in a community, are an illustration of that. The younger Mennonites are beginning to scatter. They are beginning to inter-marry with outside families, and although the older heads try to prevent it, the perversity of human nature is such that if they form attachments they pay very little attention to parental advice. The result is good to themselves and also to the country. If it were possible to prevent the settlement of such colonies, I would be glad to see it done, but recognizing the fact that it cannot be prevented, it is just as well to let the government deal with human nature as they find it.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 9.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is a new clause. That related to Dominion land surveyors. It is found that provincial land surveyors are not entitled to practise as Dominion land surveyors, except after undergoing a year's tutelage, and this is in order to give the board power to admit them. It is a clause suggested by the board of examiners of the land surveyors.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 12.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman from Calgary drew attention to that clause the other day. I may say in advance that this clause has been suggested by Mr. Pearce and Mr. Denis, two gentlemen more familiar with the irrigation subject than any persons I know of.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This proposes to give power to the Minister of the Interior to sell to companies the public lands of the North-west Territories. Now, so far as those lands being limited to arid lands that is no limitation practically, because it may be well said that all the lands in that one district of country are arid lands, and we know it is a very easy matter to have officials report on the fact that any lands so desired to be purchased by corporations are arid lands. At the present time parliament must pronounce upon the alienation of public lands. Why should the Minister of the Interior be invested with that extraordinary power, a power to-day vested in parliament? You might as well ask to empower the Governor in Council to alienate large tracts of public lands in the way of railway subsidies as to say that the Minister of the Interior should have power to alienate perhaps equally large tracts of land to irrigation companies. If any particular case arises in which it is desirable to sell to irrigation companies, parliament should pronounce upon that. Surely such a scheme can be submitted to parliament in precisely the same way as a railway subsidy is. If there were merits in the scheme I am satisfied there would be no difficulty in such power being given to sell any area of lands that may be required by bona fide companies. But why entirely irrespective of amount and value, this extraordinary power should be given to the Minister of the Interior I am at a loss to understand.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I agree with my hon. friend that this is too much power to place in the hands of one minister.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He must get an Order in Council. I will read the clause and then the hon. gentleman can see :

The Minister of the Interior may withdraw from general sale and from settlement under the homestead provisions of the said Act, any lands in the North-west Territories which he believes to be so arid as to be unsuited for proper cultivation without the aid of irrigation, and he may dispose thereof to any person for such price, upon such terms, and subject to such conditions as to the colonization or settlement thereof and as to the cultivation thereof by the aid of irrigation, as the Governor in Council fixes and determine.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is equally objectionable ; because if the Minister of the Interior recommends the sale of them, we may very well assume that the Governor in Council will support the Minister of the Interior. Permit me to state, in addition to what I have already said, that I have been thoroughly familiar with the formation of irrigation companies in the district at present under consideration since the question of irrigation has been discussed, and I am unaware of any instance in which irrigation has been retarded by reason of the absence of such a power being vested in the Minister of the Interior. Unfortunately, two or three companies who have entered on that project have not been successful, but not because of the Minister of the Interior not being in a position to alienate lands to irrigation companies. Quite the contrary. Irrigation companies have been able to secure all the lands they have been desirous of securing upon the most reasonable terms, and never has this presented itself as a difficulty.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is speaking of his own experience ; but this provision of the law is an expression of the experience of the Minister of the Interior.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My experience on this questian has extended considerably beyond the experience of the Minister of the Interior.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I beg my hon. friend's pardon, I dissent from that view. The Minister of the Interior has persons communicating with him every day with regard to the interests in public lands and with regard to the acquisition of certain rights, and so he is in a position to speak on this and on every subject of a similar character relating to the disposal of public lands with much more certainty as to what the actual situation is than my hon. friend. Now, there is nothing in this contrary to the settled policy of the country. What is the position of things? With regard to every administrative act the authority is the authority of the Crown. Parliament legislates and has a superintending power over the actions of the executive government ; but the sale and the disposal of public lands and their management are all parts of the administrative government and are all acts that are vested by our constitutional system in the Crown, and when the minister asks the power here, he is not asking anything unusual or anything that is not perfectly consistent with the powers that belong to the executive government of the country, and for the exercise of which he is responsible. Now that power is divided ; and he does that under the supervision of the council ; and therefore it is a matter upon which his colleagues must be consulted, and to which they must give their assent before anything can be done by him.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It has always been the settled policy, in the sale of public lands, that a price has been fixed.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But the price is fixed by the executive government.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Not to-day, it is by statute.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The superintending power of the government extends over all these things. As parliament meets within twelve months every year, the government's action with regard to this matter of administration is under its supervision, and so I do not see well how there can be any greater limitation than what is here imposed, if an administrator is to be free to discharge his public duties. There are lands, I am told, on the southern border in the region of Macleod and lying farther east, that require irrigation in order too make them cultivable. The soil is naturally good, but the rainfall is insufficient, and there are parties who have made applications to the Minister of the Interior who desire to try the experiment of irrigation, persons who are acquainted with this system in California and Utah ; and the question that it was important for us to have solved at the present time with regard to these arid lands is how far, in a high latitude, you can depend on irrigation? Because the water supply in all that region is water supply obtained from the snows melting on the Rocky Mountains, and the water is very cold. It is not, in its temperature, much above freezing point, and whether that can be utilized for the purpose of irrigation with success or not is a matter that has not yet been decided. It is very important, as we have a very large area of these lands, excellent in every respect except the want of sufficient rainfall on them, that this experiment be tried, and if persons are disposed to undertake the work, surely, with the immense area that we have of this sort of lands that are practically of little use, it is worth our while to let the experiment be tried, especially as the experiment will be tried at the cost of the parties who established these irrigated districts.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I was simply going to point out this objection which prejudicies my mind very much against such power being vested in the Minister of the Interior. Already too many lands are tied up by reason of large tracts having been given to railway companies as subsidies, and it seems to me that this is simply duplicating the tying up of large tracts of land, and intensifying the present condition of affairs existing in that country. There are to-day large tracts of land which it would be very desirable, in the interests of the country, should be thrown open for settlement, but which are tied up by railway companies.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Are there not lands in my hon. friend's district for the purpose of irrigation?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I referred to railway companies.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But are there not lands granted for irrigation?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I understand that Mr. Pierce and another gentleman had lands granted to them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, but not granted by the government.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Purchased at such price as the government choose to fix.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes. Those lands are obtainable by settlers on the same terms as they have been granted to the parties referred to and others. I do not object to that, but I object to this power being given to the Minister of the Interior to deal with corporations and parties who may have influence in locking up large tracts of land for years to come and prevent settlement.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Colonization, settlement, cultivation and irrigation are all matters to be regulated by Order in Council, and my hon. friend knows that in the district to which I refer, that it required parties with a very large amount of capital to make the experiment with any degree of success.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would be delighted if they would do it. We usually find a law of this kind operating in favour of influential companies, with the result of a reservation of large quantities of land.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Parliament meets every year.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is no way of restricting the power once it has been given.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend's observation is practically a condemnation of our system of government. If the government go wrong they are open to the censure of parliament.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We want to prevent the government doing wrong.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—You will have to adopt a different system.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Why not put the whole thing under the Governor in Council?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that that is the case. The minister cannot take the first step to carry this into effect except by Order in Council. It is just like the North-west Government Bill and the Yukon Bill. There is a distinction between the administration of the minister and the larger functions of the government. That exists everywhere, and I do not see why we should attempt to break it down.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I take exception to the statement that the Minister of Justice knows more about irrigation than the hon. gentleman from Calgary. The hon. member from Calgary lives in the neighbourhood——

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I said nothing of the kind.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It was the Minister of the Interior, he referred to.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I may not have quoted the exact words, the hon. Minister of Justice said that the Minister of the Interior knew more about irrigation than the hon. gentleman from Calgary who lives in that country where irrigation has been attempted and practised, and knows exactly the result which flows from it. The information of the Minister of the Interior is through third parties, and the hon. gentleman said he was in communication with a number of speculators who have in their mind's eye a large tract of land where they propose to adopt the system of irrigation and make their fortunes out of it. I have no objection to that, because if they bring the lands under cultivation it would be so much greater advantage to the people of this country. If my hon. friend had been through the section of the country to which he referred, he would not have spoken as he did about it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have been through it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What section?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The section to which this clause applies.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The whole country west of Regina and around that district. We know that people have condemned it as unfit for irrigation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am aware of that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend spoke of Fort Macleod, and when I speak of that district or any portion of it I think I can speak with knowledge. I drove from De Loraine to Fort Macleod and also from Fort Macleod through the Crow's Nest Pass to the Columbia; so that when I speak of that section of the country I speak of it with some little knowledge of what the land is and what its capabilities are. I know that section of the country is infinitely better than a large portion of the land which lies north of it and which has been termed arid land, and if the Minister of Justice thinks proper, under this clause, he can declare that whole section of country to be of the character to which this clause refers, and by that means it opens the road to a gigantic fraud. It may not be intended, but I say it opens the way to a gigantic fraud in the way of obtaining large sections of land at a merely nominal price, which can be done upon the recommendation of the Minister of the Interior. The question is, is that desirable? I should rather see, if the clause is to remain in, that there should be some words added. The hon. minister believes it to be so arid as to be unsuited for proper cultivation without the aid of irrigation, and he may dispose thereof on at an upset price by public competition to any person upon such terms and subject to such conditions as to colonization settlement and so on, as the Governor in Council may determine. That protects the Minister of the Interior from any charge that might be made against him, and it is a safeguard to the proper disposal of those lands and keep the government in a position in which they would be prepared, I think successfully, to carry out any regulation or any sale they might make under this clause. I do not see why that should not be done.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know the gentleman to whom he refers very well, and he is almost a maniac on the subject of irrigation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is Pierre St. Denis.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not believe half we have been told about it. I have great respect for Mr. Pierce. I know he has spent his money in the attempt to irrigate that country. I have been on farms that have been irrigated, and have seen the effects of the irrigation. To say the lands which have been irrigated are arid lands is a misapplication of the word altogether; but cultivation has been improved, the lands have been put in an improved position by means of the irrigation, so that they have become profitable to the owners. But what I object to is the giving of the power to make a bargain with any individual at any price they like. I had not noticed the words "at such price as the Governor in Council may determine," and the Governor in Council will determine on the price stated by the report of the Minister of the Interior unless he has some information of his own, and as the hon. gentleman has adopted the system of government by heads of departments, instead of, as formerly, everything being brought to council, it makes it ten times worse, because you put more power in the hands of one man. If I were a minister, I would ten times rather have this restriction than have the whole responsibility thrown on my shoulders. The Governor in Council fixes the price here. They can say that there is an upset price for the purchase of these lands and publish it to the world, and they can say "in addition to that upset price you must perform such colonization duties as are hereinafter described," whatever that may be. Then if the parties who want the lands could go there and accept them on those conditions, it would be a fair thing and relieve the Minister of the Interior of responsibility, and place the government of the day in a position where they could defend their actions.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The government would have no difficulty in defending their action if they acted honestly, and if they do not act honestly they are open to the censure of parliament. My hon. friend imposes conditions here which do not exist anywhere else. The Governor General may pardon every man who is convicted of murder for the next twelve months. He has the legal power to do it, and if anybody propose to tie the hands of the Crown because an abuse may be committed. The Governor General at the end of this session could disallow every Act of every local legislature that has been passed within twelve months. Is anybody afraid that that is going to be done? Does any one propose to tie up the prerogatives of the Crown to prevent an abuse of that sort? My hon. friend proposes restrictions that are, in point of character, exactly the same. He says put up those lands at public auction. How can you put up the lands at public auction? Here are persons perhaps residing in Utah or Southern California, or other portions of the world, wanting to acquire a certain area for the purpose of irrigation. My hon. friend says, fix a price and ask for tenders. Did he do that with the sale of every lot in the North-west Territories?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No; because the law provides what the price shall be.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And some of them are worth twice as much as others. How do I know? How do the ministers know in the first instance; how do people living in California know just what it will cost to irrigate a certain area? They may be lands of good character, and yet the cost of irrigation may be so much as to make them less valuable to the parties who acquire them than these other lands lying near that are of a much inferior character; and yet, if you were to purchase them and take into consideration the cost of irrigation, the lands that are the least valuable are the lands that might sell for the highest price.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No harm in that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Here is a party applying, say from California. He says "I wish to obtain a certain area for the purpose of irrigation and cultivation." Well, he has first to make a survey. He has to ascertain from what source he will get the water for the purpose of irrigation and what the cost will be to irrigate that area of territory. All the facts connected with the subject of irrigation must be ascertained, and if, in addition to the negotiation with the minister subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, the minister has to advertise for tenders, and some one else, it may be the man who has surveyed for him and been paid by him, becomes a competitor, having profited by the knowledge he acquired in the survey, and perhaps acquires the land. I do not think you would get many persons who would undertake to bring areas under cultivation on such terms. There is but one way of doing this, and that is by allowing every man who choses to apply to the minister to negotiate with him. The minister is the custodian of that territory, and when he negotiates, if he makes a bad bargain he is subject to the censure and control of parliament, and certainly the control mentioned in the clause is a control such as our system of parliamentary government provides for the work of administration in every department of the government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am much obliged to the hon. gentleman, and I am sure the hon. gentlemen present will also be obliged, for the information he has given us as to the prerogative of the Crown. All I am surprised at, is, that he did not go back to Magna Charta, and tell us how the liberties of the people had been secured, and how the prerogatives had been diminished, and what they are at the present time. If he had confined himself to the question of advertising these lands, why then we could have understood him a good deal better. One would have supposed, from the argument he used, that the law has never recognized the principle of advertising for tenders for what the government might require to be performed. We know the Public Works Act contains a clause especially for that purpose, though the present Minister of Public Works has treated that law with contempt; and I dare say the Minister of the Interior would do precisely the same if he had the opportunity—that is, if he is of the same character as the Minister of Public Works, or, as he has been represented by the public press and those who know him. We know, also, on the contrary, that the Postmaster General has justified the cancellation of some hundreds of contracts, because he alleges that under the law which he has to administer, those contracts shall be given out by tender, so that while parliament has recognized this principle from time immemorial, it is only a question whether ministers of the day, whom my hon. friend says are subject to the condemnation of parliament, will adhere to the law or will treat it with contempt. I know he is subject to the will of parliament, but the will of parliament means a majority such as they have at the present moment in the House of Commons, who, no matter what the Minister of Public Works may do in this respect, so long as their own friends get the advantage of it, will sanction any Act of the ministers. He may set all the provisions of the law at defiance, as he is doing and has boasted he would continue to do——

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Who?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Minister of Public Works.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Oh, no.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, yes; he did so the other day in committee when this question was being discussed, and as long as you have a majority such as you have in the House of Commons at the present time, and might also have under another government, they will justify the acts of the minister rather than condemn the government. The principle which I ask to have embodied in this clause is nothing extraordinary. I repeat it protects the minister and protects the government, but the government do not want any protection. They are so self confident in their own powers of administration.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is judging us by himself.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, I have learned that by experience. It is quite true. I had some eighteen years of it, and I know precisely the influences that are brought to bear. Speaking for myself, I am quite willing to admit that such attempts have been made continually, but all I ask my hon. friend, or any of those who belong to the same party, is to point to a single instance where I was induced to depart from the law which governed the department of which I had control.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is asking for a single instance, I suppose he remembers the Eyre case.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes. I am not going into the details of that question. I remember a railway suit, arising out of a decision of the department which was overruled by the Supreme Court. The ruling in reference to the rails of the street railways, was sustained by every court in the Dominion, but the Privy Council set it aside, and if the different courts in Canada would justify the action of the department in that ruling, it shows at least that there was ground for coming to that decision. I am not going into the Eyre case, but I could justify the decision of the department and, more than that, I could show that the decision of the judge was based upon absurd grounds so far as the law is concerned. But does my hon. friend pretend to say that the decision in the Eyre case was arrived at from any corrupt or improper motives?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not saying that, and I am not suggesting it. My hon. friend made an attack upon two of my colleagues and declared they paid no attention to the law.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman said "mention a single case where I departed from the law," and I mentioned the Eyre case.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not depart from the law, and I did not say the two ministers had departed from the law. I said that one minister had departed from and the other minister had acted under the law, but I attributed no motive for his doing so. That is what I did and nothing more. There are scores of decisions given in the different departments similar to that to which my hon. friend has referred that have been sustained by the courts, and which have been set aside by other courts. But that is all apart from what we are discussing now. What I wanted to show to the House was that I had made no suggestion that was not justified by laws which are upon the statute-book; and I do not hesitate to add that I have no confidence in the Minister of the Interior in dealing with this or any other matter; hence I would like to see the bill so framed that he could not abuse the power, and if that can be done in the interest of the country and in the interest of the government, it would be well to have it done.

Clause 12 was adopted.

Hon. Mr. McKAY, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (110) "An Act further to amend the Post Office Act."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I may just as well give my opinion upon this bill now, and thereby avoid the necessity of discussing each section as it comes up.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Quite so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not propose to make a very long criticism, but I regret that a bill of this importance should be presented at this period of the session, when we have scarcely a quorum. It is a measure of very great importance, as it affects great interests in the country. I am not opposed to the principle of making newspapers pay postage for being carried to their subscribers. I know of no reason why any business should be carried on or assisted by a government in this way. There is this, however, to be said. There is no protection whatever to that branch of industry. I would object also to the reduction to two cents under the condition in which it is proposed to carry out that reduction. Another objection I would take, if I were going to move in the matter, would be to strike out that exception which is given to what are termed weekly, or country newspapers. If the principle of charging for carrying a newspaper from the place of publication to its subscriber, be correct, then it is equally correct and should be enforced for twenty miles as well as for twenty-one miles. That is one incongruity in the bill, although it is a concession, I admit, to newspapers printed in country towns, which circulate in the main in the locality where they are published. It is a concession, but it is a concession that I think violates the principle on which the bill is framed. If newspapers should be subject to postage, it should apply to them all, under all circumstances, and everybody should be treated alike. I am speaking as one who, I frankly admit, is interested in this very class of newspapers that will be benefited by that exception. I pointed out to the Postmaster General what my view was. There is another reason why I object to the two cent postage: the reason advanced by the Postmaster General for imposing a tax upon newspapers is in order to recoup the revenue of the great loss which it sustains at the present day and to make it as far as possible self-sustaining.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Have we any information as to what the probable revenue would be from it?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no information other than that which the Postmaster General himself stated in the House of Commons, and he calculated, if my recollection serves me right, either one hundred and fifty thousand to two hundred thousand dollars; my recollection is about two hundred thousand. It would be a direct tax upon the publisher of the newspaper. They say it is not; that it is an additional tax on the reader or subscriber Now, I say from practical knowledge, that that is utterly impossible. If your weekly paper is circulated for a dollar a year, you cannot add two, or five, or ten cents to the price of that paper and take it from the subscriber; that is an impracticable proposition. Then it becomes a direct tax upon the publishers of the newspapers to recoup to the revenue a concession which is made to the commercial community, and those who write letters. I venture the prediction that the revenue from newspapers will not be as great as the loss to the revenue arising from the reduction of the three cents to two cents, which will redound 99 per cent to the benefit of the commercial community. If the contention be correct that the imposition of postage on newspapers is to be paid by the subscriber, then it is a direct tax on the readers of newspapers, to be recouped by the reduction of the duties upon the postage upon letters, which would be mainly to the advantage of the commercial community. I know it is not to come into force till a proclamation has been issued by the Governor General. The order may be issued just on the very eve of an election in some city or other where the commercial community is predominant, just the same as we had the announcement in the last election in the city of Toronto, that a reduction of two cents in foreign postage was about to be enacted and put in force. I am not going to discuss that, but I say that it could be done, and I am not saying here what I did not say to the Postmaster General himself in conversation on this subject. If the reduction is right, and is intended to be put in force, it should go into force at once. If it be right and proper to reserve the right to the Governor General, it is equally right and proper to reserve the power to bring into operation that clause which provides for the imposition of a duty on newspapers. This is the view that I have taken of the provision of this bill, and anybody who will take a practical view of it, I venture to say, can come to no other conclusion. The imposition of the duties on newspapers, to which I do not object, is a direct tax on the publisher, and if it is not a direct tax on the publisher, it is a tax on the reader; a tax so imposed for the benefit of the commercial community who are to reap the advantages which will accrue from the reduction of the letter postage from three to two cents. Any one who knows anything of the rural sections of this country, knows that a more intelligent class of farmers and yeomanry does not exist in any part of the world than in Canada. They are not a class of people, however, who keep up a business correspondence their correspondence is almost exclusively confined to their friends. I admit that the introduction of cheese factories and butter factories, adds, to a certain extent, to the correspondence, but where information is required in connection with these industries through the country which are always in the rural parts of Canada, it is done usually by telegraph and not by letters, because when they require information is is information needed at very short notice in order to enable them to come to a conclusion as to whether they should sell the product of their different factories or hold it. There are other clauses referring to the dead letter department to which I do not take the same objections that were taken in the other House. I do not know but that it a more expeditious way of dealing with dead letters, and so far as the letters are concerned and the class of officers we have, they are just as safe in being opened in Toronto, Montreal or Winnipeg as they would be, if sent to Ottawa; and certainly it would be of much greater convenience to the correspondents. I do not know that I have any further remarks to make on this subject, because I have long held the opinion that newspapers should be subject to taxation as well as any other matter that is circulated through the post office; but at the same time, I do not think that that tax should be imposed for the benefit of any other class of the community. some newspaper men say "our type, presses, paper and everything else that we have, are taxed, and the only concession we got from the government was the permission to send the newspapers through the mails free of charge;" but think for a moment of the hundreds and thousands of tons of matter which is carried free and circulated free through the country. It is true the contention has been that it is for educational purposes, and that everything should be done that can be done to educate the people that they may know what was going on in the country, commercially, politically and historically. Notwithstanding that, I have not changed my mind on the question of imposing a tax as I have already indicated. But I do think it is a suicidal policy for the government to adopt with the hope of recouping the deficits which occur every year from the carrying of mails. It is only adding to one portion of the service and taking from another. An experience of only a year or two will show if the one will compensate for the other; and if it only compensates the one for the other, then I say you are imposing a tax on parties less able to bear it than the parties who are relieved of a cent upon every letter. You can calculate the number of letters, and then all you have to do is to take a third from it. I dare say my hon. friend has the figures at command, I have not. The tax on newspapers I admit is not very large, but publishers of country newspapers make but a bare living. So it is a tax on one class for the relief of the other, and upon a class which is less able to bear it than the commercial communities. Is there any one in Canada who is prevented from writing a letter, on account of having to pay three cents postage, who would write the letter if he had only to pay two cents on it? I do not think there is any one that is prevented writing a letter because he has to pay three cents. However, the government has taken the responsibility of making these changes and I will not attempt to interfere in their policy, although I have had very strong representations made to me that the tax ought not to be placed on those who are least able to bear it.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Can the hon. gentleman tell me does the express carry the daily papers throughout the populous districts?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Formerly they did, when the newspaper postage existed. It is possible they may do so now, when you take into consideration the large issue of their newspapers. Take, for instance, the Toronto Globe and Mail, which circulates in almost every town in the country, the Montreal Gazette, the Montreal Star and other papers—the Montreal Star, I know, delivers papers every day in the city in which I live to the extent of three or four hundred. They send them now through the mails; they may evade the postage upon these papers, provided the express will take them cheaper, and there is no doubt in my mind but what the papers having large circulation—the Globe, the Mail, the Star, the Gazette and some others—where they send away tons every day, will make arrangements with the express companies and send them to the frontier towns. For instance, take the Mail and Globe in my own city; they distribute their morning daily papers at half-past eleven every day. The same train that brings the mail has an express car, and if the Globe and the Mail can send their papers cheaper by express than by post, depend on it they will do it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is pretty clear, hon. gentlemen, that the express charges will have to be very much less and the postage very much higher than that which is proposed by the present bill before any such results will follow.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Could the hon. Minister of Justice tell us whether the railway companies are paid by the weight or by the mile?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The railway companies have an agreement with the express companies.

Hon Mr. BOULTON—But the post office department?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They are paid a mileage.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—No matter how much weight goes, they carry it for the same price?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You are speaking of the postage?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The postal car?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Yes, the arrangement between the postal department and the Grand Trunk Railway, for instance. They have a contract to carry the mail.

Is that a mileage contract, or is the contract according to the weight of the letters and papers?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, it is a mileage contract between Montreal and Toronto, and they get so much whether they carry one pound or ten pounds.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Let me say with regard to the observations made by the hon. leader of the opposition that I do not think that this is a transference simply of the tax from one section of the community or one class of persons who are served by the postal department to another class. The charge made for the carriage of letters and the charge made for the carriage of mails never was a tax. It is a charge for services rendered, and there is no difference between the services rendered by the government in this respect and the services if rendered by a common carrier. The question which naturally occurs to one who investigates the subject is whether those who write those letters and who send them though the post, pay more than the service is actually worth. I think they do; and what is more, after a change is made there will be no diminition of revenue ofter the first three years in consequence of the reduction of the charge that is made. In 1868 we had a charge of five cents, and in 1869 it was reduced to three cents and the number of letters in round numbers rose from 18,000,000 to 22,000,000, so that there was an increase of 4,000,000 in a single year. My hon. friends will see that that is an increase of nearly twenty per cent. There is no reason to suppose that that will not be the case with the reduction of postage from three cents to two cents. We have the experience of the postal department in England and the experience of the postal department in the United States and in both those countries the reduction of the postage after a period of three or four years led to an increase of the revenue derived from this service. I have no doubt whatever that that will be the result here, and after the lapse of three or four years the increase in the revenue in this country will be just what it has been elsewhere, that when you diminish the charge by thirty-three per cent, a larger number of persons will avail themselves of the use of the postal department than would under other circumstances. Now the postage, whether on newspapers or on letters, being a charge for services rendered, and not a tax, I do not know any reason why the man who choses to write letters and send them through the mail should be called upon, because he sends a letter through the mail, in addition to that postal charge, to also pay the postal charge upon the newspapers that his neighbour or somebody else receives. The government is rendering the service of a carrier and I know no reason why the letter carrier should bear the charge both of the newspaper and of the letter. My hon. friend says that if you put a tax on newspapers it will fall entirely upon the publisher and not at all upon the purchaser or receiver of the newspaper. I do not think that is so. My hon. friend will remember that while the price of newspapers went down by the extent of the abolition of the postage the moment the reduction on postage was made.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, I can name a score of papers.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So can I, but not for that reason.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They were coincident in point of time, and I happened to be connected with a newspaper and I know that everybody in the office believed, and the proprietors as well believe, that they reduced the price because they had no longer to pay the postage in advance upon the papers which they sent to the subscribers.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Your connection with the paper was as a writer, not as a proprietor?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, both. My hon. friend has also referred to the charges that he says will fall upon the daily newspapers. Let me mention an instance. On Saturday morning six cars loaded with newspapers go out from Montreal or Toronto from a single office. Why should the public be charged, not merely with the service of the officers who accompany those cars, two officers of the postal department, but also with the cost of sending those cars to their destination? Because, that is what it amounts to, and I do not know why the public revenues should be charged with that particular sum.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not object to the charge on the newspapers; therefore there is no use arguing that point.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend said we ought to have kept it off the newspapers and left it on the letters.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, I said to keep it on both. There is quite a difference.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—You said we were putting a tax now on those who were least able to bear it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is not a tax.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I will accept your interpretation, call it whatever you like.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is a payment for services rendered. The charge paid upon newspapers does not pay the expenses of the cars, to say nothing about the public officers.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then put more on.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—So far as the public officers are concerned the newspapers are receiving that service as free to-day as they did before. A newspaper until June, 1899, will be charged one-fourth of one cent upon and after June, 1899, the charge will be half a cent. That is a very small sum and certainly it is one that cannot be a burden upon any prosperous business. My hon. friend's attack upon the Postmaster General early this evening, but I shall not allude to that. The figures show that the Postmaster General has so managed the affairs of his department that he is justified in making the reduction of the tax on the letters. Look at the result. In the postal department on the 1st July, 1896, the deficit was $780,000 and in 1897 it was $580,000, and as far as we can estimate at this moment, within a few weeks of the end of 1897-98, the deficit will not exceed $100,000 this year. So that there has been a marked improvement in the revenues derived from these sources, a diminution of the expense and the revenue from the newspapers, sixteen and a half million of pounds at half a cent a pound, will yield a revenue of $82,000. So that there is every prospect that that tax would ordinarily make up the deficit of $100,000 if the revenues were as much another year as they have been in the past Let me say further, that I expect that the revenue from letters for the first two or three years will show a smaller return than that which has existed under three cent postage. But at the end of that period the increase in the number of letters will give a revenue in increase of that which exists at the present time. That has been the experience both in England and the United States. There is one other matter to which my hon. friend took exception, and that is the exemption from taxation upon newspapers within a radius of twenty miles. The local newspapers which do not circulate more than once a week are permitted to circulate the distance of twenty miles from the office of publication through the postal service without charge, and beyond that a charge will be made. The Postmaster General has made an estimate of the amount of revenue that would be derived from these papers if they were subjected to the charge of a half a cent a pound, and it was found it would amount to a very small sum. It would be of no appreciable advantage to the revenue, and those weekly papers circulating where the population is sparse pay more for their paper, and without this charge they will not be in a more advantageous position than the larger papers that circulate daily from the great centres of population. This being so, I think that it will be found that this law on the whole will prove advantageous.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To whom? To the revenue?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—To the revenue. That certainly was the experience of the government in the reduction of the letter postage from five to three cents, and I have no doubt it will be the experience here as it was in the United States in the reduction from three to two cents and with a very small charge upon the newspapers, the reduction upon the letters and the economical management of the department, I see no reason why the postal service should not be as efficient as it is at the present time and the revenue better than it has been for many years.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not propose to pursue my hon. friend s arguments any further. My hon. friend says that the postage is of little consequence to the publishers of newspapers; but, he immediately afterwards said it would be of great benefit to the revenue. He told us six carloads of newspapers left the city of Toronto every Saturday. Half a cent a pound on that quantity would amount to $200 per car every Saturday provided the car carried twenty tons out of the pockets of the publishers of the newspapers for the service which was rendered them by the government. A half cent a pound on one ton would be ten dollars, and you multiply that by twenty and you get $200. So that it is no small item at all. You begin with half of that which would be $100, until a certain period and after that it would be $200. I do not object to that. The hon. gentleman wasted a good deal of time in defending the charge upon newspapers; what I objected to, was the manner and mode in which it was done, and I also objected to the exemption which was made, and I still assert it is a tax for services rendered, while you relieve others better able to pay.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I think this bill discriminates against the editors of newspapers in the country and in favour of the city editor. It is a direct tax on the farmers of the country in the North-west. Our papers are all country papers.

Hon. Mr. MLLS—They are exempt for twenty miles.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—They would not benefit much by the exemption, because they come forty, fifty and sixty miles, and if we get the Winnipeg Free Press it comes 300 or 400 miles, and the editor cannot be expected to send these papers out and pay the postage for nothing and the result will be he will have to charge for the paper very much more than the postage if he makes a charge at all. I think this bill discriminates against the farmers, particularly in our western country, where the distances are very great and the papers are country newspapers. I do not see why the city man or the man within ten miles of the office of publication should get his paper free.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He does not.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The man within ten miles of the city gets his paper free.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—You allow twenty miles.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Only on the weeklies.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I think it is too bad to tax newspapers. They are a source of information to the public, and people cannot do without it.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I think the bill is a very good one, for the reason that when the newspapers find this heavy tax upon them they will want to get rid of protection and have free trade. That is a good answer to any arguments that may be adduced on behalf of the government policy. I think these fees upon the newspapers will cause them to complain, "We are taxed upon our papers, our machinery, our coal and coal oil and everything to be used, and now we are going to be taxed for the carrying of these papers to our customers," and in that respect the bill commends itself to my mind. I think also it is a decided advance to feel that the country has arrived at that stage that we can reduce the postage to two cents. I am quite confident if this onslaught of the newspapers is in order to open our markets to the old country there is not a shadow of doubt there will be a tremendous increase in the Post Office Department in the carriage of mails, and the postal department will increase its revenue very much in that respect. There is just one thing I should like to draw the attention of the government to; I think it is advisable that, now we have got our two cent postage, to do away with the franking privilege. If that were abolished, it would be a great advantage to the revenue of the postal department. One of the things that caused the government to take up this question and put a tax upon the carriage of newspapers is the way our franking privilege has been abused. I have no doubt if the franking privilege were done away with, $100,000 would be added to the revenue. That is also in close alliance with the issue of trunks and stationery and things of that kind, which are called the little perquisites which we enjoy. I think perquisites are the root of all evil, and if we were to educate our members and senators up to that standpoint, it would be a great saving to the country. The Secretary of State in giving us statistics, said there were last year 123,000,000 letters which at three cents should produce $3,600,000, while the revenue was only $3,000,800. There are three things that are working a great deal of injury to the representation of the people of this country, the franking privilege, the issue of trunks and stationery and the passes. When we get rid of them the people will be a great deal better represented than they are at the present moment. Not that I wish to cast any reflection on my hon. colleagues in the slightest degree, but still it would pay the country very well indeed if that result were brought about.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Did not the hon. gentleman try the experiment one year of doing away with the passes?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Did he return to it again?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I can say that for ten years I have never used a pass on our local railway, the Manitoba and Northwestern. I pay my way every time I travel. I sent my pass back to the Canadian Pacific Railway for two years, but they returned it to me and I have used it since. I am quite satisfied that what I say in that respect would be a very wise thing, and now that we have reduced our postage down to two cents we can do away with the franking privilege.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I should like to know what is likely to be the loss of revenue by reducing the postage from three to two cents. We have not received that information yet, and I think it is rather pertinent to the matter before us. It is true when there was a reduction in the rate on letters from five to three cents the number of letters increased, but it does not follow now that the number will increase. Five cents was considered too high a rate for the carrying of ordinary letters, and people now consider three cents a very reasonable rate and there have been no complaints about it. They will not write a single letter more at the reduced rate. I do not know that there was any great call in the country for this reduced rate of postage. I do not know that business people object to pay three cents to carry a letter all over Canada, and it certainly is a very reasonable rate when we look back and consider what has been charged in the past. Years ago, when I was in business in Prince Edward Island, it cost us one shilling and one penny half penny to send a letter from Nova Scotia to Prince Edward Island where now you can send a letter all over the Dominion for three cents. It is true that the charge for the carriage of letters and newspapers may not be a tax. We are receiving value in the conveyance of our letters or newspapers for the amount that we have paid in stamps, but we must remember at the same time that if this change in the law results in the reduction of revenue, that deficiency must be made up by imposing a tax in some other way, and although the charge itself is not a direct tax, still it will result in imposing a direct tax on the people to make up the deficiency. I am not going to oppose the passage of the bill. The government consider it is in the interest of the country to reduce the postage in this way, and certainly we should approve of it; but I think it will be only the means of imposing a greater tax on the people in some other form in order to make up for the deficiency that will be caused by this change of the law.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say, in reply to the hon. gentleman, that in 1868, the last year the five cent postage was in force, the number of letters was eighteen millions. In 1861 it was 21,920,000—that is, an increase of four million letters in a single year. Last year it was 123 millions, six times as great as in 1868. In the United States the increase which followed the reduction of postage was the same. When it was decreased from five to three cents there was a loss of revenue of $800,000 the first year, but the next year it was more than made up, and the revenue increased at the rate of about five millions a year under the reduced postage; and there was exactly the same experience again there when the postage was reduced from three to two cents, and I have no doubt whatever it will be the same here. We expect a loss of $650,000 of revenue the first year, but we expect that that will be far more than made up within the three years.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Have you any estimate of the proportion of the free carriage of letters? I suppose that has increased considerably on account of departmental business?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is largely increased, no doubt; but I could not tell my hon. friend just what number of letters are sent out from the various departments.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—On principle I can very easily understand that it is perfectly legitimate to charge for everything that is done. If these railway companies or the government are obliged to carry an immense quantity of literature for the newspaper people, it is but right that a revenue should be obtained in some way from some party; but are you going to put this charge upon the proprietors of the newspapers of this country, whom we all know as a general thing do not make a great deal of money out of newspapers, particularly as we find these country papers are given at the rate of one dollar a year? I have not heard that there has been any great complaint about a three cent postage. The people of this country, as you all know, particularly the commercial class, do a great deal of business through the Post Office Department. I do not know what the percentage is, but it must be very large as contrasted with the amount received from the general outlying public. The farmer in the distant parts sends a letter probably not more than once or twice a year, and he naturally expects that he should obtain something for his share towards the general expenses of conveying the mails carried by the different routes of steamboats, railways and stages. It is very different at the present time, because we all know these railways perform this service at a stipulated price per mile, and therefore it makes no difference, as far as the government are concerned, whether your carry four train loads or one train load. You merely pay a certain mileage. Therefore I look upon this as being in the past rather an advantage to the population that do not use the mails to the same extent that the commercial men of this country do, and who are better able to pay the postage than the ordinary man in the country. I do not believe it is going to result in what the Minister of Justice says. I do not believe that the one cent reduction will greatly increase correspondence, and it may have the effect of preventing the publication of a great many newspapers in the country. And why should you discriminate in favour of a paper within a radius of twenty miles as contrasted with the papers published in the cities of the Dominion? I would rather see the discrimination in favour of the papers published in the large cities, where they give you a great deal of information. For instance, in this city I actually obtain more information of what is going on in this very city from the papers published in Montreal and Toronto than I do from our own papers. Therefore, I should like to give any preference, if preference is to be given at all, to these papers of large circulation situated in the large centres of the country; instead of that you give this preference within a radius of twenty miles to country weeklies. It costs just as much to transport a paper twenty miles as it does to carry it one hundred or a thousand miles. The amount of mail carried for the departments of the government is very large indeed, and the mere statement of the number of letters carried gives no indication that there has been a corresponding increase in the revenue. I would like to see statements of the actual amount of dollars and cents for the service.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend has that in the Postmaster General's report.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I have not seen that lately. I know this country differs greatly from other countries. You have to pay a great deal for land transportation, but not as great as in former days; but it is intended to accommodate the outlying districts as much as possible. If you think this two cent rate is to be a great benefit to a substantial portion of the community, we cannot find fault. But if it is to be at the expense of another portion of the community that can ill afford it, it should not be done. I should much rather keep the newspapers as they are at present, and retain the three cent postage if necessary, and economize in every way possible in the maintenance and support of the government. The government have been bringing up the expenses every year; whether that has been an advantage or not I do not know. They have changed the whole system; they have reorganized and made new offices for the purpose of the management of the different railway and mail clerks. Whether that has been an advantage or not I do not know. At the time I had great doubts about it, and I am told that what I said at that time has been pretty nearly verified by the results of the changes made on those occasions. I suppose this idea was started for the purpose of showing that the late administration have been extravagant in their management of the Post Office Department. That may or may not be true; but under the different circumstances of the case, with all the extra facilities it is far easier to manage the Post Office Department, now than it was years ago. They also have to consider the amount of business that is transacted through commercial circles through the medium of the telegraph and telephone systems. All that has to be taken into consideration, and that is increasing from day to day, and men find it easier to send a telegram than to write a letter, and the more that increases the more you reduce the revenue of the post office. Another evil, and I think a very great evil, is in connection with the express companies. The express companies of this country monopolize a great deal of the business that ought to belong to the Post Office Department. They transmit money orders and do all sort of things which legitimately belongs to the Post Office Department, and if the Post Office Department originally had put into operation some scheme years ago for the purpose of controlling the entire business of the country in postal matters and depriving those companies of the monopolies they enjoy, they would have increased the revenue without doing any damage to the community. The same way with telegraph companies. Had the government done the proper thing both telegraph and express systems would have been under the management of the post office instead of being private concerns as they are at present. It is a matter that requires a great deal of consideration, but unfortunately all these matters are brought down to us near the end of the session. This matter has been in the other House for weeks and they never sent it down till the end of the session when members are anxious to get away and they will be likely to pass it without giving it that due consideration that it requires. I for one am not prepared to suffer in that direction any longer. We ought not to put up with it any longer and if I had my way I would refuse to consider any question of such vital importance unless we were given time to consider whether the measure proposed was beneficial or not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Minister of Justice told us that 123 millions was the number of letters last year. That would realize a revenue of $3,690,000. One-third of that ($1,230,000) would be the loss to the revenue the first year, provided there was no increase; therefore there must be a large increase to make that up; and it is questionable whether you can calculate a proportionate increase with a population of only five millions as compared with a large population like Great Britain and the United States.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That would include all the government and departmental letters.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Well, that is the calculation based on what the Minister of Justice gave as the number of letters. I should like to ask what this section 3 means, beginning say at the twelfth line of the second page:

> a diameter not exceeding forty miles, and if their publication is of no greater frequency than once a week, they shall be transmitted free of postage within one or other of such areas to be selected by the publisher in accordance with the regulations in that behalf to be established.

Take a newspaper in Cornwall or the city of Kingston. The twenty miles would run over to the United States, or pretty nearly so, and there would be no benefit. It would be only twenty miles three ways.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is not this intended to give the Postmaster General power to make regulations to extend in other directions?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—However, it is so much the better for country newspapers.

On clause 2, subsection (b).

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Take the Globe and the Mail and Empire, for instance, this clause would compel them, if they have sixteen pages, to print on the top of each page the full title, date of publication, and so on, and also on engravings purporting to be supplements. It compels them to put that distinctive mark on every page and every supplement no matter what it would be, I do not suppose that is the intention.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think it is.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Supposing we send a paper gratuitously, does that come within the meaning of a bona fide subscriber?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If you have a thousand subscribers within twenty miles, you can send them free. If there are a dozen newspaper exchanges in that radius, you have to pay, because they are not subscribers, or if you send your papers to a friend you have to pay the postage.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Or to a newsdealer.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If you want to send a paper to your friends, your aunt, your cousin, or your sweetheart, as they are not bona fide subscribers, you have to pay postage?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It shows that the framer of this bill did not know what he was doing.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 4.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This clause is providing for dead letter offices in different places.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Victoria and Halifax.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—We should have an office in Charlottetown. We have nothing to do with Halifax. The dead letters in Charlottetown would have to come to Ottawa. It is under an independent department. Halifax has no control whatever over Charlottetown in regard to postal matters, and I do not see why, if there is to be a dead letter office in each of the provinces, we should not have one in Charlottetown.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is none in St. John. Halifax is the place for the maritime provinces, Toronto for Ontario, Montreal for Quebec, Winnipeg for Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and Victoria for British Columbia.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. DEVER, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

LOAN COMPANIES BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the third reading of bill (Q) "An Act respecting Loan Companies." He said: We allowed this bill to stand. I telegraphed the parties who said they wished to be heard before the third reading, to find out whether they still wished to appear before the committee, and I received no answer, and, as the bill has to go to the other House, I would suggest that we take the third reading now. I understand the hon. gentleman for York has made inquiry and that there is no objection.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If there are any parties who wish to be heard, we might let it stand till next session.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There are a great many people who are very strongly in favour of the bill, and their interests are not in opposition to those of the community, or of any particular class.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I withdraw my opposition.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I spoke to Hon. Mr. Ogilvie after his return from Montreal, and he told me he was perfectly satisfied that the bill should pass. There were only two companies that I know of that said anything in reference to the bill or made any communication. One is the Huron and Erie, and I forget the other. I saw the solicitor of the company since the House rose this afternoon, and he told me that he was perfectly satisfied, and he wanted to add some additional clause to the bill, but the parties had not informed him what they desired with regard to it.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Monday, 6th June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'Clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (106) "An Act respecting the Saskatchewan Railway and Mining Company."—(Hon. Mr. Lougheed.)

Bill (137) "An Act respecting the International Radial Railway Company."—(Hon. Mr. Clemow.)

Bill (149) "An Act to authorize certain contracts with Steamship Companies for Cold Storage Accommodation."—(Hon. Mr. Mills.)

Bill (158) "An Act respecting the London and Lake Huron Railway Company."—(Hon. Sir John Carling.)

Bill (125) "An Act to incorporate the Ottawa Interprovincial Bridge Company."—(Hon. Mr. Clemow.)

TRAVELLING EXPENSES OF MINISTERS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before the Senate, a statement of the cost of the voyages undertaken in 1897 by the Honourable the Prime Minister and by the Honourable the Solicitor General, to Europe, to the United States or elsewhere, together with the travelling expenses of their private secretaries or of any other persons composing their following.

The motion was agreed to.

DELAYED RETURNS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to ask the Secretary of State if he has brought down those papers relating to the Soulanges Canal?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not been able to obtain them. I sent the deputy minister over to-day and ascertained that they were being copied. They were much longer than my hon. friend supposed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does the hon. gentleman expect them to-morrow?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot say—I can make no promises for the department.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should like to have some reasonable certainty of their being brought down before the House prorogues. I asked for them four weeks ago.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; it was on the 17th May the request was sent over to the department, and I have sent special messengers ever since.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The copying of them would not take longer than four or five hours.

A PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I rise to move that this House do now adjourn. I make this motion to obtain an opportunity of meeting the very offensive statement made on the floor of this House on Friday last by the hon. senior member from Halifax. I make the motion in order to occupy safer ground and bring myself within the rules of the House in the remarks I intend to offer on the present occasion. The hon. gentleman, without any provocation on my part—I am in the judgment of the House when I say it—stated in a tone, characterized by the most venomous feeling, that he would not take me for a model, implying by that declaration that there was or must be something either in my public career or in my character to justify such an observation. Perhaps no man in public life in the early days of my political career, submitted to so much abuse and misrepresentation without uttering a word of defence than I did, but I survived it all. The hon. gentleman, I know entertains no kindly feeling towards me as he has shown on many occasions in the past; but I never sought his friendship or feared his enmity. With those who have sat with me in this House for the last twenty or thirty years and who possess some knowledge of my political career, I could afford to allow the innuendo of the hon. member for Halifax to pass without comment. But a large number of gentlemen now in this House are comparative strangers to me, a large number of gentlemen to whom my public career is unknown, and who hearing such an innuendo as that made by the hon. member from Halifax—from which only one inference can be drawn—are likely to believe that there must be something within his knowledge to justify it, especially as the hon. senator comes from the same province as myself. I say in the first place, hon. gentlemen, it is unfair by insinuation or innuendo to attack the character or the standing of either a public man or a private citizen That method of attack has been truly called the weapon of a coward, who raises his hand to strike, but has not courage to give the blow. I fear no opponent who openly makes a charge against either my public conduct or my character as an honourable man, in any arena where I can get fair play, and I have never failed to meet and refute such attacks when made to my face openly and in a manly way. The conduct of the hon. gentleman has been characterized, as I have said, on many occasions since he has been a member of this Senate, by personal hostility towards me, and the very first act in this House that brought him into notoriety here, was to charge me on the floor of this chamber with having been influenced corruptly in the legislature of Nova Scotia in my support of the Act of Confederation. I replied to him at the time, and I think I replied to the satisfaction of the House; but on the following day a malicious and libellous paragraph appeared in the Free Press of this city, the organ of the then and present government, relating to that incident, and I never had and I have not now the slightest doubt who inspired and wrote that paragraph. As soon as the Free Press could reach the province of Nova Scotia, that malicious and libellous paragraph was copied into the organ of the anti-union party, the Liberal party so called in Nova Scotia—the Morning Chronicle, a paper to which the hon. member from Halifax is known to be a frequent contributor. I have never doubted who was responsible for its appearance in the Chronicle. When that article appeared I said to my friends: there is a serious charge made against me and against my honour as a public man, made on the floor of parliament, and reiterated in the organs of the political party to which I am opposed, throughout the Dominion. My duty is clear. I have submitted to much misrepresentation and to much abuse in days gone by on the party papers of my political opponents; now I shall give these gentlemen a chance of testing the truth of these charges in a court of justice. I immediately entered an action in the supreme court of Nova Scotia against the Morning Chronicle. My counsel on that occasion were the late Sir John Thompson and Mr. Rigby (afterwards Judge Rigby), two of the most distinguished men at the bar of Nova Scotia. The defendant was represented in the cause by the Hon. Otto Weeks, one of the ablest counsel of his time in that province, and by Mr. Motton, Q.C., also a lawyer of great ability. The cause in due course came on for trial, and never did a man walk out of court with his character more triumphantly vindicated than I did on that occasion, as I will show you by the record. In opening the case, Mr. Rigby is reported to have used this language as published in the newspapers of that day:

> The plaintiff's counsel in opening the case, went fully into the history of the union agitation in Nova Scotia, and called to mind the bitterness that marked the discussion of that question, both on the public platform and in the press, before and after the passage of the Union Act. The plaintiff had always been favourable to the principle of confederation, but was strongly opposed to the Quebec scheme, especially in its financial arrangements. When that scheme was promulgated in 1864, he was one of the first to oppose it, while declaring himself in favour of union on fair terms. Subsequently, in 1866, the plaintiff, in his place in the legislative assembly, proposed that the Quebec scheme be abandoned by its friends, and that the whole question of confederation be submitted to a new conference to meet in London, where terms of union should be agreed to under the sanction of the Imperial Government. The plaintiff's proposition met the views of a majority of the provincial legislature, and the union was thus accomplished. He therefore became the object of the most violent attacks of the enemies of union, at public meetings and in the press. When the plaintiff was afterwards appointed to the Senate his opponents said his appointment was the price of his support of the union. The Morning Chronicle, which was the leading organ in the province of the Anti-Union party, as well as other hostile journals, were allowed to reiterate this charge with impunity during the excitement of those days. During that excitement the plaintiff felt that every allowance should be made by him as a public man for the violence of his assailants, as there were some grounds for irritation, and he believed, when the heated passions of the struggle had subsided, public opinion would not deal with him unjustly. He therefore brought none of his maligners before a court of justice. But as the libel had been republished by the Chronicle, in a most offensive form, ten years after the occurrence of the events to which it referred, the plaintiff considered it his duty to himself and the leaders of the union cause in Nova Scotia, to demand a public investigation before this court, in the capital of the province, of the charges therein made against him. The plaintiff's object was not to obtain damages against the defendant, but to put such sworn evidence before the country, relating to his appointment to the Senate, as would vindicate his reputation—refute the accusations of his slanderers, and the general charges of corruption that had been so often alleged in connection with the passage of the Act of Union in Nova Scotia. It was the plaintiff's intention to place on the witness stand the leading public men of the province who were concerned in the carrying of the union, and every opportunity would thus be given to elicit the truth from those best able to give it.

When I brought that suit some of my friends told me I was acting injudiciously —that no matter how completely I could justify my conduct, it would be impossible to get a jury, on a political question of that kind, to give a unanimous verdict: but my answer was that if I did not get a verdict from the jury, I would place such an array of facts before them and the public as would vindicate my conduct, and that I was confident of my ability to do so. But I got more than a verdict. The case is one of the remarkable trials on record and the report of it can be found in the library. Sir Charles Tupper was the first witness to go on the stand, and he was examined closely on his connection and my connection with the union cause. I then took the stand and was two days under the most severe cross-examination of able counsel. At the close of the third day Mr. Weeks, the counsel of the defendant, in arguing a point of law with the court made a declaration which was a more complimentary exoneration of me than if I had got half a dozen verdicts of a jury, because the verdict of a jury might be said to be corrupt, or partisan or a verdict obtained by improper means, but Mr. Weeks publicly in open court, withdrew every imputation against me and said that any man who should afterwards make such charges as the pleadings set forth would deserve to be mulcted in $10,000, the damages stated in the writ. Here are the exact words of Mr. Weeks on the third day of the trial :

He reminded the court that there was no plea of justification on the record. The defendant had not ventured to say that the alleged libel is true. He did not say in his pleadings that Mr. Miller was bought or bribed to support the union. Had he said so, in the face of the evidence of Sir Charles Tupper, and the plaintiff, $10,000 would not be a cent too much damages to give against the defendant, and he believed if a plea of justification had been pleaded any jury empanelled in this city would give such a verdict. But no such plea had been set up, even before the evidence of Sir Charles Tupper and the plaintiff had been publicly given in this court. In the face of that evidence (Mr. Weeks said) the plaintiff was bound to bring this suit, and he should have brought it long ago. Mr. Miller had vindicated his character by evidence on Your Lordship's minutes, which we cannot impeach, but he should have done so sooner. He should not have allowed similar charges to be made against him for years, without giving the explanations that have been given in this trial. It is well for Mr. Miller that this public examination has been made, for the man who will hereafter assail him as he has been assailed in the past would deserve to be punished by a jury. But the defendant did not know the facts of the case until this trial, and he believed the plaintiff's action, unexplained, justified the criticism of the Chronicle. That is what the defendant now intended to show: that his criticism was not malicious. In fact, the defendant was not at all in the province when the alleged libel was published.

Half a dozen verdicts of a jury would not have enabled me to go so triumphantly out of court after an examination and cross-examination on all those charges made against me in connection with my action on the question of confederation in my native province. The remarks of Mr. Weeks were published in the Conservative paper of next morning, and when the court met the defendant's leading counsel rose before the proceedings were resumed and acknowledged their correctness and said addressing the court :

On consultation with Mr. Motton, who is associated with me in this case, and with the defendant, I beg to call Your Lordship's attention to the report of my remarks made in the course of this case yesterday, as published in the Herald of this morning, and ask what more the plaintiff can desire if his object, as has been stated, is not pecuniary damages. I desire now to state that my client will undertake to publish the report, as it appears in the Herald, in the Chronicle, as an amicable settlement of the case, if this suit is not pressed further, in view of the evidence which Mr. Miller has, for the first time, given in this cause.

The defendant newspaper agreed to publish and accept the report of Mr. Weeks remarks as printed in the Halifax Herald, and they were published the following day in the Chronicle. I accepted the proposition, because I had instructed my counsel to say that I had not gone into court for damages, but to vindicate my reputation That report was accordingly inserted with suitable explanations the next day in the Halifax Chronicle and was looked upon as a complete triumph of my case ; so much so that from that day to this the Chronicle has never repeated those charges, although occasionally it contains some bitter and scurrilous paragraphs against me in connection with my public conduct, and I generally divine the source from which they emanate.

Such, I say, was the abject submission and retraction of the Halifax Chronicle, perhaps the vilest and most dishonest sheet published in Canada, after years of slander, scurrility, defamation and misrepresentation of my action as a public man.

But I can also show that the opinion in which I have had the good fortune to be held by the most eminent men in this country from time to time is contradictory to the inference that may be drawn from the remarks of the hon. member from Halifax. I can go to his own party and to the notable instance of two of the greatest men that party ever produced, Alexander Mackenzie and Edward Blake, who paid the tribute to my character as an upright and honourable man of offering me a judgeship, and I know my enemies had their ear, and could tell their leaders everything that could be said about me, and they would not have made me that offer if there was anything which should prevent them from doing so. This letter from Mr. Mackenzie speaks for itself :

OFFICE OF THE MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS,
OTTAWA, 24th June, 1876.

MY DEAR SIR,—We expect within a few days to make the several appointments to the county courts in Nova Scotia, as the local government desire to issue the proclamation provided for by their statute.

I write to request you to allow me to submit your name to His Excellency for the Cape Breton district.

Mr. Blake left for England three weeks ago, or he would have communicated with you on the subject. I know, however, that your nomination will be entirely satisfactory to him, and I have every reason to believe, that it will give general satisfaction in the district and in the province.

I will feel greatly obliged by receiving your early answer, and remain,

My dear sir,
Yours faithfully,
A. MACKENZIE.

HON. WM. MILLER,
Arichat, N. S.

I presume the premier of that day had ample means of ascertaining whether he was right when he wrote that letter, that my appointment would have been satisfactory in my district and in my province and, therefore, if I were open to such an insinuation as the hon. gentleman has made against me, I would not have received that offer, in such flattering terms.

With regard to judgeships, I may say I stood in this position with my own political friends. The Conservative party returned to power in 1878 and in 1879 there were two vacancies on the Queen's Bench of British Columbia. There were also two vacancies on the Queen's Bench of Manitoba and one expected vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia. The Hon. James Macdonald, now Chief Justice of the latter province, was then Minister of Justice. I was told I could take my choice of the three provinces. I doubt if such an offer has ever been made to any other man in this country. In Manitoba I was given to understand that the succession to the chief justiceship was within my reach, because Chief Justice Wood was then in failing health. I dropped the hint to the Minister of Justice that I did not know but Manitoba was the best selection I could make. I said nothing more. I was about starting for my home, when I arrived in Cape Breton, I got several telegrams from Sir John Macdonald desiring to know whether I would go to Manitoba or not. I declined. Sir John, whatever else may have been said against him, was known as a man particular in his recommendations to the bench, and that he often boasted, and his enemies always admitted, that he never was known to have recommended any one whom he thought unworthy of the position. Such evidences of confidence and esteem from such men as Alexander Mackenzie and Edward Blake and Sir John Macdonald ought to be a sufficient answer to any insinuation which any man could make against me here or elsewhere, as the hon. member for Halifax has done on more than one occasion. But I also enjoyed the confidence and esteem of the leader of the party in this House to which I belonged, in as full a measure as I could desire, as I can show. Sir Alexander Campbell was one of my warmest friends; he had few more confidential associates in this body than myself. Perhaps he consulted no one more than myself in matters of public business, and I enjoyed his confidence and friendship unremittingly at all times. When he was stricken down with sickness I received the following note from Sir John Macdonald :

EARNSCLIFFE, OTTAWA, 26th April, 1886.

MY DEAR MILLER,—Our poor friend Campbell has sent me word that it will be impossible for him to be in the Senate during the session, and he suggests that I should ask you as his friend to take charge of the government business in his absence.

We shall be exceedingly obliged to you if you will undertake the task, although we know it is one that will give you a great deal of trouble.

Believe me, yours sincerely,
JOHN A. MACDONALD.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate.

As a further instance of the friendship and confidence which existed between that distinguished leader of the House and myself before Sir Alexander left his sick room to go to Europe, he sent this letter to me :

OTTAWA, 22nd May, 1886.

MY DEAR MILLER,—I am intending to leave on Monday to get to Quebec by easy stages, and to sail from there on Thursday. * * * *

I write to say good-bye, and to send you my best wishes.

I have been hearing from time to time of the Senate, and am much gratified to learn of the able and firm manner in which you have presided over the debates and proceedings in that House. You have commanded universal respect, and no one is more delighted to hear it than I am.

Trusting that when we next meet, I will be in health and strength again.

Believe me, yours sincerely,

A. CAMPBELL.

To the Hon. WM. MILLER,
Speaker of the Senate.

When I left the Chair of the Senate Sir John Macdonald sent me the following note :

EARNSCLIFFE, OTTAWA, April 2, 1887.

MY DEAR MILLER,—The government have selected our friend Plumb to be the Speaker of the Senate for the next parliament, and Ouimet to be Kirkpatrick's successor. The absence of most of my colleagues owing to snow-blocks and other causes has prevented the formal appointment in an official shape.

Let me thank you on behalf of the administration for your valuable services as Speaker during the last parliament, and assure you, that if we can forward your personal interests in any way, we shall only be too glad to embrace the opportunity.

Believe me, faithfully yours,

JOHN A. MACDONALD.

The Hon. WM. MILLER.

I may add that the very last official act of the great Conservative leader was, on the day before he was stricken with his fatal illness—to approve of my appointment as a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

I think it is very evident from all these facts, that Sir Alexander Campbell, who had long experience of me in this House, as well as the other great men I have mentioned, cherished a very different idea of my character to that which the hon. gentleman from Halifax appears to entertain.

But I can go further. When that eminent man Sir John Thompson was called upon to form a government, he asked my advice on certain points relating to the Senate. I insisted that there should be three members in the Cabinet in this House—one from Quebec, one from Ontario and one from any one of the smaller provinces, either east or west, as the circumstances might dictate. I was free to urge this on him because I was not in a position myself to expect any consideration, as the Nova Scotia contingent was full. Sir John Thompson wrote me on the 12th of January, 1893, after he had formed his government, and I think his letter shows his confidence and friendships in an unmistakable manner :

OFFICE OF THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE,
OTTAWA, 12th January, 1893.

MY DEAR SENATOR,—I read with great interest your last letter and beg to thank you for the care with which you discussed the question of reconstruction—from the point of view of the Senate.

I have been greatly impressed by what you have thus stated, and by what you have said on the same subject on former occasions. What has been done towards meeting the reproach of neglect of the Senate seemed all that was practicable at the time of the reconstruction.

The matter which remains undisposed of, and, seemingly, but not really, unconsidered, is your own position and the claims which that position and your past great services establish. Far from being indifferent about this, I feel very deeply about it, and have conferred about it with my colleagues. I am conscious that you regard my coming here and remaining here as having interfered with your advancement. If that be so I have been an unwitting obstacle. I came most reluctantly and after often repeated assurances that I would not interfere with the prospects of any one else in public life. My staying here has not been the result of my own choice, or of my own interest. Far from it. I sincerely hope that in time I may be able to remove this feeling from your mind—or rather to remove the cause—which will be better.

I thank you very heartily for your congratulations and good wishes, and hope that we shall, together, be able to do much for our party and country and that you will have no reason to regret the sacrifices and trials of the past.

Wishing you a very happy New Year, and hoping to meet you soon to talk over these and other matters.

I remain, dear Senator,
Sincerely yours,
JNO. S. D. THOMPSON.

That statesman had in view for me the highest honours he could possibly bestow, but before he could put them into realization he met his sudden death. I know I could have had a judgeship from him had I been so disposed. I must have enjoyed his respect and confidence, if the above letter contains a true expression of his sentiments, and if Sir John Thompson was not an arrant hypocrite. The last time I met him was at Antigonish, by appointment before his last trip to Europe. He then said to me, in the course of conversation, "I hope to be in a position, when Mr. Daly's term expires, to offer you the governorship," meaning the lieutenant governorship of Nova Scotia. I replied, "Sir John, the position would not suit me, and I do not think I would accept it." He observed, "Well, you will have plenty of time to consider it." This was the highest position he had in his power to give and he assured me, on that occasion, without any suggestion on my part, he would offer it to me, when a vacancy occurred, for I have this to say, that during the thirty-five years of my public life I have never sought an office of emolument, and never would lessen my independence by asking any favour of that description from any government or any minister. When the governorship of Nova Scotia became vacant, a delegation of members of the House of Commons, representing every county in Cape Breton, with which island my public life has been connected, waited upon the then premier —Sir Mackenzie Bowell, and strongly urged my claims to the governorship. They went without my authority and without my instigation, but I fully appreciated their kindness. The following day I met Sir Mackenzie Bowell, and knowing what had happened the day before, I broached the subject, and told him what had taken place between Sir John Thompson and myself in reference to the lieutenant governorship, and that my mind was not changed, that I did not want the office, that it would not suit me and that I would not accept it. I think, after showing as I have done by evidence that cannot be controverted, that I have enjoyed the confidence and friendship of many of the best men this country has produced since confederation and I could add many more great names, I can afford to allow individuals like the hon. member from Halifax to attack me by innuendo wherever I am known, confident that their assaults will do more injury to themselves than they can possibly do to me.

I never fear open assaults on my conduct, my motives or my character, for when I do not consider them beneath my notice, I can always have the privilege of reply, and when I notice them I have little difficulty in dealing with my slanderers. But what I do fear, and what I have often felt, is the virus of the serpent-tongue of secret slander—the assassin's stab in the dark—against which no man can defend himself.

I hope the Senate will forgive me for obtruding this personal subject on its attention, on account of the provocation that justified it; but I have presumed to do so from the recollection of the indulgence and consideration I have invariably received from the great majority of hon. members in this chamber, for which I am always duly grateful. My constant desire is to stand well with my colleagues, and in this respect I have little ground of complaint. I have spent the best years of my life as a member of this Senate, and as a member of it I expect to die. I will allow no man to asperse my reputation here, either by insinuation or otherwise, with impunity. It is generally the case that when a public man is doing his duty most fearlessly and faithfully, he is the most violently attacked by the bad elements with which he comes into collision; and this happens to be precisely my case at the present time.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The House will perhaps permit me to say a very few words after the speech of the hon. gentleman from Richmond. I may say to that hon. gentleman and to the House that the speech appears to be based altogether upon a misapprehension of the facts. I did not, in the little difference which the hon. gentleman and I had on Friday, use the language which the hon. gentleman understood me to have used. It will be remembered that I called attention on that occasion to the fact that an amendment which the hon. gentleman said he proposed to move did not come next in order, and that the House had decided that the amendments to the Franchise Bill should be taken up seriatim. I spoke in a very quiet way, and said I thought that the hon. gentleman had overlooked the fact that the House had so decided. That was my impression. I was not quite sure that the hon. gentleman had been present when the Minister of Justice moved that the amendments be taken up seriatim, and thinking that he might have been absent that I said I thought perhaps the hon. gentleman was ignorant of the fact. The hon. gentleman said something, interrupting me when I was speaking, about want of courtesy on my part, and I then said that I did not propose to take that hon. gontleman as a model of courtesy—that he was the last man in the House whom I would take as a model of courtesy; I did not say a model in any other way. I do not care to go into past history, but I must say, looked at from my own standpoint, I have not as a rule received any excess of courtesy from the hon. gentleman, either in the House or on committees. Then the hon. gentleman spoke as though I entertained unkindly feelings towards him. The hon. gentleman is mistaken; I have no unkind feelings towards him whatever. Some hon. gentlemen with whom I have talked about him will bear me out in saying that the feeling I have expressed towards him was not unkindly at all. I made, and wished to make, no charge against the hon. gentleman the other day, and as I had no charge to make I could not be guilty of cowardice in not making openly a charge which I had no desire to insinuate. I do not suppose this House is very much interested in the history, some of it very ancient indeed, to which the hon. gentleman has referred. What took place over twenty-one years ago in a sort of lively exchange of courtesies between the hon. gentleman and myself hardly interests the House to-day; but I think it only fair to myself to say, that, in respect to other things, the hon. gentleman labours under a misapprehension as to the paragraph which appeared in the Free Press. I had nothing to do with the paragraph. I did not write it nor inspire it, and although I have occasionally written for the Chronicle, I had nothing to do with the article on which he based his libel suit. The hon. gentleman went on to say that I had persistently manifested a bitter and hostile spirit towards him, not only in the House but on committees. I am not aware of it. The hon. gentleman is a man of very strong will and very strong views and we have often differed in opinion both in the House and on committees; but I certainly have never sought those differences, and as a rule, where I have spoken with anything like feeling, it has been more or less in self defence. This is all that I propose to say. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in thinking that certain paragraphs which appear occasionally in Liberal newspapers are inspired by me. I meet the hon. gentleman here, and we have our differences on the floor of the House and in committee, as is perfectly natural and reasonable, and I have never gone to the newspapers or to any other outside medium to express my feelings with respect to him. I may, on the present occasion, have acted the part of a friend to him, as I have given him an opportunity of producing certificates as to his past history which must be very gratifying to himself and his friends, and which will now be embalmed in the columns of the Senate debates.

THE FRANCHISE BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day being called:

Third Reading of (Bill 16) "An Act to repeal the Electoral Franchise Act, and to further amend the Dominion Elections Act," as amended.

Hon. Mr. MILLS said: I promised my hon. friend opposite to move an amendment to this bill before it left this House, and instead of now moving that the bill be read the third time, I move that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole with a view of adopting the following as an additional clause:

It shall be lawful for the Governor in Council to prepare, as schedules to this Act, the oaths in the form required to be taken by voters at an election held under the authority of this Act.

I think that will meet the views of my hon. friend.

The motion was agreed to, and the House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Before that amendment is adopted, I wish to point out that some of those oaths are provided for by provincial law, and it might be well to limit the amendment to such oaths as are not provided for.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is for the very purpose of meeting that. The words in section 20, for instance are:

Before receiving his ballot paper, take such oath of qualifications as by the law of the province he may in the like case at a provincial election be required to take, such changes being made in the form of oath as are necessary to make it applicable to the election.

Therefore it was to authorize the Governor in Council to make those changes in order that there may be no doubt.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to subsection 10, clause 10. It reads as follows:

So long as and whenever, for any reason, a certified copy of any list of voters as finally revised has not been transmitted to or received by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery pursuant to the provisions of this section, the original and legal list for Dominion elections shall be the same as that for provincial elections.

The objection I took was that, by collusion between the parties preparing the Dominion list and a candidate, say, on either side, the Dominion list might, after revision, be sent astray on its way to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and that officer might be obliged to fall back on the provincial lists, and the election would be held on them, though they might not have names on them which would be on the Dominion list. It may be said those could be put on. Perhaps they can, but there is another difficulty in a case of that kind—there might be cooking of the provincial list, and there might be names on it that should not be there. There ought to be means of striking such names off. I call the attention of the minister to it, in order that he may make a new clause, or to so amend it as to prevent the possibility of such an abuse as I have indicated. I do not intend to move against the clause myself. The only amendments I intended to move were the chief amendment and the consequential amendments which are incorporated in the bill. I did not intend to move against any other provision of the bill; my object in rising now is to point out to the Minister of Justice the objections I have to the clause, and leave with him the responsibility of either amending it or allowing it to stand, or striking it out, as he thinks proper. I think it is liable to these objections which I have mentioned and should be amended. I do not see why it is not stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN—The bill was referred to the committee to add a clause, I understood, and not to go into the bill generally.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL, from the committee, reported the bill with one amendment, which was concurred in.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the third reading of the bill, as amended.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON moved:

That the said bill be not now read a third time, but that the amendments made in Committee of the Whole, referring to the alteration of the provincial laws, be reconsidered.

He said: I should have worded the last clause in my notice, "the same being contrary to the government of the country." I think the point is worth considering before the bill goes down to the other House with amendments. I think myself that the bill is not on such lines as we should attempt to govern the country upon, that we should keep the constitutional powers of the national government and the constitutional powers of the various provincial governments as separate as we possibly can. The British North America Act has created a constitution which gives to this national government unlimited freedom in its governing power, where its own interest as a national government is concerned. On the other hand, it is a written constitution in so far as it draws a line between the powers of the provinces and the powers of the national government. The constitution of each province is perfect within its own bounds. It makes its own laws and we have no power to interfere with it. This Electoral Franchise Bill, I think, generally throughout its provisions ignores that principle, and to that extent it is a weak measure as compared with the Act that has just been repealed, in so far as it controls the franchise and the national representation of the people in the electoral franchise. I do not think it is wise for us, as a Senate, to acknowledge the principle of the bill, or to acknowledge the validity, so far as amending it upon the same lines. We are not as a Senate responsible for the electoral franchise. It is the business of the government to introduce it. It is connected with the representation of the Lower House. While we have a perfect right to discuss the principle of the bill and discuss it upon any lines that we think desirable. Still there are certain limits which we should not go beyond in the discussion of the measure. This amendment provides that we have to make an alteration which the government in the Lower House has declared it could not accept. The amendment goes so far as to provide for certain contingencies in the event of an appeal, and calls upon the provincial authorities to take certain steps in order to give effect to that appeal, such as the posting of notice, the advertising of the list of names of persons who are:

Through inadvertence or otherwise inserted in the voters' list who are not entitled to be voters and shall be made to the judge of the county court at any time within twenty days after the voters' list at first made up shall be filed with the officer who, under the law of the province, has the custody of the same, and notice of such appeal shall be given in form "C."

The amendment is entirely contrary to the principle that I am arguing, and that is that we have not the power to interfere with or to direct what a provincial government shall do in regard to our national legislation. That was brought up very forcibly in the Manitoba school law. We attempted to pass that Manitoba school law at one time, but we had to change the principle of that legislation on the very same ground that I am now arguing; that is, that this parliament had no right to dictate to the provincial governments what steps their officers should take in regard to the carrying out of the law that we sought to enact, I think that principle was acceded to generally by both sides of the House, and for that reason the School Act that we brought into existence at that time was engaged in order to provide for that contingency. The power of this parliament to take any steps they choose in regard to the carrying out of any law and utilizing the provincial lists or anything of that kind, is all right so long as we apply Dominion machinery and our own officers to the carrying of it out. But the very moment we employ provincial officers and direct them what they shall do or shall not do, then there is a weakness in the legislation, because the provincial governments that are hostile to the federal government in power, or take any hostile position of any kind or discription, may order their officials not to assist the Dominion government in executing the law. The point I am raising is not a contumacious point at all, or for the purpose of anything more than to bring forward this point in regard to this matter. The question arose in the Lower House when this very clause was under consideration which is similar to the amendment that the hon. gentleman from Richmond moved on Friday. It was Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper that raised the point and this is what he said :

I know of no case, for instance, where the courts intimated that we might take to ourselves the officers of the local legislatures and add to their duties in a singular particular. This opens up a very interesting question, and of course one too large to fully discuss at this stage and in committee. The question probably will, in some form or other, yet come before the courts in connection with this very subject, because if we can go this far and take advantage of the machinery of the local legislatures and add to the duties of the officers of these legislatures, which they have to carry out under local legislation, it seems to me that this question of provincial rights' is presented in an entirely new aspect, and it would be very difficult indeed for the autonomy of the local legislatures to be preserved. If in this roundabout way we can impose this duty upon officers paid salaries or fees, we can in the same way take complete charge of the whole machinery of any local legislature. I shall be glad to hear from the Solicitor General how it is that he thinks we can impose these duties upon these officers, in the first place, or how we can, by saying that neglect on the part of these local officers to do certain things for us can fairly be made a crime.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL—My own opinion is that the mere declaration on our part that this is a crime will not make it so. But after having conferred with some of the officers of the department who are of a contrary opinion I have come to the conclusion that it would be safer for me to defer to their opinion in a matter of this sort. This is not a new departure so far as the franchise law is concerned, because my hon. friend will remember that under the Franchise Act of 1885 we utilized the provincial machinery. Under section 15 it is provided that "the revising officer shall, as soon as possible after taking the oath of office obtain a certified copy or certified copies as the case may be of the last revised assessment roll or rolls," and so on.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is our officer.

Under the old Act we did provide machinery and we could appoint any one to act as our officer in carrying out our laws; but when we direct what provincial officers should do in regard to the matter, that seems to me to be quite a different position :

The SOLICITOR GENERAL—By section 16 it is enacted that the registrar shall cause "one copy of each list to be posted up in the office of the clerk or other corresponding officer of each municipal or parochial or other known territorial division." Under section 17 every sheriff, warden, clerk of the peace, treasurer, parish court commissioner or other officer to whom two copies of the said list are to be mailed shall forthwith after receiving them post one up in a conspicuous place in his office, and so on. Thus it will be seen that the Franchise Act imposes duties on the local officers.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER—Is there a penalty imposed for neglect? I do not think so.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL—I am not prepared to say further than to draw attention to section 40 which has just been handed to me by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser):

"Every officer or person who is by any law the custodian of any assessment roll or list of voters prepared under the laws of any province, or of any other list or document, or any duplicate or certified copy thereof, which, under the foregoing provisions of this Act, the revising officer is required to obtain and use for the purposes of revising any list of voters under this Act, shall furnish the same, or a certified copy or copies thereof to any revising officer who applies for the same, and as by him required; and every such officer or person who refuses or omits to furnish the same to such revising officer within a reasonable time, upon being paid or tendered the cost of preparing the same, according to the fees or rates allowed therefor by the laws in force in the province to which such assessment roll, list or document relates, is guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall be punished accordingly."

Then Mr. Clement in his work on the constitution, page 437 says :

"It is, of course open to the Dominion parliament to utilize existing provincial machinery, or to confer upon 'boards' or bodies of provincial creation powers and authorities in relation to the enforcement of Dominion laws, but, quoad the duties imposed by Dominion legislation, the members of the municipal bodies or 'boards' are not provincial officers."

I apprehend that that would cover what we are attempting to do even if we had not the precedent of the Franchise Act.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.—I think that the case of the Franchise Act stands upon the same footing, following the reading of the Solicitor General; but I do not recollect that the point was ever raised or discussed.

Mr. POWELL. This matter received a great deal of discussion, I may say to the Solicitor General, when the Manitoba Remedial Bill was passing through the House, and there was not an hon. gentleman on that side who did not hold a very strong opinion on the matter. The hon. gentleman from Charlottetown (Sir Louis Davies) expressed a very strong opinion that this parliament had no power whatever to impose obligations upon the Governor in Council in the province of Manitoba in relation to the school board. That opinion was also expressed very strongly by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). It was acquiesced in by Professor Weldon. It was assented to by the present leader of the House. It was acquiesced in by the present Minister of Justice. In fact, I do not know a legal gentleman who was opposed to the bill but expressed in the strongest terms—or assented to the strongest assertions of those who expressed opinions—the opinion that we have not the power to do it. However, I think it must be conceded that the Dominion of Canada has the power to seize upon any person it likes and require him to perform any duty it sees fit.

Those are the opinions of hon. gentlemen in the Lower House when that particular point was under discussion. They did not go into it any further. They did not raise the point for the purpose of defeating the bill, but they pointed out that weakness. I think hon. gentlemen must recognize that there is a weakness in the bill in that regard, and that the Senate in taking hold of it to amend it in the particular that the hon. gentleman for Richmond has taken hold of, assents to the validity and principle of the bill in so far as the attempt to change its character and to alter the conditions on which the different provinces make these lists and provides for the machinery for their local lists.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—What are the words to which you refer?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I will read from the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Richmond :

Such appeal may be, at the instance of any voter or person entitled to be a voter in the polling division, the voters' list for which is appealed from on all or any of the following grounds, viz.: that the names of voters are through inadvertence or otherwise omitted from voters' lists or wrongly stated therein, or that the names of persons are through inadvertence or otherwise inserted in the voters' list who are not entitled to be voters, and shall be made to the judge of the county court at any time within twenty days after the voters' list at first made up shall be filed with the officer who, under the law of the province, has the custody of the same, and notice of such appeal shall be given in form "C" in the schedule hereto annexed, by posting the same up in at least three public places within the polling division, and by publishing the same for at least ten days previously to such appeal in some newspaper published in the county, and circulating in the said polling division; and if no newspaper is published in the county, then in a newspaper published in the nearest county having a newspaper published therein, provided that in the case of an application to strike off names from the voters' list, such notice shall be mailed, duly registered, with postage prepaid, at least one week previous to such appeal, to the address of such person or persons, if known to the appellant. The judge shall hear the appeals on affidavits, or if requested by the appellant or by the person opposing the appeal on evidence viva voce under oath, and may make an order in writing directing that the name of such person as voter shall be struck from or added to said list, and in case of more than one appeal from the same voters' list, the judge shall embody in the one order the results of his adjudications in respect to all such appeals, and such order shall be filed with the officer who has the custody of the said voters' list, who shall in pursuance of said order, strike off from or enter upon said list the names of persons as voters, and such voters' list, so amended, shall be the voters' list for the polling division.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—That is the amendment?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Yes. This amendment called for the official action of one of the officials of the province—called on him to do certain things.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—Under the Dominion law?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Yes, under the Dominion law; but the question is this; he is not a Dominion officer but a provincial officer.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Neither, a judge of the county court; he is a provincial officer.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Yes, we could make him a Dominion officer by so enacting. Now I will quote from Clement's constitution, an authority which shall not be questioned :

Until the parliament of Canada otherwise provides, (i) all laws in force in the several provinces at the union relative to the following matters or any of them, namely,—the qualifications and disqualifications of persons to be elected or to sit or vote as members of the House of Assembly or Legislative Assembly in the several provinces, the voters at elections (ii) of such members, the oaths to be taken by members, the oaths to be taken by voters, the returning officers, their powers and duties, the proceedings at elections, the periods during which elections may be continued, the trial of controverted elections, (iii) and proceedings incident thereto, the vacating of seats of members, and the execution of new writs in case of seats vacated otherwise than by dissolution,—shall respectively apply to elections of members to serve in the House of Commons for the several provinces.

That is when the provinces were four in number, at the origin; we had no machinery created and we just took the provincial lists as they were, and they would remain that way till parliament otherwise provided. Parliament otherwise provided by the Election Act of 1885; and there they provided the Dominion machinery by which the franchise of Canada was nationalized as opposed to that principle of provincial representation. Since that day when the British North America Act was passed the country has grown to an enormous extent. That was for the provinces of Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces, except Prince Edward Island. Those four were the small part, and they had been accustomed to work in provincial lines, but now we are dealing with a country that extends from the Atlantic to the Pacific. We are governing a country of enormous extent, each province far removed from the others in all its operations over which this national government has no control in this provincial aspect, and it is a question how far it is wise for us to proceed on the lines of going back to the origin of the provincial list at the time when confederation was established, or to maintain the national franchise that we established in 1885. Now, this question came up in the United States, which is somewhat similarly situated in so far as theirs is a national government, and there are state governments. Formerly the state provided the franchise for the election of members to Congress, and the election of members to the Senate. It was all done on the state franchise, the state providing all the machinery. A climax came in the election where Tilden contested with Hayes the right to the position of President, and it was the weakness of their franchise at that time that did what I call a wrong to the people of the country, in so far as a great many people believed that Tilden was really the man. But they had to accept from the states whatever the states chose to send them. They had no power to change. If one state chose to send a corrupt voters' list, or a corrupt return, or anything of that kind, the national government had no power but to accept the ipse dixit of the various states. The same position is likely to arise in Canada in so far as controverted elections might be affected by it. It is impossible for us to tell what may arise, or what litigation may ensue from a question of this kind if the legislation proceeds in the way we are now proposing it shall go forward, and there is no provision which would prevent the provincial lists being altered. At the present moment I do not suppose there would be any great hitch in carrying out this legislation, as nearly all the provinces are of the same political complexion as the government that is now in power here, and they will no doubt assist the present government to carry out this law; but we cannot provide for that position for all time. Supposing one, two or three provinces should be in antagonism to the government that is in power in the parliament of Canada, then we are brought face to face with what may present itself as a difficulty. Now, is it wise in this Senate to give its assent to the principle or the validity of a measure such as this, by attempting to amend it on lines which I am pointing out to you are irregular, an amendment which was taken exception to in the House of Commons, and about which the Solicitor General himself was not very clear. In the discussion of the Manitoba school question the Minister of Justice took exactly the same ground that I am taking on this bill. I say, with regard to the School Act or this bill, or any other measure which we chose to pass, we can take provincial officials and make them Dominion officials and provide for the discharge of their duty and apply any machinery we like for carrying out our own laws, but we cannot make use of provincial laws for doing it. That is the difference between the old Franchise Act and this bill. The old Franchise Act was weak in many particulars, and expensive, and there were just grounds for the agitation to remodel it, but to depart from a national franchise and adopt the provincial laws, is a retrograde step which will have to be retraced some day. It is well in any legislation we may enact to keep the national perfectly distinct from the provincial power and assert the right to do what we consider best for the Dominion as a whole and not accept legislation which may be good for the provinces and not good for the Dominion as a whole. It is with a view of bringing these facts before the House that I make this motion. I am not sufficient of a lawyer to declare that it is ultra vires, but I say that it is not in harmony with the constitutional principles which govern Canada. There is another view also to be taken of it, and that is the question of whether it is wise for this Senate to stop the whole bill. That is a matter that is worthy of consideration. It is quite proper for us to say we are opposed to the principle of the bill, but to knock the bill out by an amendment which, if what the government says is true, they reject as taking the life out of the measure, I am inclined to think is not a wise step for us to take. We ought not to destroy the bill by a side issue of this kind. For these reasons I have this amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In order to get the motion before the House I second it.

The SPEAKER—There is no resolution; there is no result to the motion.

Hon. Mr. MASSON—We can only go into committee to deal with a specific clause. We cannot go back to committee to reconsider the principle of the bill. You cannot give us a general proposition and let us go back to committee to deal with it.

The SPEAKER—The motion is lost on a division.

Hon. Mr. MASSON—But His Honour the Speaker has said there was no motion, and therefore it cannot be lost on a division.

Several hon. MEMBERS—Withdraw!

The SPEAKER—Is it the pleasure of the House to allow the hon. gentleman to withdraw his motion?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—If the House does not desire to discuss the subject, I am prepared to withdraw my motion.

The motion was withdrawn.

The bill was then read the third time and passed on a division.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (81) "An Act respecting the Montreal and Southern Counties Railway Company, as amended."—(Hon. Mr. Bernier.)

Bill (130) "An Act further to amend the Dominion Lands Act."—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (110) "An Act further to amend the Post Office Act."—(Hon. Mr. Mills.)

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS' BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (142) "An Act to authorize the Quebec Harbour Commissioners to borrow money." He said: The bill provides for the borrowing of money to the amount of $350,000—and that the corporation may issue debentures for the sum so borrowed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand that the Dominion government guarantees the interest on the bonds? If it does, does it not take priority over the amounts which have been already guaranteed, and if not, is it an additional sum for the completion of the docks, or harbour improvements? How much in arrears are the harbour commissioners of Quebec to the government now, for moneys already advanced or guaranteed? Could the hon. gentleman tell us whether the dock is paying interest upon the investment now made, or has the interest due upon the amount advanced been paid out of capital or out of earnings?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I cannot tell my hon. friend. I cannot give him the information he asks for, because it did not originate in my department, and I have not had the facts placed at my disposal by the Minister of Public Works. No doubt they are easily accessible. I am not in a position to state whether the harbour dues are adequate to pay the interest on the investment or not. My hon. friend will see there is nothing in the bill making any additional charge in consequence of this loan.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It will take priority of all others.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes. It is giving it a more advantageous position than it would legally have if it were not so stated in the bill. It is a bill to authorize the Quebec harbour commissioners to borrow money, and simply defines the status and the position of the bonds issued by the government to the parties who are making the loan, and I read the bill over for the purpose of enabling hon. gentlemen to see what the precise position of the bonds will be.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Could the hon. gentleman ascertain these points before we go into Committee of the Whole?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, I will try to.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And also let us know whether the amounts which the harbour commissioners of Quebec have been authorized in the past to borrow have been borrowed and expended, and if this sum is necessary for the completion of the works, or whether it is for new works.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—When we go into committee I will endeavour to give the hon. gentleman all the information.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

WINNIPEG GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY CO.'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (148) "An Act respecting the transport contract between Her Majesty and the Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway Company." He said: In July, 1895, an Act was passed authorizing the Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway Company to extend their lines to the Saskatchewan and directing that a subsidy of $80,000 in addition to the land subsidy be paid to the company, and subsequently to that a diversion of the line was agreed upon, and this bill proposes that the line now being built to Swan River shall be substituted for the line to Saskatchewan and that the subsidy shall be applied to the present line. It is desirable, in the interests of the country, to construct a road and it is thought the money will be better expended in building a line to these districts. It is the application of the subsidy to a diversion of the line.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is that subsidy?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—$80,000 a year without the land subsidy.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I thought it was $40,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—$40,000 for half the distance and another $40,000 when the whole is completed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This bill provides for the transfer of the other $40,000, does it not?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—This is $40,000 for 125 miles.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—It is not $80,000?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will be $80,000 when it is completed. They built half of the line and got $40,000, and this bill is to authorize the payment of $40,000 when the line is built to Swan River. The objective point is the Saskatchewan and it is to divert the line to the other place.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I wish to make a motion, but I should like to get first from the hon. Secretary of State the position of matters. From Winnipeg to the Saskatchewan River $80,000 a year was the transport contract. The Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company built 125 miles and got a transport contract for that portion of their line. It had nothing to do with the Winnipeg and Great Northern. That company has been amalgamated with the Great Northern Railway Company. This bill gives $80,000 for a much smaller portion of the line than it contemplated when the contract was made, because 125 miles was already built by the Manitoba Railway and Canal Company.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no new grant whatever. This does not contemplate a new grant. It proposes to apply the subsidy of $40,000 a year for half of the line extending to the Swan district.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—And then from the Swan River to the Saskatchewan another half.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. I will read the clause in the original Act:

> In order to enable the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway Company to construct so much of their railway to Hudson Bay as reaches from the city of Winnipeg to the Saskatchewan River; the Governor in Council may enter into a contract with the company for the transport of men, supplies, materials and mails, for a term of twenty years, and may pay to the company for such services during the said term $80,000 per annum in manner following, that is to say: one-half of the said sum of $80,000 to be paid annually, commencing from the date of the completion by the company of one-half of their line to be constructed between Winnipeg and the Saskatchewan River; and the remaining one-half of the said sum of $80,000 to be paid annually, commencing from the date of the completion of the remaining half of their line to be constructed between Winnipeg and the Saskatchewan River.

There was an agreement that instead of commencing at Winnipeg, they commenced at a point higher up the line. They were allowed to count that as part of their line. They got $40,000 a year for that.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—No; the Winnipeg and Great Northern did.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The two charters are held by the same person.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—But it is a different charter.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It was part of the same grant.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The government transferred one-half of the sum to the company, and now they propose to transfer the other half.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am surprised the hon. leader of the opposition has nothing to say about this measure, because he was very much interested in the original bill going through this House at the time when the Governor General was about to prorogue parliament.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And the hon. gentleman will remember the extraordinary exertions he himself put forth to aid the hon. Secretary of State to prevent its passage. I compliment them on their conversion, and I also am glad to know that the dire consequences which they foretold would take place have not been realized; and that the corruption, the rascality, the villainy predicted by them have not taken place. Most people in the city and country will remember how the hon. gentleman endeavoured to prevent a vote being taken, and that it was necessary to send word to the Governor General that the House would not be prorogued that day. It appears that 100 miles of that road has been built, and, what is more gratifying to those who supported the bill, is the fact that the road, though new, has within a very small sum paid the running expenses and fixed charges on the bonds which have been issued. This simply provides for the transferring of the other portion of the subsidy, $40,000, for the construction of the balance of the road to the changed route from the Saskatchewan to the Swan River district, northerly and westerly for 125 miles. The reason for that my hon. friend has not vouchsafed to state to the House. But I take it for granted that it is for the purpose of opening up for settlement a better section of the country than that which was provided for in the original bill. If that be the case, it is not only commendable but should receive the support of the House, as it has already received the support of the Commons In its consideration my hon. friend from Shell River will see that the road must be constructed within a year—before December of next year, which would be a short period for the construction of 125 miles even in a country like that.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—They built 125 miles last year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It will open up the whole of that country to settlement, 255 miles, in two years. I think the government have taken a very wise step in proposing this change in the route, providing it is for the purposes I have indicated, although no report has been laid before the House that it is going to open up a better section of the country.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Would the hon. gentleman for Calgary (Mr. Lougheed) give me his authority for saying that half of this $40,000 has been absorbed by the Manitoba Railway and Canal Company?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You will find it in the statutes.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—It took it away from the Great Northern?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes; so that this will practically absorb the whole $80,000.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am glad to know that this measure receives the support of members on the other side of the House.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I rise to move an amendment to the bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This is the second reading and not the committee.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is something the present government had inherited from their predecessors, but I trust that the time that country will be called upon to give to colonization railways large grants of land and, in addition to those large grants of land, large money grants, is about over. In a country like that a land grant should be enough to secure the construction of a railway, and the observation of the hon. leader of the opposition bears out that view, because I understand from him that the Manitoba Colonization Railway is really paying its way now, and once that condition of things set in, I do not think the country should be called upon to pay large sums of money.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not paying its way, but comes within a very few thousands of it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—With the $40,000.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This appears to be a harmless bill, but not more harmless than the bill my hon. friend (Sir Mackenzie Bowell) introduced near the close of the session of 1895. It was merely to provide that the $80,000 which had been voted for the construction of this road should be divided into two parts, one-half to be paid when the first half of the road was built, and the balance to be paid when the remaining portion of the road was built. As I understand it, this bill provides that the balance of that $80,000 shall be allowed to be applied to a line differing a little from the line at first in contemplation, but having the same object in view. Therefore, I can see no objection to the bill. This reminds me of what occurred in 1895. It was at the close of the session, and parliament was held over till Monday to get the hon. gentleman's anxiety and trouble settled. When I got home I found two of our Charlottetown daily papers had telegrams, purporting to come from Ottawa, that the government had treacherously brought down a bill to loan two and a half millions to Mr. Sutherland's railway, and there was a great deal of excitement, and it has never been explained how that telegram got there or who was the author of it. But there was a great deal of excitement over it.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION ACT.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (76) "An Act to provide for the abolition of the Civil Service Superannuation Act and for the retirement of members of the Civil Service."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the bill be read the second time to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the hon. gentleman should explain the provisions of the bill for this reason: I read the bill when it was originally introduced and had some little knowledge of its contents, but it has been amended in so many particulars that I think it would be much better if the House were informed what these amendments are, and they will be able to better judge of the merits to-morrow. From my own impression and recollection of what I have seen in the newspapers—I have not had time to read all the debates—the bill is less objectionable now than it was when first introduced, and if so it will not take up so much time to consider its provisions.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say that it is entirely prospective; there is no party who entered upon the Civil Service under the present Act who will be discharged.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is there a clause which permits the civil servants to take advantage of the Act, by having placed to their credit the amounts deducted from their salaries and retained by the Receiver General as if it had originally commenced as a savings bank.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think so. I cannot say what has been struck out in the House of Commons.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suppose it will be circulated at once.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. They give them an option.

The motion was agreed to.

ST. JOHN BRIDGE RAILWAY COMPANY.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (157) "An Act providing for the repayment of the moneys advanced to the St. John Bridge and Railway Company."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the bill be read the second time to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In connection with the St. John bridge we have had one bill already. What is the nature of this?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This seems to be very much in the line of the others. It is for the extension of the term for fifteen years and to authorize the government to take the bridge at any time by paying what it cost and ten per cent in addition.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Is that clause in the original bill ?

Hon Mr. SCOTT—I do not know whether it was in the original bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And they can take over the bridge at any time within five years.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The former bill extended the period for the debentures that were falling due this year of $125,000, which took a second place against the road. While this, if I understand, is extending the period to fifteen years for the first lien from the government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—With the understanding that they can take the bridge ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, by paying what it cost and ten per cent in addition.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—That was not the understanding at the time the money was loaned ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, the original bill provided that the government should have the option of taking the bridge for five years, and then the five years expired and it was extended for ten years further, and I am very glad to see that the government have again obtained the right to take the bridge over. I trust they will take it over, as I think it is a bridge which should come within the ownership of the government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to ask the reasons why this bridge should be taken over, any more than any other bridge which had been constructed in the interest of railways ? This bridge connects Carleton with the city of St. John proper, and it may be in the interest of the Intercolonial to cross, and more particularly is it in the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It bears the same relation to these railway companies that any other bridge does. I can see only one object in taking it over, and that would be to relieve the railway companies of the tolls which are imposed upon them, which, I doubt not, would be the result once it came into the hands of the government.

Hon. Mr POWER—I do not see why the government might not get tolls.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have reason to know what they would do.

The motion was agreed to.

DOMINION ATLANTIC RAILWAY COMPANY AWARD BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (162) "An Act to confirm a certain award in favour of the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the bill be read a second time to-morrow. He said : This is a bill resulting from the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company that was exempted from payment of certain customs duties on imports, and the matter was referred to the judge of the Exchequer Court as arbitrator, and he decided that they were entitled to $100,000, and then pay duty hereafter as other people. It is a commutation bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There was a provision in the old laws that gave interminable trouble and annoyance to every government, and particularly to every Minister of Customs. There was always a good deal of discussion over every settlement. I think the sum is large, but notwithstanding that, it is much better to be paid and do away with the difficulties. I take it for granted that this is a compensation for a surrender of all the rights which were guaranteed by the old province of Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It would be well if the government could go a little further, and make some arrangement by which the province of Prince Edward Island would be relieved of the incubus of the telegraph companies which have a monopoly of that island, and consequently charge what they please to the public.

The motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION TO CUSTOMS AND FISHERIES BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (153) "An Act to further protect the Customs and Fisheries."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the bill be read the second time to-morrow. He said: This gives larger powers than exist at present in the event of their noticing a smuggler they can fire a gun as a signal to bring him to. It appears they have some pretty swift smugglers down in the gulf just now, and they get away from the customs people who ask for a little more authority than to chase them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I again compliment the government, and particularly the Customs Department on the advance and progress they are making in the measures they are adopting for the protection of the revenue. I had some thirteen or fourteen years of experience of all kinds of criticisms flowing from the lips of the members of the then opposition, and particularly from many of those who now form the government, for the attempts which were made by the late government to enforce the law and protect the revenue and punish the smuggler. I find they are going much further than I ever dared to propose in that direction, and I compliment them on the fact. It is an acknowledgement of the correctness of the policy pursued by the late government, and of the efforts which were made by the heads of that department in the past in their exertions to protect the revenue and punish the guilty. They are going on well and I hope they will continue. The gentleman now at the head of the department was one of the most earnest and persistent in finding fault with the old law, and he is now making it, not only as rigid as it ought to be, but has learned a lesson which, if he ever gets out of office, he will never forget.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It will be hereafter "Billy get your gun."

The motion was agreed to.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A Message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (152) "An Act further to amend the Customs Act."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the bill be read the second time to-morrow. He said: This is to enable the Customs to give out ships stores for a short voyage, and fixing standards of tea.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is there a provision in that bill in reference to spirits?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; it only refers to the subjects I have mentioned.

The motion was agreed to.

FIRST READING.

Bill (146) "An Act to amend and consolidate the North-west Irrigation Acts of 1894 and 1895."—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

PLEBISCITE BILL.

COMMITTEE STAGE POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called:

Committee of the Whole House on (Bill 121) "An Act respecting the Prohibition of the Importation, Manufacture and Sale of Intoxicating Liquors."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Order of the Day be discharged and that it be made an Order of the Day for to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As this is a matter on which there is not likely to be much discussion, we may as well proceed with it now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is a large number of orders on the paper and there are very few members in the House to-day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Unless there is some other reason, we should proceed now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Stand!

The order was allowed to stand.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (71) " An Act further to amend the Weights and Measures Act."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I wish to call the attention of the House, when we go into committee on this bill, to some amendments which I think, in the interest of the seller of grain, are necessary. The present system is of such a character as, I think, is detrimental to the farmer and those who have grain to sell. I shall not at the present moment go fully into the reasons, but it is simply in connection with the testing of the weight of the grain. I think I can show that it would be in the interest of sellers of grain that it should be changed to a much larger quantity, say a bushel, then the sixteenth of a bushel for the test. It is a matter of very little consequence how that is ascertained, a better means can be adopted for a fair measurement by increasing this test weight, than as at present. There is another paragraph of the bill that I must confess I cannot understand : It is provided that a bag of potatoes shall weigh eighty pounds. Why should that be restricted to the province of Quebec? If that be good for the purchaser and consumer in the province of Quebec, it strikes me that it must be equally good, and the reasons must be just the same in the province of Ontario. My hon. friend shakes his head. I should like to know some good reason for this special legislation for Quebec. If I buy a bag of potatoes in the market in Ottawa, why should it not be held of the same weight as if I bought it in Hull? I find no fault with the regulation. I think it is a very good provision of the law, but what I object to is that there should be a special provision applying to a bag of potatoes in one province, while in another province it matters not how much or how little a bag of potatoes weighs. I wish to call attention to this, so that when we go into committee we can have an explanation of it. Perhaps there can be some good reason why it is done.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—In the province of Quebec, where potatoes are offered for sale by the bag, this bill provides that the bag shall contain at least eighty pounds. There has been no definition of what shall be the weight of a bag of potatoes heretofore. The bag of potatoes sold in all the markets of the country, Toronto, London and elsewhere, is ninety pounds. The ordinary wheat bag will hold a bushel and a half, and I do not think that there are a great many persons who are buyers, at all events, that would care to see the weight cut down ten pounds by Act of parliament. The truth is, in the province of Quebec, especially in the city of Montreal, the habitants come into the city with flour bags that are somewhat smaller than the ordinary grain bags. They buy flour in bags and subsequently use the bag for marketing their potatoes. Those bags will not hold ninety pounds of potatoes, and the city of Montreal has made a regulation requiring that the bag of potatoes shall weigh ninety pounds, fining a number of farmers coming into market for offering bags of potatoes weighing eighty pounds. It is rather to meet an actual state of things which exists than to lay down a rule for the country, and so the parties who are pressing for this measure were quite content that it should be confined to the province of Quebec. I think it well that it should be so. I do not think that it is necessary to require that a bag of potatoes shall weigh less than ninety pounds elsewhere. The reason does not exist anywhere else and it does not affect the general weights and measures as amended by this bill.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Why not apply that to other provinces as well as the province of Quebec?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have just stated why. In the other provinces the bags will hold the 90 lbs., and the man who is living in the city buying his potatoes would prefer 90 lbs. to 80 lbs.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—This does not say the bag shall contain 80 lbs. It says it shall contain at least 80 lbs.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I buy all my flour in bags.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The rule laid down by the hon. Minister of Justice is correct enough, but it is not the practice. The farmers know enough when they are selling their potatoes not to guarantee the buyer a bushel and a half to the bag. If you go to any market in Ontario and ask the price of potatoes, the farmer will say so much a bag. The presumption is that there is a bushel and a half in each bag, but the fact is there is not a bushel and a half in every bag, and this legislation is to protect the purchaser in the province of Quebec so that when he buys a bag of potatoes he knows what he is getting just as well as if he were buying a bushel of potatoes. The majority of bags of potatoes bought on the market do not contain more than a bushel and a quarter.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They are worse in your section of the country than they are in the other parts.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, that is the general practice, and if you say that the weight of a bag of potatoes in Ontario shall be 90 lbs., all right; that will be establishing a uniform rate just as it is in the other provinces. If you say it is to be 100 lbs. I have no objection, because it is a fixture, and then everybody knows what he is doing.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The hon. minister should ask to have his explanation struck from the debates, because to my mind it is the worst explanation we have ever listened to. What an idea, fixing the weight of a bag of potatoes at 80 pounds because a farmer happens to buy flour by the bag in the province of Quebec. We buy our flour in bags in the North-west. I brought down a ton and a half and took it in two loads. Some of the bags had fifty and some had sixty pounds. The bags are not of uniform weight. A farmer does not bring in one bag at a time: he will bring two dozen and perhaps no two of them will be of the same weight. But that was not the part I was going to speak about. There is an omission. I think lime should be added to the articles which are given a weight per bushel. In the North-west Territories we buy our lime by the car load. It does not come there in packages. The cars are taken to the lime shelf on Stony Mountain, or east of Winnipeg, where they have lime kilns, and loaded. The lime is loaded in an unslaked state. But by the time it gets up to Wolseley there is a portion of it slaked. They sell it in a measure which they make themselves. I think it is about fourteen inches square. They fill that box with lime; some times they round it up and some times they do not. If a man bought a dozen boxes of lime, he would not find three boxes of the same weight. When it is fresh from the kiln it is lumpy, and when it is slaked it will not weigh half as much. There is no article with regard to which it is more necessary to have a fixed weight than lime. I have bought lime fresh from a kiln, and I have bought lime afterwards out of the same bin when it was slaked, when the same measure would not weigh nearly as much. You must take it or leave it. You have got to have it if you are engaged in building. The weight should be fixed at so many pounds to the bushel. As it is now, a great deal of fraud is practiced in that country in the sale of lime. There is no article I have wrangled over as much as lime. I called the attention of the hon. the Secretary of State to the matter the other day and told him that he ought to add lime to that list, and make it 60 pounds to the bushel. A man would then know what he was getting.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I look upon it as a mistake to be making frequent changes in the market standards of all these commodities. We should adhere as much as possible to the old standards, or at all events, if they are not right get them made right, and not be making these frequent changes. Changing the number of pounds that constitute a bag of potatoes in Quebec and leaving it in the rest of the provinces at a different weight cannot fail to create confusion and do harm.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—It ought to be a bushel all over.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We are drifting away from the standard which has been accepted, I think, of 90 lbs. to the bushel in most of the other provinces. In England we know the market standards have been established, and you might as well attempt to change the constitution of England as to introduce changes. Every buyer or seller knows what they mean exactly and we sould know that the standards were not likely to be changed with us. The change is that a bag of potatoes shall be 80 lbs. instead of 90.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is not a change

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That has been the law, has it?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, there has been no such thing in the law as a bag of potatoes. It is an addition to the law.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend says it is not a change. It is the first time it is introduced into the Dominion law, and therefore it is a change.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is an addition.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is a change. I take it what my hon. friend means is that 80 lbs. is the weight of a bag in the markets of Quebec at present?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Ninety.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, eighty.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I cannot understand why we should make this enactment for Quebec if that is not the weight in the other markets. It seems strange that we should impose an arbitrary rule upon Quebec which does not exist in the other provinces. I notice that in all the articles enumerated they are the same as in the Weights and Measures Act, and not only are the same articles contained, but the same weights except in the case of flax seed. That is now fifty lbs. to the bushel and it is here made fifty-six. I dare say fifty-six pounds is nearer the correct weight of flax seed than fifty. But it seems to me that if that change, and the change making the bag of potatoes eighty pounds in Quebec while a bag is understood to mean something else in Ontario and the other provinces, are all the changes, it is a pity putting such a bill as this on the statute-book. The necessity for it is so extremely limited and paltry in its character and it is not claimed that eighty pounds is what is understood by a bag of potatoes in Quebec. I think it would be better to drop this bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not see why it should be dropped. I suppose the great object of legislation is to accommodate the law to the habits and customs of the people.

Hon. Mr. MASSON—Who has asked for that bill?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The agricultural population all round the city of Montreal. If they were to come into the city of Montreal and conform with the by-laws of the city, they could bring in a bag with sixty pounds in it. They cannot get ninety pounds in the bag which would be a bushel and a half, which is ordinarily known as a bag. Under this they can put eighty pounds into a bag. This is simply to enable a farmer to fill his bags without violating the by-laws of the city. Surely this is not a matter about which this House will undertake to make difficulty, because after all what you are endeavouring to do is to secure uniformity as far as possible, but where there are differences we know how they arise and in what way we provide here on account of the municipal legislation, a provision in the bill which is new, not mentioned elsewhere, leaving the other portions of the community to do as they are doing at the present time. In Toronto if a man sells fifty-five pounds in a bag, he may not be selling it by the bushel. A man may say to him, I will not take the bag unless there are 60 pounds in it, but in the city of Montreal when a farmer comes in and offers a bag of potatoes, he is liable to be fined. And that is not so anywhere else.

Hon. Mr. MASSON—The government are making an innovation and should explain why they are doing it. The representatives of the people have not spoken about it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—At least a dozen members of the House of Commons have brought this matter up.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to know what authority the city of Montreal has to pass a city by-law regulating the weight of a bushel or a bag.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They cannot do it with a bushel.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Dominion parliament only has the power and authority, and exercises it in dealing with trade and commerce, to regulate the weights and the manner in which all things should be sold. The hon. Minister of Justice tells us there is a municipal regulation in the city of Montreal which fines the farmer who sells a bag of potatoes containing less than 90 lbs. It is not the municipal law which imposes the penalty. The presumption is that a bag of potatoes in Quebec as in Ontario contains 90 lbs., and we know they do not in many cases. In order to meet the case of the province of Quebec, they attempt to define what a bag of potatoes shall weigh, though if it contains 90 or 190 lbs. or more, you pay at the market rate of 80 lbs.

to a bag. It might contain a bag and a half, or a bag and a quarter as the case might be. I want to know if the Minister of Justice affirms the right of any city to regulate what the weight of anything shall be when sold in the market. If he does it is a new principle, and we shall have every municipality in the Dominion passing by-laws regulating how the farmers should sell the the products of their farm.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There are a great many. A city can pass a by-law preventing a man stuffing a bird and offering it for sale.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Surely, that is not a constitutional question.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is no law saying what a bag of potatoes shall be.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Then the city of Montreal is not running in contravention to parliament. They could not say a bushel shall be seventy pounds because we say it is sixty, but they might say a bag of potatoes should weigh at least ninety pounds, and that if it does not weigh that you are committing a fraud upon the purchaser and you shall be subject to a fine. The city of Montreal may say so and so. I am expressing no opinion as to the validity of such a by-law. But they are doing so and I say you may define a bag of potatoes in conformity with what the bags in use will actually hold, without doing any violence to anybody or interfering with any other portion of the Dominion. It is a matter of local trade. It is not a matter of trade affecting two or more provinces, and if you accommodate yourself to the habits of the community and make that lawful which otherwise might be unlawful and subject them to vexatious regulations then I think it is proper.

Hon. Mr. MASSON—What is the difference between a bag of flour in Quebec and a bag of flour in the lower provinces?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They have the farmers' two bushel bag which will hold 120 pounds. Those are the ordinary bags in use.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The habitants of Quebec are not so stupid as to use good flour bags for potatoes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They do it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am told the whole trouble has arisen out of the fact that sugar bags are very abundant in Montreal; that the sugar refiners being there, a great many sugar bags can be had, and they cannot conveniently hold 100 pounds of potatoes, and therefore we are going to change the law of the Dominion as far as Quebec is concerned and create a want of uniformity in our market standard all because of these sugar bags in Montreal.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—You have not defined a bag anywhere.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I want to point out the confusion in trade that this may possibly cause. A man in Toronto wants 1,000 bushels of potatoes. He sees them advertised, bag of potatoes so much. If he is acting upon the presumption that there are ninety pounds in the bag—a bushel and a half—he will order them, and when he gets home he will find they weigh ten pounds less per bag.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If I buy 1,000 bushels, of course I must get a thousand bushels.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not necessarily under this Act, you get a 1,000 bags each weighing 80 pounds.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This clause was not in the bill as it was introduced in the Commons by the government. I find in the Commons Hansard, June 1st, the bill was in committee:

On clause 2.

Mr. FORTIN moved in amendment that in the province of Quebec when potatoes were sold or offered for sale by the bag, such bags shall contain at least 80 pounds.

Motion agreed to.

There appeared to be no discussion on it in the Commons.

The motion was agreed to.

IRON AND STEEL BOUNTIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (159) "An Act to amend the Act to provide for Bounties on Iron and Steel made in Canada."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is worthy of more consideration. We are going at race horse speed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We can discuss it on going to committee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—By an omission in the bill last year no time was fixed and it was doubtful whether it could be enforced without stating the time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then it takes effect from the time it received the assent of the Crown. This must be for paying bounties on iron prior to the tariff becoming law. Otherwise there is no use for it. The other law made a provision for the payment of bounties. This must be to give it a retroactive effect.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When the Finance Minister makes his statement the law goes into effect. In the Act they omitted to put in the date.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then it should go into force at the time the announcement was made.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It went into force at the time the Act came into operation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then it is to the advantage of the manufacturer. If it were the reverse it would be to the advantage of the importer.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Tuesday, 7th June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three O'Clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THE SITTINGS OF THE SENATE.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—With the consent of the House I beg to move that after to-day we hold two sittings each day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would the hon. gentleman indicate at what hour the sittings would be held?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I would like to consult the wishes of hon. members of the House on that point. There are two bills yet to consider, and it might be well to meet in the first instance in the afternoon and then hold another sitting in the evening. As soon as the matters necessary to go to committee are disposed of, then I think we had better meet in the morning and afternoon.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The motion is that there be two sittings a day, from three o'clock till six o'clock, and from eight in the evening till we adjourn, and after the committees have disposed of all their work, then there be a motion to hold a sitting in the morning, and a sitting in the afternoon, or perhaps three sittings daily.

The motion was agreed to.

MAIL SERVICE TENDERS FROM WOLSELEY, N.W.T.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY asked—the Government for a list of the names of persons who tendered for the mail service south from Wolseley, North-west Territories, the amount of the several persons' tenders, and who was awarded the contract, and the price?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say to my hon. friend that I have the following information from the Postmaster General:

"Tenders for the mail service south from Wolseley, N.W.T., have been received at the Post Office Department, and the lowest tender has been accepted, but the department has not yet been advised by the inspector of the contract having been signed, it is not possible at present to give the names of the persons, who tendered or the amount of each tender until the contract is made."

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to ask the hon. leader of the government if they propose to give me an answer to the question that I asked the other day respecting the invoice of supplies bought from Bate & Company and other persons for military purposes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I brought down a statement a few days ago, and laid it on the table here, in reference to that, and I thought it came under the hon. gentleman's notice.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I have not seen that, but I will ask the clerk for it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State whether he has brought down those papers respecting the Soulanges Canal?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not able to say anything about the returns. I have asked frequently about it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should like to direct the attention of the hon. leader of the House to the fact that on the 9th May last a notice was placed on the paper asking for the return of certain papers with which this House should have been made acquainted, particularly by way of return to an address. Now, if that stage has been reached by which the government will purposely ignore such an address, I should like to be made acquainted with the fact. The papers I asked for relate to a well known contract, to which considerable attention has been directed, and the papers would not necessarily occupy a very great deal of time in preparation. They refer to certain specifications, tenders and notices, and, as I have said on three or four occasions, the papers can be prepared in three or four hours. It is my intention at each sitting of this House, until those papers are submitted, to direct the attention of the House to the fact that I have asked for these papers and they have not been brought down.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (150) "An Act further to amend the Acts respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts."—(Hon. Mr. Mills).

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (142) "An Act to authorize the Quebec Harbour Commissioners to borrow money."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, yesterday asked about the income of the harbour commissioners of Quebec, and whether they are paying interest on their indebtedness. They are not. I may say to my hon. friend that the gross income of the harbour commissioners is about $70,000, of which one-half is available and is being used for harbour improvements; that the interest on their indebtedness is in the meantime being deferred. The amount now required, $350,000, as my hon. friend will see, is to be extended over a number of years, and is for the purpose of making improvements as they may be required, and it is expected that, with these improvements, the income of the harbour commissioners will correspondingly increase and that the moneys that are now devoted to harbour improvements can then be applied to the payment of interest on their indebtedness.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (BC.)—Is the interest guaranteed by the Dominion?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, it is provided that it shall take priority over certain other liabilities.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the gross income of the harbour commissioners is $75,000 a year?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—About $70,000 of which $35,000 goes to local improvements.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That would leave about $35,000 that is not required for management.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, it is not required for management. I cannot tell my hon. friend how the balance is applied. A portion of it of course is required for management. Half the sum, as I said, is applied to improvements, the construction of new works, and, under an arrangement made a couple of years ago, no portion of it has been applied to the payment of interest. With the privilege of borrowing money for the purpose of carrying on improvements it is intended that that income shall go towards the payment of interest and the ultimate abolition of the debt.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I can understand that, but it seems to me the hon. gentleman, in making a proposition of this kind to the House, should be able to tell us what becomes of the money which is really collected. If the gross income be $70,000, and half of it goes for improvements, then the other $35,000 must be appropriated in some way or other—I presume some of it for management, but it could not by any possibility require all that amount. Is any portion used to pay interest on some preferential bonds, if not for what purpose is it used by the commissioners?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I sent to the Minister of Public Works for information on the subject, and he misunderstood me and sent in the information relating to the harbour of Montreal, which does not throw much light on the harbour of Quebec. I may tell my hon. friend that I have given him all the information that is in my possession at the present time. Mr. Dobell, one of the representatives of Quebec, is thoroughly conversant with this subject and has been for years a member of the harbour board, and if my hon. friend will permit the bill to go through the committee with the information I have given him, which I admit is scanty enough, before the bill is read the third time I shall endeavour to give him all the information for which he has asked; that is, as to how the $70,000 is applied at the present time. I have told my hon. friend that something more than one-half of this is applied towards making new improvements. How the balance is applied I cannot at this moment tell him.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—One thing evidently the hon. gentleman does know, and that is, that it is not applied in paying any interest which is due the government.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, that is under an arrangement made a year or two ago.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not at all surprised that the Minister of Public Works gave the hon. gentleman the information with respect to Montreal instead of Quebec harbour. I have no doubt that is the most prominent picture in his brain just now, and consequently he would not think of anything else at the present time. However, I have no further question to ask.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think we might as well take the third reading now.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the third reading of the bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read to third time and passed.

WINNIPEG GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY CONTRACT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (148) "An Act respecting the transport Contract between Her Majesty and the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company."

(In the Committee.)

On clause 1.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I have given notice of a motion to amend.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman moves to strike out the land subsidy. It is a very unusual proceeding to take away from a company a gift that has been made to it under an Act of parliament. I presume they are building their road and that their bonds were issued on the faith of it. I do not think my hon. friend will insist on moving his amendment.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I intend to insist upon it and I move:

That the words "and the company's land subsidy shall apply to the line hereby authorized," at the end of the said bill, be omitted.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Before the motion is put, I should like to suggest that that motion is not in order. It deals with the subsidy, and we cannot touch the subsidy in this House. We can reject the bill altogether, but we cannot touch the subsidy.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—It is not a money subsidy.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It does not matter; it is an appropriation of the land of the Crown. The same rule applies to this which applied to the Yukon Bill, and which I mentioned when that bill was under discussion, that there was no difference between appropriating the lands of the Crown and the money of the Crown, and that neither the lands nor the money were under the jurisdiction of this House. So that my hon. friend's motion is not in order.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am in favour of the motion, but I cannot concur in the opinion given by the hon. Minister of Justice. This is neither reducing the subsidy to be paid nor increasing it; the proposition before the House, is to transfer it from one work to another, and if that clause be struck out it will leave the appropriation for the original road. I cannot understand how it is claimed that it is out of order. I do not see how it can be considered an infringement of the principle laid down by the hon. Minister of Justice. If a proposition be made in the House of Commons for the granting of a certain sum of money to any person for any purpose, any member has the right to move the rejection of that paragraph in the bill, or to take the more moderate course of moving the reduction of the same, but he has no right to move to increase it, nor to make any motion which would lead to an extra charge upon the revenue of the country, unless it was laid before parliament with the sanction of His Excellency.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—This is not a charge upon the revenue?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, this is not a charge on the revenue, nor is it an interference with the appropriation which has been made, but it is a declaration that you will not change the purposes for which it was originally granted. I do not think the amendment is out of order.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The House of Commons, in which body is vested the sole right to deal with the property of the country, send us up a bill which provides that a certain money subsidy to the line that is authorized by the bill and they say that the company's land subsidy shall also apply to the line authorized. Surely this House would not have the right to say that the grant of $80,000 should not be given to the new company, but should be given to the old company. We would have no right to do that, and we have no more right to decide that the land subsidy shall be given to the old company and not to the new. We have a perfect right, if we wish things to remain as they are, to reject the bill, but we cannot amend them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is not changing an appropriation from one company to another; it is giving power to a company to which a subsidy was granted last year to change the route, and not to a new company.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I claim my right to speak to my motion. It is not asking for an appropriation of money, but this deals with a subsidy to the Great Northern Railway, which was designed to go between the Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipeg towards the Saskatchewan and Hudson Bay. Now, the appropriation made by the late government was to that railroad as part of the line to Hudson Bay. This is a transference from that line on the east side of Lake Manitoba to a line on the west side of Lake Manitoba, which runs in an entirely different direction. I wish to oppose the transference of that land grant to the new line and to keep it for the old line.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The old line is abandoned.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What will be the effect of the hon. gentleman's amendment? Will it change the land grant, or will it leave the land grant to the old line?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Yes. Of course when I speak to my amendment I shall explain what I want. I claim my motion is not out of order on the grounds that I have mentioned.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What will be the effect of the amendment?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—That is a legal point that I am not acquainted with. The Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway has a charter to go to Hudson Bay, or so far as it has life at the present moment, and this is designed to tack on the bonus, which was granted to the Great Northern Railway, to the Manitoba Railway and Canal Company, which starts from Gladstone, an entirely different point, and which, goes in an entirely different direction.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Without speaking on the merits of this question, but confining my remarks to the question of order, I should not like to see a ruling in accordance with the contention of the hon. member from Halifax on this point. It would simply divest this House of, at any time, dealing with a land subsidy, because this is nothing more or less than a land subsidy given to this particular road. Surely the Senate has a right to say whether it will support or reject the bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We can reject the bill in the whole, but we cannot reject part of it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is equivalent to rejecting a land subsidy.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—The Secretary of State cannot surely urge that if the government brings down land subsidies for half a dozen railways, one or two of which may be very objectionable indeed, that we have to take the objectionable ones along with the unobjectionable ones and have no power to amend the bill at all? I do not think that that is the intention.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The point in this case is this: there is a money subsidy and a land subsidy.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I am not asking that the money subsidy shall be interfered with.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The rule is that you cannot change the amount; you can reject the bill altogether. It seems to me, under the ruling which has heretofore prevailed, we cannot divide the amount and say we accept so much and reject so much.

Hon. Mr. MASSON—Can the hon. gentleman give us any authority? There is only one bill, the Supply Bill, which we are obliged to accept or reject as a whole. We have always understood it that way. Can the hon. gentleman show us some authority for the position he takes? We have great powers. We can do anything we like with any bill except the Supply Bill. Not only land bills but money bills. We can strike out but we cannot add. We cannot say that money shall be spent, but we can say the money shall not be spent.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This question has come up rather unexpectedly.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—It has been on the order paper for three days.

Hon. Mr. POWER—But the question of order has come up unexpectedly. I remember in the session of 1885 when the hon. gentleman from Richmond occupied the chair of this House, I moved an amendment to a railway bill which was before the House to the effect that work should be begun at both ends of the proposed railway at the same time, and that motion was ruled out of order, and as I admitted afterwards, was correctly and properly ruled out of order by the Speaker. He gave the authority at the time. That was a smaller interference with the bill before the House than that which is contemplated by the hon. gentleman from Shell River. I presume the usual course, when a question of order is raised in committee, is for the Speaker take the chair.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I should like to ask an explanation of the last words of the bill—whether they mean that the old land grant shall remain a subsidy to the old line.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The old line is abandoned.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Then the old land grant is on the old line still but this other company has got it.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I wish to speak to the amendment.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—I think that it would be wiser to pass the bill now and let the hon. gentleman move the amendment on the third reading.

Hon. BOULTON—I would like to make a speech on this at the present time and on the third reading as well. Before it comes to the third reading I wish to explain the reasons for my opposition to it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I persist in the question of order.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The committee should rise, and then the Speaker could decide the question of order after which we could proceed in committee again.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW, from the committee, reported that they had taken the bill into consideration and asked leave to report the same for the decision of the Chair on the point of order.

Hon. Mr. POWER—My hon. friend's amendment proposes to strike out of this bill the words, "and the company's land subsidy shall apply to the line hereby authorized." I say that this House has no right to deal with the property of the Crown; that it has no more right to deal with a land subsidy than with the money subsidy which is dealt with by this bill. The Senate have the right to reject the bill but not to amend it in the manner proposed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I refer to May, at page 542, where he says:

THE COMMONS PRIVILEGES AND LEGISLATION BY THE LORDS.

By the practice and usage based upon that resolution, the Lords are excluded, not only from the power of initiating or amending bills dealing with public expenditure or revenue, but also from initiating public bills which would create a charge upon the people by the imposition of local or other rates, or which deal with the administration or employment of those charges. Bills which thus infringe the privileges of the Commons, when received from the Lords, are either laid aside or postponed for six months.

It follows accordingly that the Lords may not amend the provisions in bills which they receive from the Commons dealing with the above mentioned subjects, so as to alter, whether by increase or reduction, the amount of a rate or charge, its duration, mode of assessment, levy, collection, appropriation or management, or the persons who pay, receive, manage or control it or the limits within which it is leviable. Other forms of amendments by the Lords have also been held to infringe on the privileges of the Commons, such as the addition of a clause providing that payments into and out of the Consolidated Fund should be made under the same regulations as were applicable by law to other similar payments; of provisions for the payment of salaries to officers of the Court of Chancery out of the suitors' funds; and alterations in a clause prescribing the order in which charges on the revenue of a colony should be paid.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Does it say anything with regard to the appropriation of land?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is an asset of the Crown.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The extract read from May is not pertinent to the question before the House. We have always adhered to the doctrine laid down there, in dealing with public properties or public moneys, but this bill makes no provision either for the reduction or the increase of land grant, or the increase of a money subsidy, or the decrease of a money subsidy. It provides for the transferring of a subsidy which has been granted in land from one line to another. It neither adds to the revenue nor takes from the revenue. If the motion was carried—I do not anticipate that it will be—it would leave the appropriation, as it was passed by parliament in 1895, in the same position as the bill provided for at that time. It does not take from nor does it add to, but it says the same company that built the 125 miles, may extend their road upon another route, and that they will transfer the subsidy which was given for the line from Dauphin Lake to the Saskatchewan, to a road to be built from Dauphin Lake to the Swan River. That is the proposition before the House, and it is a question whether that comes within the meaning of the paragraph read by hon. Secretary of State from May. To my mind, it does not. I do not think it has the slightest application to the question before the House.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I must give His Honour the Speaker the information with regard to this road. A charter was granted to build a line from Winnipeg to the crossing of Lake Manitoba between Lakes Manitoba and Winnipeg; that is serving a tract of country on its route from Hudson Bay to the Saskatchewan. There was forty miles of that road built, as hon. gentlemen all know, about ten years ago has never been utilized or brought to completion.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Is the hon. gentleman speaking to the question of order or the resolution?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I am speaking of the transference of this subsidy upon the line that the hon. leader of the opposition has laid down. I want to show that the people expected this appropriation to be expended for their benefit between Winnipeg and Manitoba, that it is now transferred to the west side of Lake Manitoba, some 120 miles from Gladstone north, and now this is designed to transfer that appropriation of 6,500 acres per mile from that line for which the appropriation was originally granted, and the money subsidy originally granted, to the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company. I am moving now that that transfer shall not take place. It is not a question of what is to become of the land grant hereafter, whether it shall be utilized for the purpose for which it was originally intended or not; that is for the government to say, but I claim the right to speak to my motion and I am quite in order in regard to that, because it is still leaving the land grant in the hands of the government and for the purpose for which it was originally intended.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not think the point taken by my hon. friend opposite is well taken. This land grant, as my hon. friend argues, is a grant transferred from one company to another; it is not an appropriation from the Crown. The appropriation has already been made. That is the contention of my hon. friend, and it is just a question whether it shall go———

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My contention was not that it was transferred from one company to another.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—From one line to another, under the same company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The money has not yet been earned. It is still an appropriation to be made. Parliament has entered into a contract, that is all. There is not an appropriation. But that being so, this is as much a dealing with the revenues of the Crown as if there were no other bill in existence except this particular bill. In a supply bill you cannot amend it. You cannot propose to strike out certain items, but must deal with the measure as a whole. Any bill making an appropriation of public moneys, or of public revenues in any form, is not exactly like a supply bill taken as a whole. You may amend, for instance, any clause of this bill except that relating to the appropriation. My hon. friend says we would have the right to reject the Supply Bill, therefore we have a right to strike out this particular clause. I say no, because this is not the only clause in the bill. There is another clause making an appropriation of a certain sum for a year. The question may arise whether you can deal with both or one only. You cannot deal with one, and my hon. friend will see that applying the principle of analogy of the Supply Bill, you cannot amend this bill by striking out a part of the public appropriation to support the road and leave the remainder in the bill.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—By what authority can you place public money and public land in the same position?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They are both assets of the Crown and both have values. My hon. friend put a very high value on land the other day—considered it of immensely greater consequence than money.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I put that value on it still.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And now he argues that the lands are of so little consequence that they cannot be regarded as money.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I want to know on what authority the hon. gentleman places land and public money in the same category?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Because they are both revenues of the Crown.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There might be the other way; there might be a loss of revenue to the Crown.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The paragraph referred to by the Secretary of State reads as follows:

> By the practice and usage based upon that resolution, the Lords are excluded, not only from the power of initiation or amending bills dealing with public expenditure or revenue, but also from initiating public bills which would create a charge upon the people.

Then the next paragraph goes on to say:

> It follows, accordingly, that the Lords may not amend the provisions in bills which they receive from the Commons dealing with the above mentioned subjects, so as to alter, either by increase or reduction, the amount of a rate or charge, &c.

Is this an interference with the revenues of the country? Is it an interference with the expenditure of the country? I contend that it is neither the one nor the other. If it were an original appropriation of these lands, then there might be some force in the argument that the hon. gentleman is making. But it is not an original appropriation, and I hold that the granting of land is not an expenditure, nor is it an interference with the revenues of the country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is the taking of the lands from one corporation and giving them to another corporation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not, my hon. friend is wrong. It is allowing the same corporation to expend the money in one section of the country and not in the other for which it was originally appropriated.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Is it not the same corporation?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—One is the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company; that is the corporation that up to the present time has had this land grant. The hon. senator who made the motion to amend does not wish to take it from that company. The Crown takes it from one company, at the instance of the parties interested, and gives it to an entirely different company. It stands in the name of the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company. We gave it to that company, and that company has not forfeited the land yet. Now the Crown says, for public reasons and with the consent of the parties, we are going to take that land back, to cancel or repeal that original grant, and we are going to make a new grant altogether to the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Compay.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—The bill does not say that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But we do it virtually by this. The hon. gentleman will admit that it now stands in the name of the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If this bill passes with that clause in it, it will then have been taken from that company and transferred to the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—What is the difference?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They are two corporations; they have two Acts of parliament.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—They are both the same except in name.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The other is the Manitoba Railway and Canal Company.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—There was a bill passed through parliament the other day allowing the Manitoba Railway and Canal Company to amalgamate with the Winnipeg and Great Northern. It is still the Winnipeg and Great Northern. This land was vested in the Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway Company, and this bill still leaves it vested in the Winnipeg and Great Northern, and allows them to expend it in another direction.

Hon. Mr. DE BOUCHERVILLE—Supposing those words were struck out which the hon. gentleman from Shell River wishes by his motion, what grant will there be to this new railroad?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I am only trying to get the matter before the House and explain about that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I withdraw the point of order if the hon. gentleman will allow the House to divide on it.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—The hon. member from Quebec wants the information; you will not let me give the information.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Chair, chair!

The SPEAKER—It has been maintained during the discussion of the point of order that the Senate had no right to interfere with bills which increased the expenditure of money, but would have the right to amend such bills in order to decrease or prevent the expenditure of money. I admit that I was, at first sight, of that opinion, but the authority of May, cited by the hon. Secretary of State, at page 542, after saying that the House of Lords is excluded, not only from the power of initiating or amending bills dealing with public expenditure or revenue, but also from initiating public bills which would create a charge upon the people, or which would deal with the administration or employment of those charges, adds:

> It follows, accordingly that the Lords may not amend the provisions in bills which they received from the Commons, dealing with the above subjects, so as to alter, whether by increase or reduction, mode of assessment, levy, collection, appropriation or management; or the persons who pay, receive, manage or control, &c., &c.

To this the hon. leader of the opposition said that there is in that amendment neither a question of increasing or reducing the expenditure of money, but of transferring the grant of land from one line to another. But in reading the amendment as it is, I cannot now come to any other conclusion than that this amendment would really interfere in the disposition of the public money, and the very words of the amendment say: "and the company's land subsidy shall apply to the line hereby authorized." By this the amendment goes to say that the disposition of the land grant will be changed; and as the hon. gentleman from Montearville pointed out, if this amendment is carried, then the land already granted will be removed from its destination or appropoiation, that is, from one line to apply it to another, and there will be no grant of land for one line which had it before. And as I am of opinion that public land, representing public property, ought to be considered as public money, I cannot come to any other conclusion than that the point of order is well taken, and that the amendment is not in order.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Then I beg to give notice that on the third reading of the bill I will move the six months' hoist.

OTTAWA AND GEORGIAN BAY CANAL.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW moved the adoption of the final report of the Select Committee appointed to investigate and report upon the construction of a canal uniting the waters of Lake Huron with those of the St. Lawrence, via the Ottawa River.

He said: I have much pleasure in reviewing the proceeding of the committee appointed to inquire into the feasibility of constructing this canal. I may say, hon. gentlemen, that this matter was thoroughly inquired into by the committee, and evidence was adduced before them, clearly showing that this route is a most desirable one, a route which will contribute greatly to the future prosperity of this Dominion. As hon. gentlemen know, this subject has engaged the attention of the public men of this country for the last fifty years. At one time it was viewed as a local project, an Ottawa project, and therefore, did not attract the attention it has commanded of later years. It is now viewed in a different light, as a national work, a work, which in importance exceeds any public work undertaken in this country in the past—I will not except even the Canadian Pacific Railway, although we must admit that that great enterprise has been of inestimable benefit to the Dominion generally. I think that you will find that this proposed canal will be equally advantageous in the future and will succeed in diverting the trade that has hitherto passed our doors and entered United States channels, and we will get the benefit of this transportation in the future. There can be no greater advantage to any country than a cheap, safe and expeditious means of transportation. In the past it was necessary to build the St. Lawrence and Welland Canal. They have been of great benefit to the country, I admit, but at the present day we are in a different position. We find now that it is absolutely necessary that increased accommodation should be provided for the expanding commerce of this great Dominion. With this Ottawa canal you will have, instead of a very small percentage of the cereals of the west transported through this country, in the future the great bulk of passing through this channel to the sea-board. We had before the committee experts of the highest character—men well acquainted with the trade and business operations of the country—and they all came to one and only one conclusion, that it is of the utmost importance that this work should be undertaken with as little delay as possible for the purpose of obtaining the results that we expect to follow from the construction of this canal. It is unnecessary for me to go over the evidence. It is in tpye and will be published in pamphlet form. The members of the committee were perfectly amazed at the evidence produced showing the great advantages of this route. Some years ago the Imperial government undertook the construction of the Ottawa and Rideau Canals from Montreal to Kingston. That work did an immense deal of good in its time. It was undertaken not merely as a commercial enterprise, but as a work in the interest of the defences of the country. If it was necessary then, how much more necessary is it now to provide another means should it ever be necessary for the defence of the country to be used for the transportation of vessels from the sea-board to the upper lakes without molestation. Whether we view it as a defensive work or as a commercial undertaking, its advantages are so great that it is not necessary for me to waste the time of the House impressing hon. gentlemen with its importance. It will make Montreal and Quebec the New York and Boston of this country. It will bring trade to this country that will astonish our people. Had this canal been commenced as it was ntended forty or fifty years ago, in all probability it would have been of small dimensions. In those days we did not have the same large ideas we have to-day. At that time a canal of nine feet draft would have been considered sufficient, but now we find that commerce demands a larger channel. This proposed canal will have fourteen feet of water. With that depth of water it will carry an immense volume of traffic. It will be the great highway through the Dominion between the North-west and the sea-board on all-Canadian route, and we will have the proud satisfaction of knowing that both as regards canals and railways we are superior to any other people on the face of the globe. The day is not far distant when this canal will be constructed. When the government see the evidence adduced in this report they will come to the conclusion, I am satisfied, that if they do not accept the proposition of the great contractors who offer to construct the canal as a civil undertaking, they will themselves undertake the construction of it as a national work. The firm of Pearson Company was represented here by Mr. Meldrum, who came all the way from Mexico to appear before this committee and give evidence of that project. I believe the govèrnment will yet take this matter into favourable consideration, and when they do they will find that there is a unanimous opinion in favour of this route—that not a dissentient voice will be raised against the early completion of the canal. The contractors undertake to commence work on this canal immediately. They propose to complete it and have it in full operation in between three and four years, and they do not ask the government to give them a dollar in advance. When the work is in running order they expect that the government will endorse their bonds for twenty years. It is a very favourable proposal. Whether the policy of the government will be in favour of the canal or not, I do not know. If they undertake it as a government work, that is a matter which they alone have the power to decide. However, we have this proposition before us. We know what the cost of the work will be, and it is very easy to ascertain whether one course or the other will be best in the interests of the country. I do not intend to dwell at any great length on this question, but I may say, as far as it concerns the great North-west, no proposition can ever be submitted to the people of this country that will more enure to the settlement of that part of Canada. It will have the effect of settling every acre of land in that fertile country. We know that the North-west is capable of producing an immense quantity of grain. Probably a great many of us here may not live to see it, but our successors will find that this country will be able to produce such quantities of grain as will astonish the world. If this project is to have the effect of settling our great North-west, it should at once be proceeded with. Settlers will not go into that country to the same extent under present circumstances as they would if they had the best facilities for the transportation of their produce. Apart from its value as a short highway from the great lakes to the sea-board, this canal will develop immense water powers, capable of producing electricity for light and power, and will facilitate the development of our vast deposits of iron ore, and lead to the establishment of great manufacturing enterprises. When we see all the advantages to be derived from the building of this canal, we would be wanting in our duty to ourselves and to our country if any of us offered opposition to the construction of this great work. The gentlemen who composed the committee were unremitting in their attention, and criticised very properly every word uttered by the different witnesses. I believe I voice the unanimous sentiment of the committee when I say that they heartily recommend the government to ensure the construction of this great work. I believe the time has arrived when action should be taken for the purpose of bringing this project to a successful issue. The cost of maintenance and operation of the canal should not exceed those of our present canals, and should be considerably reduced, steel and concrete being largely used in construction. The works will be of a very permanent character, and repairs will be slight for years to come. The location of the falls is such that separate locks will be few, and the locks being in chains, the expenses of operation will be reduced to a minimum. The fact that the excavations are largely in rock, and the character of the Ottawa River give absolute assurance that the annual cost for dredging to keep an open channel, breaks of canal banks, &c., will be trifling in the extreme.

An estimate of traffic heretofore made places its total at the opening of the canals and for the first years of their operation at 4,050,000 tons per annum divided as follows:—

	Tons.
I. From Lake Superior.....	750,000
II. do Lake Michigan.	1,800,000
III. do Lakes Huron and Erie (including coal trade)	250,000
IV. Lumber.....	1,000,000
V. Other traffic of local origin	250,000

(These figures include in all cases traffic both ways.)

Further analyses of traffic since this estimate was made lead to the belief that it is in some respects much too low.

Counting one-fourth of this estimated tonnage as west bound, there would remain 562,500 tons east bound traffic, and supposing this to be all grain it would amount to 18,562,500 bushels. When it is considered that a cut off from one and a half to two cents per bushel below any other route can be made by the Ottawa waterway, it will be evident this is far too small.

The figures for wheat passing through the Sault eastward are:

	Bushels.
1870.....	49,700
1880.....	2,105,820
1890.....	16,217,370
1896.....	63,259,463

Other grains:

1894.....	1,545,000
1895.....	8,542,000
1886.....	27,000,000

Showing a total of over 90,000,000 bushels in 1896. In 1895 Minnesota and North Dakota alone produced 126,000,000 bushels of wheat. Manitoba and the North-west will be producing that much more within very few years. It would be safe to estimate that before the end of the first decade of the twentieth century there will be 250,000,000 bushels of grain per annum pouring out from Lake Superior via the Sault. The present importations of the British Isles alone from this continent exceed 175,000,000 bushels per annum. It is not unreasonable to suppose that a large proportion of this grain will be carried by the cheapest route to the seaboard of the Dominion. Instead of 750,000 tons from Lake Superior the traffic might very safely be stated at from 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 tons per annum. To be beyond all question within the mark, it may be placed at 1,000,000 tons. The traffic from Lake Michigan has been estimated at 1,300,000 tons, based on a total traffic of 18,000,000 tons per annum. The immediate success of the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway in attracting to itself grain traffic bound from Chicago and other Lake Michigan points as well as its shipments from New England to the Western States affords proof that upon the opening of the Ottawa waterway, it will find itself practically with a tonnage of freight passing along it limited only by its capacity. Nevertheless to be perfectly safe this may be placed at 1,000,000 tons. This item of 250,000 tons is far too low. Coal costs now for carriage from the boundary to North Bay $2 per ton. When it can be loaded at Lake Erie ports by lumber barges as a return cargo, and laid down anywhere on Lake Nipissing at a cost of not more than sixty cents per ton (including tolls) there will be such a development of the Sudbury and Temiscamingue mineral regions as has not yet been seen. Cheap coal on Lake Nipissing will also facilitate railroad operation through all the northern parts of Ontario and north-western Quebec, and will speedily develop resources beyond the height of land on the Hudson Bay slope. From these resources then (1) Mining operations, roasting ores and smelting processes. (2) Use on railways, and (3) Supply of towns and villages, will soon spring up a large demand for coal. On the other hand the output of all that region will be greatly enhanced. Over 100,000 tons of pulpwood alone are already shipped annually from the Lake Nipissing region. This costs, for transportation, from $2.75 to $3.25 per cord. With water transportation this item would be reduced to about $1 per cord, and it is perfectly safe to say the output would be doubled, or even trebled, at once. Pulpwood from Lake Nipissing alone, will furnish almost at once, more than the total indicated traffic of 250,000 tons. For this reason this item may be safely placed at 500,000 tons, and the figures increase rapidly beyond that. The lumber trade of the Ottawa has been placed at 1,000 tons, but may be safely increased to 1,500,000. The canals of the lower Ottawa have nearly 750,000 tons per annum of a lumber traffic. Considering the vast quantities of additional material made available, the estimate of 1,500,000 for the whole route east and west and including all other forest products is clearly a very moderate one. This item includes building stones, clay, lime, marble, granite, iron ores, galena, phosphates, bulky agricultural products, lumbermen's supplies, etc., etc. The revised estimate appears thus :

		Tons.
I.	From Lake Superior	1,000,000
II.	" Lake Michigan	1,000,000
III.	" Lakes Huron and Erie (including coal trade)	500,000
IV.	Lumber	1,500,000
V.	Other traffic of local origin	500,000
		4,250,000

As to the quantity of water power which will be developed by the company's works, the estimate of Mr. Andrew Bell, C.E., is from 500,000 to 800,000 horse power. Mr. T. C. Clarke, consulting engineer, says :

> The most important change in the situation has come from the development of the electrical transmission of power. The dams designed by me in 1860 were then and are now absolutely necessary to give sufficient depth for navigation. These dams will also be the means of developing and controlling water power for electric appliances. I can state unreservedly that I know of no other place in any manufacturing country, Niagara Falls not excepted, where there is such an amount of water power as this scheme can make available.

Mr. Clarke places the amount of power developed at a minimum of 700,000 h.p. As to its value there can be no question that $20 per h.p. per annum is a reasonable estimate, but for purposes of calculating revenues it is placed at $10. The utilization of this large quantity of water power will no doubt be a matter of time, but it is not to be lost sight of that it will be located on one of the most advantageous water highways in the world, with the materials for various manufactures convenient, and all other conditions the most favourable possible. The immediate demand will be large for the following purposes :—(1) Pulp and paper mills. (2) Flour mills for grinding North-west grain in transit. (3) Electric light and power. (4) Wood-working industries and other manufactures The utilization of at least 100,000 h.p., may be looked for in the near future. The estimate of revenue submitted is based on that amount, although there is evidently no reason why it should be limited to that.

I think I have shown enough to convince hon. gentlemen that this project is one of such great natural importance that not one day should be lost in arriving at a decision that it is to be undertaken either in one way or another. I have no particular desire to recommend what action the government should take in this matter. I have no doubt they will view the evidence produced in this report and consider the advantages. I believe if this canal is undertaken it will place the Dominion in a position second to none in the world and develop enormous water power and increase our ability to transport cheaply the vast rescources of the North-west. We will overshadow any other nation on the face of the earth. We have built the Canadian Pacific Railway and it has been a great success and I want to see another great success in building the Ottawa Canal. I have considered the subject for the last fifty years. I was in the country in my early days. I was conversant with the natural resources of this country, and when my friend the late John Eagan undertook to bring the subject to the notice of the parliament of Canada in the fifty's every man thought he was insane, that he was asking for work that could not be under taken and would tax—I will not say the resources of the British Empire, but it would cost a great deal. However, the government did commence it, and they did excavate a certain amount between the Chats and the Deschênes Lake, but the rock was very difficult to remove with the explosives used at that time. We merely had powder and the cost of excavation was too great, but with the explosives at the present time that rock could be displaced as easily as any rock in the world. But we do not require that. This canal can be built at a comparatively low estimate. The whole work can be done for $17,000,000. That includes $1,500,000 for elevators at the city of Montreal, and $500,000 for the purpose of increasing the size of the locks on the Lachine Canal. If those two items were taken away, we would merely require $15,000,000 to accomplish this great work. That must be considered a very small price, indeed, for work of this magnitude, particularly when I tell you that the Suez Canal, 100 miles in length, cost $1,000,000 per mile, and the Nicaragua Canal cost about the same. On the other side of the line they do not hesitate to build canals at an enormous cost. I hope the government will proceed with this project, and I know that every acre of unoccupied lands in the North-west will be taken up by settlers. I trust that the government will keep these lands in their possession for actual settlers. They ought to do everything they can for the future. We have given our timber lands, the best assets of the country, away for nothing, and I hope a different policy will be inaugurated by this government and that they will do everything they can to retain the properties in their own lands. The question was before us the other day as to the irrigation of lands in the North-west. I think it is well worthy the considertion of any government whether they should not do this irragating themselves. I do not like to see large areas of lands go into the hands of speculators. We have had too much of it in the past and I hope the government will take warning and retain these lands for the benefit of the country. The very moment that the people know that we are going to have this canal, they will go to that country to settle, and the steamers will not be sufficient to carry the people there. We are now in a fair way to get a fast line of steamers and that is another reason why we should construct this canal in order to build up Quebec and Montreal and make them the New York and Boston of this country. They are capable of it. No two ports in the country offer greater advantages, and I hope that Quebec and Montreal will assist the undertaking. I trust that hon. gentlemen here will give us all the aid they can and distribute this information in order to show that we are desirous of doing what we can for the best interest of the country in the future.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I should like to say a few words upon this question before the motion is put.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—An hour?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—The hon. gentleman must recollect that the representation from our western country is small, and I have therefore to do double duty in discussing those questions that affect our interests, and if I tax his patience he must regard my criticisms in that light. I will endeavour to be as short as possible. Coming from the North-west country, it is a matter of very great importance to us to obtain transportation facilities for our heavy produce to the markets of the world, and for that reason I should like to have the privilege of saying a few words upon the benefits that the construction of this canal will be towards the development of our western prairies. Unfortunately, a large proportion of the grain that we produce in the North-west finds its way to the markets of England by way of New York instead of through Canada. That is a most unfortunate position for this country to be placed in. The reason of that is not hard to understand. First of all, our marine is a monopoly. It is a small marine, and it keeps everything within a close preserve. There is not sufficient development of competition within our lake marine to give us low rates The competition in the United States marine is very heavy indeed, and it is constantly increasing in tonnage, and constantly lowering rates. From Port Arthur to Buffalo the United States marine compete for the carriage of our grain and take it at a very low rate in the very large tonnages of vessels that are employed in that service. The United States marine cannot compete in carrying grain from Port Arthur to a Canadian port. That is a monopoly of the Canadian marine, and to the extent that that monopoly exists, and to the extent that the absence of competition exist, are difficulties placed in the way of transporting our grain through Canadian channels instead of sending it around by Buffalo and the Erie Canal. Now, the construction of this canal, as long as our Canadian marine is a monopoly, will always be the subject of the difficulties that I have pointed out in that respect, so far as carrying our Canadian grain is concerned, and I hope it will dawn upon our government that the statement I make is a fact. When it comes to drawing the grain from Duluth or Chicago to a Canadian channel, then the advantages of the canal will be very much increased and will be very manifest. For instance, a United States vessel can carry from Chicago to a Canadian port, while it cannot carry from one Canadian port to another Canadian port.

Now the grain that is delivered at Buffalo every year for transportation to the sea board is 200,000,000 bushels, hon. gentlemen can get through their minds what an enormous amount of produce and traffic that is. A portion of that, of course, is our own, but a great portion of it is from Chicago and Duluth, and all those lake ports in the United States. Now, to get a portion of that 200,000,000 should be the aim of Canada, and it is by the opening up of our transportation facilities, by the construction of this canal that we can assist in accomplishing that object. Supposing by the increase of our grain producing power in the North-west and the continual increase of the producing power of the North-west prairies of the United States, we were to get 100,000,000 bushels of that grain transferred to Canadian channels of transportation, which are really the shortest. Now the carriage of 100,000,000 bushels of grain through this canal at two cents means an expenditure of $2,000,000 between Montreal and Georgian Bay. I would like to give you just a few figures here to show how the cost of carrying has been reduced. In 1868, lake and canal, all water communication, was twenty-five cents per bushel; lake and partially rail, twenty-nine cents a bushel; all rail was forty-two cents a bushel, that is from Chicago to New York. A gradual reduction has gone on from that till 1885, when the reduction was down to 4·55 cents by lake and canal, 9·6 by lake and rail, and fourteen cents by all rail. Since 1885 there has been a still further reduction of these rates. That will show you the great power that water communication has in continually reducing the cost of transportation. Now, that is the evidence given by Mr. Thompson, a very distinguished man in the engineering line in the United States. I would like to draw your attention to another observation he makes, and it is a point I have always tried to impress on hon. gentlemen in regard to our transportation in the west. This is what Mr. Thompson says:

Transportation is a tax. When you make transportation the least bit higher than it should be, it constitutes an unnecessary tax. If by some magic we could bring the grain from your western prairie here to your consumers, the farmer would get more and the consumer would pay less than is the case now. However, here is a special point I wanted to call your attention in speaking of France. They have over there a system of government guarantees of railway earnings, that their earnings will not be less than a certain amount, and we find that in the districts where they have the greatest canal traffic there they also have the greatest railway traffic. To name one specific instance, the Great Northern Railway of France traverses a district in which there is fifty-three per cent of the total voting capacity of France, and that railway is the only oe in the country—speaking of a few years ago—which was not obliged to call upon the government to make good its guarantee. Take another notable instance. I have so many here that I find it is going to take too long. Let me give you one further and noteable instance. During the time the Elbe River in Bohemis was being improved—fifteen years was the time—the steamboat traffic, the river traffic, quintupled; it was five times as great at the end of fifteen years when the improvements were made as it was at the beginning.

That is a point I would like to impress on hon. gentlemen. It is that fact I am arguing continually as to the heavy transportation rates we have to bear. Transportation is a tax upon the farmer and the consumer when it is costing more than it should either by increasing the demands for interest on securities, or by increasing in any form whatever the cost of construction. There is another point I would just like to draw your attention to, and that is the traffic in these western lakes, which, last year amounted to 19,000,000 tons. That is the trade that goes from those western lakes, and the object of the construction of this canal is to divert a portion of that enormous tonnage to our own channels. There is just one more reference I would make to show what other parts of the world are doing in regard to public improvements and enterprises of this kind. The evidence of Mr. James Meldrum, an English engineer who came before the committee, and of whom the hon. mover's motion spoke of, is as follows:

We have recently completed the Blackwell Tunnell for the London county council at a cost of about one million sterling, for which service the president of our company has been created a baronet. We have just completed the drainage of the valley of the city of Mexico by canal twenty-five miles long, and in places ninety feet deep, which has changed the whole area from a swamp into dry land, at a cost of about $10,000,000. At present we are constructing for the Admiralty of Great Britain, Dover Harbour, at a cost of about three millions sterling, which will convey to you that we are on the Admiralty list, which is the highest honour that a contractor can get. We are constructing Vera Cruz Harbour for the Mexican government. We have railway and dock contracts in England amounting, exclusive of the Dover Harbour contract, to three or four millions sterling. We have just completed an arrangement with the Mexican government by which we take over from them the Tehuantepec Railway from the Pacific to the Atlantic. We propose to build large harbours at each end and divert the whole trade of the Pacific to the Atlantic to a new route. More within your own knowledge, we built and are part owners of the Halifax Graving Dock.

The CHAIRMAN.—What did that cost?

Mr. MELDRUM.—I could not at this moment say.

Hon. Mr. POWER.—It is a good work.

Mr. MELDRUM.—I believe it is the only satisfactory graving dock on the east coast of America. Besides what I have mentioned we are at present in negotiation with the Egyptian, Chilian, Argentine and Uruguayan governments for other large works, amounting in all to about fifteen millions sterling.

I merely quote that in order to show you what other parts of the world are doing with this one firm in the construction of canals and public works of this kind, namely, to the amount of £25,000,000 sterling. I cannot speak too highly for the construction of the Ottawa and Huron Canal, not only on acconnt of the transportation facilities which it will afford, but of the towns which will spring up along its route, which our farmers in the west will help to supply. I think one of the engineers who gave evidence before the committee said the water power along the Ottawa was equal to the water power on the Niagara River, and is a great deal better distributed for manufacturing purposes. In addition to that, the evidence as reported here shows that it would increase railway traffic enormously. Then we would have railways built from Lake Ontario across to the Ottawa Canal from all the central towns along the shore of Lake Ontario. All these improvements will follow upon the construction of this canal. It is one of those progressive works that I think should commend itself to the government. We must all appreciate the enterprise, of Mr. McLeod Stewart and others who are promoting this project with all the energy they can put into it; they deserve a great deal of credit in having brought such valuable evidence to the assistance of the government and of this House in considering this measure. The work of this committee and the Yukon committee have brought out a great deal of useful information in regard to the necessity for economical transportation based on sound, economic principles, which a guarantee of bonds will effect, and for which there is a justification in this case. I have very great pleasure indeed in seconding the motion of the hon. gentleman from Rideau.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. senator from Rideau division need not have made any apology for the manner in which he presented the case of this proposed canal before this House and before the country. I think we are all indebted to him for his earnest efforts to give publicity to this question. It is not a new project, it is one that has occupied the minds of the people of this country for half a century—in fact, fifty years ago it occupied a very much larger place in the minds of the people of Upper and Lower Canada than it does to-day, larger than any other project at that time, because it was the route that had always been used in early times as the shortest, safest and best route between Montreal and the upper lakes, and it was always regarded as having advantages over the long route by the lower great lakes and the upper St. Lawrence. The feasibility of this canal cannot be questioned, for the reason that most eminent engineers have thoroughly examined the topography of the country and have given us the result of their information —Mr. Walter Shanly, Mr. T. M. Clark, who stands very high now in the United States as a leading engineer, and Mr. Marcus Smith, and recently Mr. Meldrum, who is engineer for Pearson & Son who propose to construct this canal if encouraged sufficiently by the government of Canada. So that the feasibility of the work is not questioned, and there is abundance of water for the purpose, and the traffic, from the evidence that we have had and the figures that have been given by both the hon. senator who moved this and by the hon. senator from the North-west (Mr. Boulton), is undoubtedly the most growing traffic in the world. There is no traffic anywhere that has grown with such rapidity as the traffic of the great North-west has. I suppose the traffic that passes down through Lake Erie is without exaggeration more than double that which passes through any locality in the world. The Suez Canal does not count in connection with it. The traffic of the Soo Canal is to-day greater than that of the Suez Canal, but when you take the traffic that comes out of Lake Michigan and add that to what comes out of Lake Superior, it is far beyond the traffic of the Suez Canal——

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Five times the amount, I believe.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Any one who stands on the wharfs at Detroit, or the docks at Windsor, and looks at that continual line of magnificent vessels that pass before the eye, witnesses a grand panorama. There is nothing equal to it, and this is a growing traffic. They are to-day building vessels along the shores of Lake Superior on the United States side, in anticipation of the traffic. The traffic actually keeps ahead of them, it is so large and so expansive. The figures that have been given already by the hon. member for Rideau division and the hon. senator from the North-west, indicate the leaps and bounds with which that traffic is developing. So, therefore, I need not say anything for the traffic, because it is a traffic that must grow. As years go by the people of Europe will depend more upon the great west, and more particularly on the great west of the Dominion for their food supply than they have in the past. In addition to the quantity of grain, there are also cattle and minerals and pulp. The manufacture of pulp and paper is becoming a most important one in Canada, and this country is rapidly coming to the front as the best producer of paper. Among the advantages of this route is the saving in distance of 300 miles, but in my judgment there is even a more important matter, and that is the protected navigation. The insurance item of Lake Erie and Lake Ontario and Lake Michigan is a very large tax upon the marine. That insurance is absent on this route from the time the vessels leave the Soo Canal until they discharge their cargoes at Montreal, because it is a land-locked route. It is protected on the north of Lake Huron by thousands of islands, and from the French River to Montreal it is entirely inland. There is no possible danger of marine accidents. The cost of transport has already been given by the hon. gentleman who has spoken, showing what a saving of even two cents or a cent and a half on a bushel of grain would mean to the people of the North-west and to the shipping interests. This canal necessarily will draw the traffic towards the Ottawa route, and therefore if that work could be constructed, it would benefit, not only the shipping interests of Canada and make Montreal and Quebec shipping ports, but it would add to the value of every acre of land in the North-west. It would add so much to the value of every bushel grown and every pound of meat produced on the prairies. So that its advantages are almost immeasurable, and one cannot be too extravagant in expressing the beneficial effect of the construction of that canal. The misfortune has been that in past years Canada has been occupied with projects that had to be carried on where the settled population lived from the earliest period, when one hundred and fifty years ago Upper Canada was settled. The first settlements were along the frontier and there was always a constant opposition to the expenditure of any considerable sums of money towards the interior of the country. Naturally the people wanted the improvements made where they lived. This subject has had behind it some of the first men of Canada ; such men as Sir Francis Hincks, Mr. Drummond and Mr. John Young, of Montreal ; and I might say that the Montreal merchants of that day took a far deeper interest in this proposed canal than the merchants of to-day do. The merchants of to-day seem to have entirely lost sight of the trade of this country and the Ottawa region. I have known of this project for forty years. In the session of 1858 the subject was up before the parliament of Canada, and received a great deal of favour, but at that time we were paying, I think, about eight per cent interest —our credit was not as good as it is to-day—and it was too large a project for the country, then to enter upon. To-day we are face to face with a very large expenditure. We must, of course, finish our St. Lawrence canals. They must be completed at the earliest possible time in order that we may avail ourselves of their advantages. While we fully appreciate the magnitude and importance of this project, we recognize that it must be deferred, at all events for the present. I hope, however, the day is not too far distant when the project may be taken up and meet with the approval of the parliament of this country.

The motion was agreed to.

THE PLEBISCITE BILL.

IN COMMITEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on (Bill 121) " An Act respecting the Prohibition of the Importation, Manufacture and Sale of Intoxicating Liquors."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This subject was thoroughly discussed when the bill was up for second reading. It has also been freely discussed in the press of the country, and I presume hon. gentlemen are thoroughly familiar with the bill. It is a very simple one. It provides machinery for taking a vote on the question whether prohibition ought to be introduced into our legislation.

On clause 3.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I had no opportunity of saying anything on this bill at the second reading, and as this involves what I consider to be a most vicious principle in legislation, I might say a word or two about it. From the parliament of Canada down to the municipalities this principle ought not to obtain. I do not think that Great Britain has had such legislation, and I am perfectly satisfied that the great champion of temperance in England, Sir Wilfred Lawson, has never been able to obtain the consent of the parliament of Great Britain to the principle of submitting such a question to the people. The government of the country or the parliament of Canada representing the intellectual power of the people ought to be able to discuss and settle such questions without submitting them to a popular vote. The government itself should take up this question and decide it, and if they think the people are not sober enough, and that they require some laws for the purpose of regulating the traffic in alcoholic liquors, they ought to submit a measure to parliament. The only memorable case of taking a plebiscite was in the days of Pontius Pilate, and from that time down I do not think there has been any justification for submitting such a question to the people except at parliamentary elections. The idea of an administration submitting a question which they are quite capable of deciding themselves, is, I think, unwise. That is why I contend against it. Moreover, the condition of the people of this conntry is not such as to call for any restrictive legislation. Every one will acknowledge that Canadians are a temperate people. I do not think there is any country in the world where they are so temperate, and if the present laws were carried out fully—the Ontario laws especially were fully carried out, I do not think there would be any necessity for such a bill as this. I contend that the principle of this bill is vicious and not in the interest of the country. It sets a bad example to the lesser bodies such as municipalities.

Hon. Mr. O'DONOHOE—I had not an opportunity at the second reading of the bill to express my views on this subject. It seems to me that it is undertaking a work which the country is unable to carry out. I believe the finances of Canada are not capable of enforcing such a measure in case the people should decide in favour of prohibition. The question is one of the largest with which the people have ever been troubled. We have only to look at the very initiative. We find the government of the country voting $250,000 for the purpose of merely taking the vote yea or nay. That is a small item after all, but a significant item as showing what must be provided in case the vote should be yea. What is involved? First of all the principle of any number of men in the community who may associate themselves together, saying to you or me or any one else: "You shall drink this or you shall not drink this; you shall eat this and no other kind of food." As reasonable would it be to say to them: "You shall not eat beef," as to tell me that I shall not take a glass of beer or a glass of wine, simply because they, in their high estimate of themselves, think that they are able to direct the community as to what they are to consume. The measure is the most preposterous and unreasonable one that ever was proposed. The revenues must suffer a loss, to begin with, of seven or eight millions of dollars. Are the revenues of the country able to bear that? I do not think they are. But is that all? We must consider the properties which have been built up throughout the Dominion under our laws, and with the sanction of the government and people of Canada, in which millions have been sunk. Take those vast distilleries and breweries where hundreds of thousands, yes millions, of money have been expended by their owners. Was it surreptitiously invested? Was it not invested as in other industries with the authority of the law, and are we to say that we shall take away the use of all that property? If we do take it away, it must follow in natural justice that it shall not be in confiscation; there must be a return made to the owners. How much would that amount to, and where would it come from? Add all that to the revenue you are losing in advance; what would it amount to? The hotels would no longer be of any use; the distilleries would stand wrecked and empty; the breweries in like manner, and this thoroughout the whole Dominion, what amount would it sum up? What is the value of the property that the country would be obliged to pay for—because it cannot in ordinary justice, be thought of for one moment that these properties should be confiscated. If the public are so united in opinion as to deprive the owners of the value of these properties, then the public at large must come down and indemnify the owners for the loss to which they are put. Add that to the millions which you are losing, and I ask where the deficiency is to be made up? Are you to get it from the farmer, whose apples cannot be used to make cider? Is the farmer to be called upon to make up this loss of revenue? The farmer will do nothing of the kind, and the attempt to take this vote at such an expense to the people of Canada is in my opinion a very absurd thing. At any rate, if I stand alone, I shall vote against any measure which will enable any portion of the people at large to deprive another portion of the people of the property which they have accumulated under the sanction of law. What sort of a country is it after all?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—A temperance country.

Hon. Mr. O'DONOHOE—We have a temperance country now. The temperance workers, the pulpit and the press have been using legitimate means to promote temperance. The improvement in that line has been vast in the last ten years. I saw the day when almost every farmer in Ontario at harvest took out a barrel of whisky for his men. The government have reduced the consumption by imposing heavy duties, $1.50 a gallon——

Hon. Mr. DEVER—$5 a gallon.

Hon. Mr. O'DONOHOE—The kind I speak of is $1.50. Take again the effect on society. We have our social hours. They are no less important than our business hours. We meet one another, we meet strangers who come here from abroad. Our mode of entertaining them would be very scant and very dry without a glass of wine. It would be perfectly dry and non-communicative, because as an old classic says, "In vino veritas," you get the truth when you treat your friends. In England, where social intercourse prevails, without that medium they would be very uninteresting and very non-communicative. So even in that phase, in a restricted sense, its moderate use is necessary. And it is so in many other lines to which I might allude; but the first one that strikes me as the most important is the one touching the properties which have been realized under the sanction of law and touching the revenue which we must lose. One of our premiers had the manliness to meet a most important delegation of temperance body and say to them in curt language, "It cannot be done. We cannot do without a revenue. We cannot incur the liability which must follow." I heard some of the weightiest and some of the best of that delegation saying, "It is a pleasure to hear such a man give his opinion instead of holding out promises." Not only that, but should prohibition ever carry, all the power of the arms that Canada owns would not protect the Dominion against the smuggling of liquor across the boundary from one ocean to the other. It would require an army under arms to protect Canada against a thing that we are making such a sacrifice to get rid of. I think it is scarcely justifiable, at this stage of the bill and so late in the session, to occupy the House to any greater extent than I have done for the purpose of placing my opinion on record that the measure is one that cannot be carried out; that there is no power in Canada to carry it out even if it were successful at the polls, and if it should be enacted into law, it would remain a dead letter and we would be only throwing to the winds the money of the people.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I am afraid my hon. friend from Toronto has entirely lost sight of the measure which is before us. His remarks would be perfectly applicable on a prohibition bill. Then all he has said will be worthy of consideration and it will give a splendid opportunity for the friends of the cause, like myself, to meet them and show the utter fallacy of many of the statements he has made. I do not propose to occupy the time of the House with a question which is not before us, but will confine my remarks simply to the principle of this bill. I would remind the hon. gentleman from Kingston that the principle of the bill is not before us just now. The House has affirmed the principle of the bill so far as to pass its second reading and send it to the committee to look into its details.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Cannot I move the rejection of the bill at any stage?

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—We are not dealing with prohibition, at any rate. It is well to bear in mind that we are dealing with the question which the government were compelled to bring before the House on account of the very grounds upon which they had appealed to the people, and on which they were sustained. It was one of the planks which they were agreed upon; consequently, they were only fulfilling a duty which they owe to the country which elected them to power to submit this question to the people.

I have already expressed my opinion that it is an unnecessary and useless measure and not the thing which the temperance people ask for, but at the same time, I say, having been adopted by the party as a matter to be submitted to the people, they are carrying out their pledges by submitting the plebiscite bill to parliament, so that in that way it is fairly and properly brought before us. My duty is to do what I can to make the bill effective, in order to carry out the object of it. The design, as announced by those who formed the project in the first instance, is to ascertain the actual opinion of the people of the country with reference to that question of prohibition. Then all these points will come out.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—If it was a plank in the platform and the party were elected, what need is there now of getting the opinion of the people?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—The plank of their platform was that it should be submitted as a plebiscite.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—And they were elected, and it ought to be submitted.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—That is what they are carrying out, and now our business is not to discuss the question of prohibition. It is too large a question and too much requires to be said upon it, especially at this time of the session. But we are dealing with the matter of the submission of the question to the people, and to endeavour to have it done in the best form. I have objections to the form in which it is being done, and my objections are so strong that I propose to move an amendment to the clause now before the committee. I propose to strike out the specific liquors which are mentioned here—wine, ale, beer and cider, in lines 16 and 17. So that it will read: "Are you in favour of the passing of an Act prohibiting the importation, manufacture or sale of spirits and all other alcoholic liquors for use as beverages?"

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Wine is an alcoholic beverage.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—This includes everything that is alcoholic. I would have preferred using the word "intoxicating," but I was told that there would be legal difficulties and therefore I have not used that word. This covers wine, beer and any intoxicating drinks The whole spirit of the bill is involved in the amendment which I propose. Why should these words be in? Every one of these articles can be made and not be intoxicating. There are large quantities of wines made which are not intoxicating. In Ontario it is carefully prepared without alcohol in it, and they have also a kind of beer, ginger ale and root beer which are said to be not intoxicating. There are large quantities of cider made on farms without any intoxicants in them. Of course it can be made intoxicating, but a large quantity is made which is not intoxicating. Why should these words be put in? I hold the insertion of these very words in the bill operates against the very thing you want to ascertain. It will have the effect of keeping many hundreds of people from coming out and expressing their views on this question, because they use cider and these other drinks themselves. Everything you want is ascertained by putting in these words I have mentioned. I cannot see any objection to them; surely the expression "spirits and all other intoxicating liquors" includes everything.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Wine will not keep without fermenting. You cannot make ale without alcohol in it.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I know wine does keep and without alcohol in it. There are plenty of wines made in Ontario without a particle of alcohol in them.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—What part of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I know all about it. If the hon. gentleman had been studying this question as long as I have he would know a little more about it. I think I have said enough to show why the retaining of these words in the bill will have the effect of keeping away thousands of people who would otherwise cast a vote, people who have been using unintoxicating liquors, who will say, "I will not go up and vote for prohibition, because I use cider and beer." If you strike out these words you still have in the bill all you want to get. I am only saying that we should not specify particular drinks of which there are different kinds and which are not intoxicating and which would mislead people.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I move in amendment that those words be not struck out of the clause, but that after the word "manufacture" the words "of malt for exportation" be inserted in the clause. We all know that the manufacture of malt in this country is very extensive, and malt being the basis of liquor, I do not see why it should not be put in as well as cider. Therefore if my hon. friend persists in his amendment I shall move that these words be inserted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We will take one amendment first. The effect of the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Sarnia would be to render the bill almost useless. Unless a man is caught drinking pure whisky he certainly would not be convicted of drinking anything else. You would have to call an analyst on every occasion in order to prove that the liquor was intoxicating. I entirely disagree with him in the interpretation he gives of the fluids. We had this thing all thrashed out twenty years ago when the Act that I introduced before this House was under discussion, and it was then recognized that it was absolutely necessary, if we wanted to prohibit the use of articles that were intoxicating, to name all those capable of intoxicating. Therefore, we named in the bill just the articles that are named here. We named more, in fact. We named brandy, rum, whisky and other spirituous liquors, wine, beer, ale, porter, cider and other vinus or fermented liquor, and that was very much broader. The hon. gentleman is not correct in his definition of the word "wine." Wine means a fluid that has been fermented; otherwise it is grape juice. I use very large quantities of grape juice in my house, some of it made in California and Jersey, and other parts of the country. It all goes under the name of grape juice, and of course it is unfermented. It has to be hermetically sealed. There is alcohol in it if exposed to the air, and the same way with regard to cider.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Would the hon. gentleman be able to keep grape juice under this bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes, there is no fermentation in it. It has to be used when it is once exposed to the air. You cannot keep it over any time.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—You must drink the whole bottle when you open it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will keep three or four days. All those various fluids named in this bill contain a certain percentage of alcohol, and cider contains much more alcohol than very many of the other fluids. I have seen men crush apples and hand out a glass: that would be the pure juice of the apple

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When does it become cider?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Unless it is put up, just as the unfermented grape juice is put up, there are qualities within it which cause fermentation and develop alcohol in a very short time. We know very well that in order to keep it the farmers allow it to go through the fermenting process. You must do it, and it only can be kept by the infusion of a certain proportion of alcohol.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—It would become vinegar.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. If the hon. gentleman's proposal were to carry, the bill would be absolutely useless unless you caught a man drinking whisky. I will read from Mulhall, who is a very high authority on the subject, about the alcohol in various drinks. The following are the percentages:—beer, 4 p.c., porter, 4¼ p.c., ale, 7¼ p.c., cider, 8½ p.c.

A man would go before a magistrate and say, "That is only cider produced from the apple. I have only had it a day or two and it is not fermented." Then the other percentages are:—Mozelle, 9 p.c., tokay, 10 p.c., rhine wine, 11 p.c., bordeaux, 11 p.c., and the other wines become stronger. What would be the effect of the amendment: we would lose the revenue and the law would be inoperative. You would find lots of people voting for it and saying, "I drink nothing but wine and I can support that bill because it does not cover wine." Witnesses would come and swear that they were simply drinking wine. You would find many persons who would say, "That has no effect upon me. I can drink a bottle of it and it will not intoxicate me." A Frenchman could drink a large quantity of that French wine and it would not affect him.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—The hon. gentleman fails to see that before a prohibitory law is passed it must provide some specific definition as to what would constitute an intoxicating drink. I would have no objection if he thought it necessary to have the word "fermented" inserted in the clause. My impression was that the expression in the bill would cover everything.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—When I rose a few minutes ago I simply asked the hon. gentleman from Sarnia, when he refers to the spirit of the bill, whether it was his intention to interfere with the spirit as well as all other spirits.

The amendment was lost on a division.

The clause was adopted.

On the 6th clause.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would like some explanation as to this clause before it is passed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is proposed that the franchise under the bill that we are now considering, or that has been passed by this chamber, if not changed by the other House, will define the franchise under which the vote will be taken. It is intended to be that class of voters who have the right to vote for the election of members of parliament the same as the election of members to the House of Commons.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is this bill dependent upon the passage of the Franchise Act, which has been before us? If so, and the Francise Act should not be passed, then what becomes of this bill? Can it be submitted to the people.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would cost another quarter of a million or three hundred thousand.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not the question I asked. I want a simple answer to the question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I could not answer the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman will quite understand that the government have not defined a policy for all possible circumstances which may arise. We cannot anticipate what may be done. It is a question which it is impossible to answer.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That seems to me to be a most extraordinary position for the minister who has this bill in charge.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman wants an answer to a hypothetical question.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not a hypothetical question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman says supposing that bill does not pass, what becomes of this bill? Then I say the only alternative would be for us to have a revision of the roll, and I think that would not be justified. I do not think we would be justified in submitting the qustion to the people unless we had a proper franchise. It would neither be in the interests of the temperance people, nor would it be a fair expression of the people of Canada to have the vote taken on the franchise of 1894, because the changes have been very numerous. I gave an instance of it, where there were 9,000 people struck off the roll and 6,000 added. It would make a difference probably of twenty-five per cent in all the constituencies of Canada, and the government would not be justified in proposing that this bill should be submitted on the electoral lists of 1894.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am much obliged to the hon. gentleman for the lecture. I asked a simple question, and it was not at all necessary to introduce an argument as to what the government should do and what they should not do. The simple question I asked was, whether, under the provisions of this bill, it could be submitted to the people without the passage of the Franchise Act. That is all I asked, and the reason I asked that is from its reading. It reads:

> For the purpose of submitting the question to the electors and taking the answer thereto and ascertaining the result of the vote, the same proceedings, as nearly as may be, shall be had as in the case of a general Dominion election under the Dominion Elections Act and the North-west Territories Representation Act and their amendments.

If it stopped there one could understand exactly what the provisions of the bill were, but it says:

> And the Franchise Act of 1898 shall be subject to the provisions of this Act and of any regulations, orders or instructions made by the Governor General.

And so on. If I understand the answer of the hon. gentleman aright, it is that this bill cannot be submitted to the people unless the Franchise Act, which has been before both Houses of parliament, but not yet finally passed, becomes law. Is that what I understand the hon. gentleman to say?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I said I could not announce any policy in advance, because it has not been considered.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not a question of policy, but of fact.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is predicated on the assumption that the Franchise Act now before parliament shall be passed. If part of the assumption falls to the ground, I am quite unable to say what the policy of the government will be. I was giving the reasons why I thought it would be very improper for the government to submit the plebiscite on the franchise of 1894.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman must draw the distinction between the explanation he gives and the question I asked. The policy might be that they would not submit it owing to the reasons he has given. But I want to know whether this law compels the passage of the Franchise Act before the plebiscite is taken, and whether under this bill the government can submit it if the Franchise Act is not passed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think the government could—certainly not in the shape which this clause stands at present, because if the Franchise Act did not pass, this bill would be laying down a franchise which did not exist.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the view I should take of it, and it is only another illustration of the diversity of opinion which exists between members of the one cabinet. My hon. friend has told us, with a good deal of circumlocution, that under this bill you cannot submit the question of the plebiscite unless the Franchise Act is passed. But the Minister of Railways and Canals, who stands high in his profession, laid down a principle and gave an opinion diametrically opposed to the view held by the Secretary of State. When the bill was under discussion in the Commons the question arose as to the constitutionality of the enactment which delegates the powers that the Dominion has as to the local legislature. That was a legal question which was then under discussion, and this question of submitting the Plebiscite Bill to the people arose incidentally in that discussion. I will read what the hon. gentleman said and also the remarks which led up to the extracting from the Minister of Railways and Canals the opinion he gave. Discussing the legal question, Mr. McNeill said :

> Under these circumstances, I think the point made by my hon. friend is a very grave point indeed, that this Act is needlessly encumbered with that legal difficulty. I do not see any reason why it should be made dependent upon another Act which is not yet in existence, and which may not be constitutional when it does pass this House and the other chamber. According to the principles of hon. gentlemen opposite, I do not see why that is necessary at all. To those of us who object to the franchise of this House being made over to the local legislatures, I could understand that there might be more reason in the position the hon. gentlemen have taken : but in view of the fact that the government hold that the franchises of the provinces should govern. I do not see why they should not have provided that the vote should be taken on the local franchises. I do not see why they should have placed this bill in the peril in which it will stand when it does pass, by tacking it on to a bill which has not yet become law, and which when it does pass this parliament may prove to be ultra vires. They have the franchises of the provinces to go upon, if they wish, and, that being their principle, I do not see why they should not adopt it.
> The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Hon. gentlemen opposite have been complaining a good deal that their strictures on this portion of the clause have not been replied to at all on this side of the House.

Then he proceeds to argue the legal question, and finally he comes down to the question which is more immediately before the Senate, and says :

> There is no question at all that on principle it is quite proper and reasonable in every way ; and the reason on which it is founded is this, that these Acts will speak from the moment they receive the assent of the Crown. They are not Acts until they receive that assent ; and when this Act is put beside the Franchise Act of 1898, it is eminently proper that the one should refer to the other.
> Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Suppose it does not receive the assent?
> The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then no harm is done. If there is no Franchise Act of 1898 in existence, this bill will not be injured in any way ; but if the Franchise Bill does become law, it would be an immense advantage that it should be referred to in distinct terms in this bill. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) said it was assumed on this side that the bill would be just as well without the Franchise Act of 1898 as with it. I have not heard that statement made nor am I prepared to make it, but I am prepared to say that it will be entirely effective, even if the Franchise Bill does not pass, because we have provided in the section 6 that the proceedings to be taken shall be those provided in the Dominion General Election Law. I do feel that my hon. friends cannot be serious in spending so much time in making so many speeches upon a question which, if they were to take the trouble of consulting some one who has knowledge of the law, they would be advised has nothing in it.

Mr. CRAIG. I am glad to hear the hon. Minister of Railways say that if the Franchise Bill does not pass, it will not affect this measure.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say that in that case you can take the vote under the Dominion General Election Law, according to this bill.

Mr. CRAIG. I am glad to hear that statement, because I have heard considerable talk to the effect that if the Franchise Bill did not pass, that would block this bill, and it would not be effective. The hon. Minister of Railways says that will not be the case.

I will not read any more. I wanted particularly to show that there is a diversity of opinion between the members of the cabinet. If you peruse this debate a little further, you will find that an opinion was endeavoured to be extracted from the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Sir Louis Davies, but he was too canny and refused to give an answer, and told the House that Mr. Craig and Mr. McNeill must have misunderstood the hon. gentleman; but his language is so clear and plain that there is no doubt as to the meaning he intended to convey. If this clause is passed and we are to accept the opinion of the Secretary of State, then this bill will not become effective if the Franchise Act is not passed. I want to intimate to my hon. friends opposite, in order that their pledges to the people, and their supposed intention to carry out these pledges in reference to the Plebiscite Bill shall not be bulked, if we can stop it, that if the Franchise Act does not become law, for reasons which it is not necessary for me now to intimate, we shall reserve the third reading of this bill until we ascertain whether that the government accept the Senate amendment. If they reject our amendments and send the bill back to the Senate, and the Senate think proper not to recede from their amendments and the bill falls, then I shall deem it my duty, if the Senate will concur, to move the bill back to a Committee of the Whole, in order to make provisions for the taking the plebiscite vote exclusively upon the local franchises irrespective of this bill. By that means we shall avoid the bugbear of expense, to which my hon. friend referred, of having a revision of the list through the whole country in order to ascertain the opinion of the people on the question now before us. I think there will be no difficulty in having such amendments made to the bill as will give the government the opportunity of submitting the question to the people, whether the Franchise Bill passes or not, and without incurring the large expenditure which, I admit, would have to be incurred by the revision of the lists of the whole Dominion. I thought it proper to intimate to the hon. gentleman the course that I think the Senate should take under the circumstances to which I have referred; I am, therefore, not prepared to vote for any amendment to this bill. I leave it to the government to take the full responsibility of the bill which they are submitting, and while I say that, I am fully in accord with the sentiments of my hon. friend from Sarnia. If I were to express an opinion, which would perhaps be improper for me to express, I would say that the addition of the word "cider," was included among alcoholic drinks for the express purpose of having the bill defeated.

At Six o'Olock the Senate adjourned.

Second Sitting.

The Speaker took the Chair at Eight o'Clock.

Routine proceedings.

THE PROHIBITION PLEBISCITE.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed, in Committee of the Whole, consideration of Bill (121) "An Act respecting the Importation, Manufacture and Sale of Intoxicating Liquors."

(In the Committee.)

On clause 8.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL moved in amendment to strike out the words "wine, ale and beer," in lines 19 and 20.

The amendment was lost on division, and the clause was adopted.

On clause 9.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I have an amendment to offer which is a mere correction of an error in the bill. If the Chair will permit me, I would like to make a slight alteration in line 31 and after the second word "at" insert the word "also." This was suggested to me by an eminent lawyer in Toronto as being necessary. He points out that as it is, it would seem to imply that the persons appointed must necessarily be the same at the counting-up as at the polling places, and it is not intended to be so. Then there is another amendment which ought to be made, and which is also merely a correction. You will observe that in this clause the word "questions" is plural and everything about it is plural. Now all through the bill elsewhere it is one question. I want to insert the word "a" in line 31 and strike off the letter "s" from the words "answers" and "questions."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—At the time the bill was drawn, it was proposed to have two questions, and this clause was not altered when the second question was struck out. The amendments proposed by the hon. gentleman are merely clerical, and I think there is not likely to be any mistake as to the understanding of the clause. I think they may be treated as clerical errors.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I desire to say that I have no opposition to the bill. The government will take the responsibility and I will do all I can to aid them.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I should like to ask the government, now that this vote will be taken in the same manner that members are elected to the House of Commons, whether that implies a majority of the votes cast will, if in favour of prohibition, decide the matter. A member of the House of Commons is elected by a majority vote. Now I understand this election is to be on the same principle.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. The only resemblance that it bears to the House of Commons election is that the electoral districts are the same, but certainly the result does not carry with it the consequences that a bare majority in the House of Commons carries. A majority of one may carry in the House of Commons, but I do not think the government would be quite justified in passing a prohibition bill if the majority was so narrow.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see this, that the object of taking a vote is not to shirk responsibility in the matter. It is to ascertain public sentiment and whether that public sentiment is strong enough, in case the government should submit such a measure, to sustain the bill. Now the vote polled might be very small, so small as to be no indication, taken by itself as a simple majority vote, of what the public sentiment was. The public sentiment might be gathered from the indifference of the population rather than from their active approval of prohibition; and the action that is to be taken upon the vote will certainly depend in a large degree upon the interest the people take, and the extent to which the voting population come out and support a proposition in favour of prohibition.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I should like to ask another question: may we expect this vote to be taken during the summer, or what time may we expect it to be taken?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am unable to say. The government have not fixed any time yet. There are many things to be considered. In the first place, we have to see whether the Franchise Bill will pass or not.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The announcement which the members of the government have made must be very comforting to the opposers of this bill. There is no question that if a majority is recorded against prohibition, the opponents of the measure will have their way and they will have no prohibition, and we have just had the assurance that if the majority is small there will be no prohibition. There is to be no prohibition unless the majority is overwhelming.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

PUBLIC OFFICERS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (T) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting public officers."

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—As this bill is but a very slight modification of the law as it stands, I suppose there will be no objection to our going into committee at once and I moved that Rule 41 be suspended in so far as it relates to this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hon. gentlemen will see that the only object of the bill is to furnish greater facilities to officers who are entrusted with public money to give security for the proper discharge of their duties and the fulfillment of their trust.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What is the intention of the government with regard to subsection three as to the establishment and maintenance of a fund? Is it the intention of the government to deduct from the salaries of public officers a certain amount towards the establishment of this fund?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is one mode in which procedure might be had, but if the public officer thinks best to give security by some other way than by the Guarantee Company he has the power of doing it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is an addition. First of all the official is compelled to give security as may be directed by the Order in Council. In the second place provision is made for the deduction of premiums in case of the government being called upon to pay a premium, and in the third place a proposal seemingly made to establish a fund out of which any loss may be made good to the government by reason of the default of the official. Now, what I desire to know is, has any scheme been adopted by the government in conjunction with this proposal whereby certain deductions will be made from the salaries of public officers for this purpose?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—None yet.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The government are simply taking power to devise such a scheme if they deem it advisable?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Quite so.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—As the law stands at present, before this bill is passed, is it not the case that public officers can give security just in the same way as provided here? I know many years ago that officers in our province give the security of these companies for the due performance of the duties of their office, and I do not see anything in the twenty-second clause of this bill differing from the practice which has hitherto prevailed respecting the security.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is a little more elaborate, that is all.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It adds a number of things. As I understand it the subsections are new.

The clause was adopted.

On subsection 3.

The Governor in Council may from time to time make regulations for the establishment and maintenance of a fund to be derived from moneys contributed by, or deducted from the salaries or pay of, the persons concerned, wherewith to make good to the Crown any loss sustained by reason of the failure of any person required to give security as aforesaid to duly discharge the duties of his office, trust or employment, or to duly account for public moneys entrusted to him or placed under his control.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I fail to see the necessity for this subsection. The first portion of the clause provides for the acceptance of a bond of the Guarantee Company. That is right enough. If the party to the bond fails to pay the amount of the premium, the Governor in Council must advance the premium, and provision is made, as I understand it, for a deduction, monthly, out of a man's salary to create a fund to recoup the government for the advance they have made. Now, supposing you take a guarantee bond for $1,000, where a man is getting $400 a year, you will have to deduct out of the $400 monthly, or semi-monthly as the case may be, so much of his salary. What necessity is there for this clause when you have the power conferred in the second clause?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—A number of men in the public service may say this: these guarantee companies are making a considerable amount of money at our expense. The risk is not as great as the amount of the premiums calls for. We would prefer that an independent organization should be had of those in the government service, and that the government should take a fair sum from each man's salary as a security instead of requiring us to go to a guarantee company. You have a provision of that sort corresponding with this 3rd subsection in the Post Office Act, but it does not apply to any other than the Postal Department.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In other words, you become your own guarantee company.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Quite so. Officials may say, "you incur practically no risk.

The deduction from our salary is too large." It is merely a method of securing the government with as little expense as possible.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—That is scarcely the intention of subsection 3. It appears to me the object of that clause is, in the event of any person holding a public office not accounting for the money entrusted to him or not discharging faithfully the duties of his office, under subclause 3 of the bill the Crown is authorized to retain any money in its hands for the purpose of making good the loss which they sustained through his malfeasance.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Out of this fund that is made up by all the clerks.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I understand this clause to apply to those who have failed to give other security. I think the words are very plain. I take it that this is another means of the government employees providing their own guarantee and establishing a fund by which they will give security.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that the preceding clause amply protects the government against any loss that may be inflicted. The guarantee company will make up the loss. This is another method to attain the same result.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is this confined exclusively to those who have to give security, or can any member of the civil service, whether required to give security or not, contribute to the fund? If so it is an investment of money, and are dividends paid to them, or is this confined to those who give security?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—To those who have to give security.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—It seems to me if it could be carried out it would be better to have these clerks furnish the security of a guarantee company.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Five hundred clerks may say "the guarantee company is making money out of us. We will unite and there will be a deduction from our salaries to form a fund, and in the event of any of us becoming liable to pay the Crown for default, it comes out of the fund." It requires a less assessment on the salaries than the premiums of a guarantee company, because the object of the company is to make a profit.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I do not agree with the view taken by the hon. Secretary of State, because I think it would be impossible for the government to maintain a fund of this kind for any less consideration than the guarantee companies charge for the amount they give security for. They perform that service for an exceedingly reasonable consideration and I am very sure no arrangement could be made to carry it out for less money.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me to be a good provision, for this reason. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island thinks that the government cannot carry the principle out any cheaper than a guarantee company. My impression is they can. They have a staff of officers now, and there will be no additional work to the staff of the department. Consequently they will not have to provide for expenses of clerks, president, office rent, taxes, etc., nor to pay dividends to stockholders. They ought to do it for one-half or at most two-thirds of the amount charged by the companies

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When they get a certain sum—say ten or twenty thousand dollars—they can stop paying any more until the fund is drawn on.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. VILLENEUVE, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (71) "An Act further to amend the Weights and Measures Act."

(In the Committee.)

On clause 2.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY moved that lime be added to the list at eighty pounds to the bushel.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I cannot very well accept my hon. friend's amendment. If he had spoken to the department about it——

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The moment the bill came out I did.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I brought the matter to the notice of the Department of Inland Revenue and they said it was impossible to consider it this year—that in the House of Commons some seven or eight articles had been pressed, and the department had to refuse them all, but another year they would take the matter up and deal with them.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—There is no other article in which greater injury is done to the people than in that article of lime. In New Brunswick it used to be sold by the cask—five bushels to the cask, weighing 400 pounds, and there never was any difficulty about it. In the North-west lime is bought at the kilns by the carload and retailed by the dealers.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Take a bushel of burned lime that is unslacked, how much does it weigh ?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Just eighty pounds to the bushel, and when slacked it weighs forty pounds. It is a great injury to purchasers.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is a good deal of difficulty about this question of lime. When it is freshly burned I dare say my hon. friend has correctly stated the weight of a bushel of lime. There is a process of slacking called air slacking, and it becomes so compact when slightly slacked in that way that it weighs more than unslacked lime. Care should be taken in fixing the weight of a bushel of lime. In the early process of air slacking it crumbles away and fills all the crevices and it weighs more when partially air slacked than when fresh.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—My hon. friend is entirely wrong. A bushel of lime when air slacked will occupy double the space it will when unslacked.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When slacking advances a little further it will swell, but the first effect of air slacking is rather to shrink it in bulk than to increase it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We should have some positive information on the subject.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I am very positive.

The CHAIRMAN—What kind of lime does the hon. gentleman refer to, slacked or unslacked?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I mean burned lime for masonry purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman who has charge of the bill tell us if there are many changes in the weights in the sixteenth section from wheat down to bituminous coal ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think nothing except flax seed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Flax seed is to weigh fifty-six pounds.

The subsection was adopted.

On clause 2.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no objection to have the weight of a bag of potatoes fixed at eighty pounds in Quebec or anywhere else, but I object to having a different standard in different sections of the country. If a bag is to weigh eighty pounds, let it be eighty pounds in all parts of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. MASSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We do not want ninety pounds in Ontario, and Nova Scotia and other parts of the Dominion, and eighty pounds in Quebec. I think it would be better to strike out the words "province of Quebec."

Hon. Mr. McKAY—Oh, no, we do not want any of that stuff down with us.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think there should not be two standards of weight in any two provinces. There should be one standard in the whole Dominion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A bag is not a standard.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You are making it a standard by law.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—For one province.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—And a sugar bag at that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It may be in the interest of the sellers of potatoes in the province of Quebec to have a smaller quantity than any other place. There is no regulation for selling by the bag in any part of the country. The presumption, when you get a bag, is that you get a bushel and a half.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—We do not sell by the bag.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They sell by weight in the west.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—By the bushel.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Well they give you 60 lbs. to the bushel.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—The farmer gives you the bushel measure filled and it is not weighed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He does not in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. VILLENEUVE—A bushel of potatoes does not weigh 60 lbs.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. VILLENEUVE—No, and in the district of Montreal farmers very often come to market with bags of potatoes, but they do not weigh 90 lbs., and I am sure that 80 lbs. is a fair weight for a bushel and a half.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. VILLENEUVE—Your potatoes may be heavier in Prince Edward Island, because that province has a great reputation for potatoes. But I can vouch for the fact that a bushel and a half of potatoes never weighs ninety pounds. Perhaps the Montreal potatoes are not so weighty as the potatoes of other provinces, but I think there should be a general weight everywhere. If you wish to do justice to the farmers who come to Montreal with twenty-five or thirty bags you should fix the weight at eighty pounds.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is not there a by-law in Montreal that a bag shall weigh ninety pounds ?

Hon. Mr. VILLENEUVE—Yes, and that is the reason why the farmers have been fined for having bags of potatoes under that weight. I think that we should fix the weight for Quebec at eighty pounds.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What about your by-law ?

Hon. Mr. VILLENEUVE—They will amend their law and make it eighty instead of ninety.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They must want ninety pounds to the bag.

Hon. Mr. VILLENEUVE—I do not see why the people of Quebec want to have more than a bushel and a half when they buy a bushel and a half. I see that the bill provides that oats shall be thirty-four pounds. Good oats will always weigh more than thirty-four pounds. The farmers when they are going to market will weigh the oats and make the bushel weigh thirty-four pounds.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I cannot agree with my hon. friend that potatoes weigh less than 60 lbs. to the bushel. I have had a good deal of experience in potatoes and I come from a potatoe country where we sell nearly all our potatoes by weight, and our farmers infinitely prefer to sell potatoes at 60 lbs. than by measuring because they get more money than they would if they sold by measure. They are sold to the starch factories by weight, and 60 lbs. is the standard they sell by. My objection to this measure is that we are establishing a market standard for one province different from others, and we are establishing a new standard. There is no such thing as a bag recognized as a general standard, whatever there may be locally. We are only establishing it for one province ; we are not only establishing it as a standard there, but we are establishing an erroneous standard because it is under the assumption that a bag of 80 lbs. contains a bushel and a half, when it certainly does not. I regret that any such clause as this must be passed. I hope some other way will be found of meeting the convenience of the market of Quebec than by passing this clause. My hon. friend from Calgary and I walked down to the market in Ottawa, and told one of the dealers about the suggestion that was before the House, that a bag of potatoes should be 80 lbs. and we told him it would not apply in Ottawa, but would apply in Hull. He was somewhat amazed, and his amazement was still greater when we told him that we were making such a law as that. I really wish there were some other way of meeting the difficulty than this absurd proposition.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not see the difficulty at all. You have no such thing as a bag as a standard of measure; nevertheless, they are as a matter of convenience selling by the bag and everywhere else excepting in Quebec they are 90 lbs. for a bushel and a half. In Quebec they wish to sell by the bag and the bags do not hold 90 lbs, and they wish that the weight of a bag of potatoes shall be fixed at 80 lbs. That does not compel anybody to buy by the bag unless he wants to. You may say "I will buy your potatoes by the bushel, and pay so much a bushel." What possible harm can there be in saying that a bag of potatoes in Quebec shall be 80 pounds? If I go to Quebec to buy a piece of land, I find there that I do not get an acre; it is an arpent, which contains something less than an acre. Does my hon. friend say there is great mischief done because the mode of measurement in Quebec is different from the other provinces? If it becomes the custom, the law should recognize it, as a matter of convenience, and it seems to me no harm is done anywhere else, because this is a local law, and does not apply anywhere outside of the province of Quebec, and it meets the practice and custom of the province of Quebec. It has grown out of the practice of the city council in Montreal. They passed by-laws imposing a fine on the population for offering less than 90 pounds as a bag of potatoes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is not much analogy in the illustration about the arpent and the acre of land. If you buy an arpent of land you are not going to take it away with you into another country, but if you buy potatoes you can take them anywhere. In the markets of Ontario the same system prevails as in Quebec. When at home I have been in the habit of doing my own marketing, and I venture to say that if you go to that market next Saturday, you will find hundreds of farmers on the market all selling potatoes by the bag, and if you ask them if it contains a bushel and a half, 90 lbs., they will tell you that they do not know. If you say "I will give you so much a bushel," they will say "No, you can have the potatoes by the bag." They do not break the law, because they do not sell by the bushel. They say "There is a bag of potatoes; you can have it for 75c.," or 60 cents, whatever the price may be. That practice prevails as much in Ontario as it does in Quebec, and I venture the assertion that 99 out of 100 bags of potatoes will not contain 90 lbs. weight each.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But is there a by-law of the corporation providing that the bag shall contain 90 lbs? The city of Montreal has adopted such a by-law and it is to overcome this local regulation that this bill is introduced.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then you propose to interfere with the local law. A few days ago you were endeavouring to uphold the local laws. What right have you to interfere with a matter of this kind, if it be a local regulation for a particular district. Your principles are adapted to the circumstances, I care very little about the clause, but I repeat that the same system of selling prevails in Ontario—I do not speak for the other provinces—and you might just as well say that a bag of potatoes in Ontario shall contain 90 pounds or 80 as to say that it shall be so in any other province.

Hon. Mr. POWER—These laws are made for the convenience of the population chiefly, and this is not the first time an exception has been made in the province of Quebec. The very next section of the Weights and Measures Act, section 17, reads as follows:

> In the province of Quebec the following shall be the standard weight for hay and straw unless the same shall be sold by the ton, or unless it appears the parties to the contract agree to the contrary. A bundle of timothy, clover or other hay, 15 pounds; bundle of straw, 12 pounds.

In that province they adopt certain weights for certain things, which they do not in other provinces.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I think it is absurd for us to adopt municipal regulations in Dominion Acts. We have fixed by this law, and also the previous law, a certain standard for potatoes, 60 pounds to the bushel. That should be the standard all over the Dominion. It should not be interfered with by making another standard. That clause in the bill is sufficient for the purpose of regulating the weight of potatoes and there is no occasion to say how much a bag of potatoes shall contain. If we look at this bill a little more closely we shall see the absurdity of it:

> In the province of Quebec, when potatoes are sold or offered for sale by the bag, the bag shall contain 80 pounds.

Now, a man has, unfortunately, a bag which will not contain 80 pounds, a bag which will only contain 60 or 70 pounds. He is subject to a fine under this Act. He cannot offer his potatoes for sale in any bag which does not contain 80 pounds. Then the penalty clause reads as follows:—

> Every person who violates any provision of this section shall be liable, for a first offence, to a penalty not exceeding twenty-five dollars, and for each subsequent offence, to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars.

That shows the absurdity of passing a law regulating the size of a bag of potatoes, saying that it shall contain at least eighty pounds. There is a regular standard fixing the weight at sixty pounds to the bushel and we should adhere to that and not mix it up with any other weight, which will only confuse the matter and make it different in the different provinces of the Dominion. In our province there is no such thing as selling potatoes at eighty pounds or ninety pounds to the bag, or any fixed bag weight. They are brought into the market weighed, and then divided by the number of pounds, and in that way the number of bushels is ascertained, and paid for accordingly. Sixty pounds should be the one standard all over the Dominion, whether they come in bags, car loads or cart loads.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It does not seem to me that we are disturbing a standard. We are fixing the standard of a bag of potatoes. We are not interfering with or disturbing the sixty pound standard at all. If a large contract is made with parties, the contract would be based on the bushel standard, but as a matter of convenience to farmers coming to the markets of Montreal, who bring their potatoes in bags, we have fixed this standard. It is pretty hard that the farmers should be fined under a by-law of the corporation—which I think is ultra vires—declaring that there shall be a standard bag. They have no right to create standards at all. This by-law says that no farmer shall expose a bag of potatoes on the market unless it weighs ninety pounds. I think that by-law is ultra vires.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Why not reduce it to the pounds and then there would be no trouble?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Thirteen petitions were presented to the government from farmers around Montreal and they felt very much aggrieved over the matter. You know you are not going to buy ninety pounds in a bag. You are going to buy what is convenient to the farmer. As the hon. leader of the opposition says, he buys a bag of potates on the market. There may be a few pounds over the standard weight or a few pounds less; but at the same time nobody ever quarrels with the farmer. If you were buying one hundred bushels of potatoes you would probably weigh them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You might just as well provide that a cart or a wheel barrow contain so many pounds.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have already passed exceptional legislation of that kind in the province of Quebec, where they have peculiar customs. Why should we not concede that? It does not interfere with any other part of Canada. The bushel remains where it is. The question only arises where a purchaser chooses to buy a bag of potatoes without having it weighed, and then it must contain eighty pounds. Nobody is being cheated by it. We say that no man shall offer a bag of potatoes unless it weighs eighty pounds.

The subsection was adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have something more serious which I propose to add to the clause, which might be made another subsection if the minister deems it advisable. It is in connection with the weight of wheat and other grains and the manner in which they shall be tested. I propose to add to this clause the following words:

> And no weighing machine used for weighing or determining the weight of any of the articles mentioned in section 16 shall be of less certified capacity than 60 pounds avoirdupois.

My reason for asking the consent of the Senate to make this addition to the bill is, that there is a certain machine used for the testing of the weight of wheat, and other grains the practical result of which is to lose to the farmer a certain amount on almost every bushel of grain that he sells to the merchant or to any person. In looking at the report of the weights and measures, I find that as far back as 1880 the attention of the Department of Inland Revenue was called to the dissatisfaction with the machine which was used for testing the weight of wheat. The inspector then called the attention of the Inland Revenue Department to complaints which had been made, and asked whether the machine then used came within the meaning of the Inland Revenue Act. The third paragraph of Mr. Brunel's answer reads as follows :

As this is a very nice operation, I think it would be well if the owner of these instruments were to send at least one of them to the department, in order that it may be accurately tested here, as a verification of the correctness of your method of testing.

The question was subsequently referred to the police magistrate, and a decision was arrived at the point as to whether it came within the meaning of the Act. But what I want to call your attention to, more particularly is the experience of the Inspector of Weights and Measures. He said, in writing to the department :

1st. Acting on the opinion expressed in your letter of 1st inst., number 25000, I have seized five grain testers from two firms of grain merchants, and laid information against them for a violation of section 28 of the Weights and Measures Act, of 1879.
2nd. The cases will be brought before the police magistrate in this city on Monday next.

Then the next paragraph is the most important :

3rd. I have taken the course above referred to for the purpose of making a test case, and because I am convinced that I shall be able to prove that great injustice is being done to the farming community by the use of these grain testers. The injustice will appear when I state the following case—which is one of hundreds. A has barley for sale which, before leaving home, he tested by his imperial bushel and found it to weigh 49 lbs. to the bushel ; it is of a bright colour and clean—cleanness, colour and weight being the qualities sought for. B offers to buy it from him, agreeing to pay him 63c. if it weighs 47 lbs., 65c. if it weighs 48 lbs., and 67c. if it weighs 49 lbs. to the bushel. B weighs it with his grain tester, which being adjusted to the Winchester measurement, does not contain as much grain as if adjusted to the imperial measurements and A's grain, which at home weighed 49 lbs. to the bushel, weighs only 47 lbs., and he has to take four cents a bushel less for his barley than its market value.

That is the experience of the inspectors.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Will my hon. friend give the date of that letter he read ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is in the official report on weights and measures of 1880, and it will be found on pages 42 and 43. The difficulty is I believe this, that by using the grain tester you take one-sixteenth part of a bushel, and in filling it the air displaces to a certain extent, a part of the grain, and consequently it will not weigh as much as it would if it were in a bushel measure. You take sixteen of those, which make a bushel, and the tests which have been made prove a loss to the seller. This is the result of the test on a bushel of wheat, after measurement in a bushel measure, made in the Department of the Inland Revenue. The test was made on a measured bushel weighing $62\frac{3}{4}$ pounds, and I understand was done in the presence of the minister himself. The following are the different weights of the sixteenth parts that the tester gave : $62\frac{1}{8}$, 62, $62\frac{1}{16}$, 62, $61\frac{15}{16}$, 62, 62, 62, 62, $61\frac{15}{16}$, 62, $61\frac{15}{16}$, 62, $61\frac{15}{16}$, $61\frac{8}{16}$. The same measured bushel weighed $62\frac{3}{4}$ pounds. It was tested in a grain tester in the capacity of $\frac{1}{16}$ of a bushel and it was found that there was an excess of $10\frac{1}{4}$ ounces left which was not weighed and consequently, rendered the grain less valuable to that extent, from the fact that the weight of the grain regulates the price. While that may not appear much in regard to one bushel, when it comes to dealing with thousands of bushels it makes a material difference to the farmer, who is selling his grain.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—But he would gain it in the number of bushels.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is on the weighing quality ; the bushel of grain as measured in the bushel weighed $62\frac{3}{4}$ lbs.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—But how would they come out at the total ; he had more bushels but less weight to the bushel.

Hen. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not understand what the gentleman means ; what I want to point out is that grain measured in a bushel measure would give better results.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—Yes I understand the one bushel ; but he would have a greater total by the other mode of measurement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am dealing with the fact of testing the weight of grain by this machine instead of by the Imperial measure. Taking a bushel of wheat that weighs 62¾ lbs., and testing it in the manner I have indicated by the $\frac{1}{16}$ of a bushel, the result is 10¾ oz. surplus in a bushel which is not weighed.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—But he will have more bushels.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No this does not effect the number of bushels but rather the price if I have wheat which weighs 60 lbs. to the bushel, and when tested it weighs 10¾ oz. less to the bushel, I would get a less price per bushel for my wheat, and if I had 50,000 bushels of wheat for sale I would lose 50,000 times the difference between the price of wheat which weighed 60 lbs. to the bushel and wheat which weighed 10¾ oz. less than 60 lbs. to the bushel.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—But it seems to me that if your tester weighed 10¾ ounces less to the bushel there would be so many more bushels.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I confess I do not know what the hon. gentleman means. I will try and explain in my way, and he can give his views afterwards. If a farmer has a bushel of wheat and it weighs by measurement in the imperial bushel, 62¾ pounds, he would have 2¾ pounds over the 60 pounds, which is the weight of a bushel of wheat by law, and the farmer would get a price per bushel for his wheat based on that weight; but what I say is, that if you test with a tester the weight of that bushel of wheat, the farmer loses; and that arises from the manner of pouring the wheat into the tester, and in doing so sixteen times to the bushel, there is just so much air gets in between the kernels of wheat that displaces the wheat and causes it to weigh less. The following table is used by grain buyers for the purpose of varying, and therefore determining the price of grain—that is if it weighs more than 60 pounds per bushel the farmer gets so much more, and if it weighs less than 60 pounds to the bushel the farmer gets so much less. Take for instance wheat, the standard being fixed at 60 pounds, and the price at 60 cents a bushel, which of course is an arbitrary price, and the following weights as determined by the use of the grain tester the price paid would be:

Test weight.		Price.
60 lbs.	standard or	60 cents per bushel.
59 "	1 cent off	59 "
58 "	2 "	58 "
57 "	5 "	55 "
56 "	8 "	52 "
55 "	12 "	48 "
54 "	16 "	44 "
53 "	20 "	40 "

You will see that the deduction in the value of the wheat does not decrease regularly so much per pound with the weight of the wheat, but the lighter the wheat the greater is the reduction till you get down to fifty-three, which has twenty cents per bushel deducted from the price. Then it must be observed that the above tests are merely for the fixing of the price and that sixty pounds must be given in every case. Now the farmer loses in this way: if he sells by measurement, and then weighs it, that being the test of the value of the wheat, he would gain just in proportion to the excess of the weight of the wheat in the price which he receives for it.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—That is to say, if he grew a better and heavier class of wheat he would receive an increased price per bushel?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Precisely, but if it were decided by the grain tester, then he would lose so much to the bushel, as a bushel of grain weighs 10¾ ounces less by the use of the grain tester. Now here is another table which shows that the price paid for the wheat does not increase, proportionately to the increase in weight, as it decreases when the wheat is lighter:

Test weight.		Price.
60 lbs.	standard or	60 cents per bushel.
61 "	1 cent added or	61 "
62 "	2 cents "	62 "
63 "	3 " "	63 "
64 "	4 " "	64 "

That is taking the wheat the other way, with an increased weight to the bushel instead of less than 60 pounds to the bushel, and you will see that the increased price on the basis of 60 cents per bushel is only one cent for each additional pound more than the standard; on the other hand, if it is less than 60 pounds, then the ratio of deduction is a great deal more than the ratio of the increased price paid, when the wheat weighs over sixty pounds to the bushel. For in stance, in the first table that I read, you will see that at sixty cents per bushel wheat weighing fifty-six pounds to the bushel is eight cents per bushel less than the standard; while, on the other hand, wheat weighing sixty-four pounds to the bushel is worth only four cents more per bushel than the standard. It has been pointed out to me, that this system of weighing has been a great grievance for a long time among the farmers, that the purchasers of wheat have that advantage over them; and I think it ought to be regulated so that the farmer should get the proper price for the weight of his wheat, and that the testing by this tester, a diagram of which is given in the report from which I read a little while ago, ought to be abolished and the Winchester bushel adopted, and have it properly filled and then weighed, and test a whole cargo, whatever it may be, by that system. I would therefore move an amendment to add section 1, to clause 6, the following words, "and no weighing machine used for weighing or determining the weight of any of the articles mentioned in section 16 shall be of less certified capacity than sixty pounds avoirdupois," so that that would be the test by which the weight would be arrived at and the selling and purchasing take place.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think my hon. friend has confused two different measures of capacity, and he has also made one standard for all kinds of grain. Now, sixty pounds might be all right for a bushel of wheat, but it would hardly be right for a bushel of oats. If my hon. friend said that the measure of capacity used shall hold not less than a bushel of the grain weighed, then he would accomplish his object, but he would not meet it in that form. Then there is another thing my hon. friend is mistaken about, and that is the capacity of the imperial measure. We have provided formally for the adoption of the imperial measure, all these weights here given are Winchester bushels. The imperial measure is one-fifth more; if I remember rightly, if a bushel by the Winchester were sixty pounds, by the imperial measure it would weigh seventy-two pounds. These are all Winchester weights given here; they are not imperial, and being Winchester we must keep the Winchester idea in view. We began by adopting the measure of capacity, the imperial measure which was founded, I think, upon a pint of distilled water weighing a pound, and that was taken as our pint of capacity, and so the capacity was fixed in that way for the imperial measure. But this is the old Winchester measure that we have adopted in this, and we cannot well depart from it unless we recast our whole system of weights from the beginning. I do not think it is going to make much difference, and it is important to bear this in mind; you take the purchasers of grain. If grain weighs a certain amount to the bushel and they use one-sixteenth of a bushel for the purpose of testing it, and as my hon. friend says that a sixteenth of a bushel in the tester will not weigh a real sixteenth of a bushel because the pressure in the tester is less than if you had a whole bushel—and the statement of my hon. friend is strictly correct in that particular—but this is the point that I wish to make, when the amendment which the hon. gentleman has made if adopted comes to be worked out, it will be found to produce results not very different from what they are at present. Let us suppose a buyer uses this one-sixteenth measurement for the purpose of fixing the weight of a bushel, and he says, "if the wheat weighs fifty-six pounds to the bushel I will pay you so much, and if it weighs sixty pounds to the bushel I will pay you so much," and so on according to the weight. Now all those prices are fixed with reference to his present means of testing the weight of a bushel of grain. You substitute a more severe test, and one that as my hon. friend says is more accurate, and which I have no doubt is more accurate, then he cannot make an offer of so much for sixty pounds wheat as he did when his test was somewhat different. For instance, if my hon. friend adopts this test and what, under the ordinary test existing at the present time would be fifty-nine pounds but under this other test will be sixty pounds, it is perfectly clear that the grain dealer, after you have adopted this test, will not offer as much for a bushel that weighs sixty pounds as he did for a bushel that would weigh sixty pounds under the test which is more favourable to him. That is perfectly clear. If the farmer is better satisfied, of course to remove a cause of grumbling or of a real or imaginary wrong it may be a substantial gain, but so far as the value of the grain in the granary is concerned, it will not differ under the closer test from what it was before, because the value to the farmer must be the price which the grain merchant can offer him. He cannot go on and do business at a loss : he must consider what his profits are, and if he thinks his profits ought to be five or ten per cent and he adopts a test to secure that amount of profit, under the new test he will have to pay the farmer just such a price as would give the same result as he gets under the present system.

Hon. Sir JOHN CARLING—I have not had much experience in the purchase of wheat and I cannot speak with certainty about that product ; but as to the weight of barley, the statement that has been made by the hon. Minister of Justice is quite correct. The tester is a little brass bucket with weights, and it is carefully tested at Toronto by the department. Each buyer purchases one of those tests and keeps it in his office, and when a man comes with barley we want to know what is the weight of the grain. He says "my barley is fifty pounds to the bushel," that is two pounds more than the standard weight. If it is fifty pounds to the bushel we will give him a little more in price for that barley than we would if it was forty-six. He sends us a car of barley, and before having it delivered we send for a sample and test that barley by our tester, and if he sold it as fifty to the bushel and it only weighs forty-eight we refuse to take it. We communicate with him and he says "I do not think your tester is right. We have a tester which was brought from the government and is stamped as correct," and sometimes they come up with their tester and test the barley with ours and the two correspond, and he finds he has sold his barley at fifty pounds to the bushel when really it did not weigh more than forty-eight to the bushel. The purchasers of barley in western Canada would not be without a tester. That is a check on the grain they buy. Of course, when the barley comes it is all weighed in a hopper, ten, fifteen, twenty or one hundred bushels at a time, and we allow him forty-eight pounds to the bushel—that is the standard weight, and we allow him so much per bushel for barley ; but if it runs over the forty-eight pounds we allow him so much more for it because it is a superior article to an article that weighed only forty-six pounds to the bushel. So far as my experience is concerned, and so far as the experience of the brewers in western Canada is concerned, they would not be without the testers for any consideration, because it keeps a check on the seller and gives us the grain at the weight he agrees to sell it. I cannot tell you exactly the test ; perhaps it is the sixteenth of a bushel. It is carefully measured and carefully weighed, and when there is a dispute when you purchase barley in Toronto or any other point, the sellers come with their testers and test the barley, and sometimes our tester gives a better weight than their tester, and they have gone away generally satisfied that the barley they delivered was not up to the standard which they sold.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—I do not profess to be proficient in the sale of grain and the modes that are adopted to ascertain the quantity. I think what has been said by the hon. member from Belleville bears me out in what I tried to place before the house in making this inquiry. What I wanted to come at was this : a farmer starts from home with a car load of grain, say one thousand bushels at sixty pounds the bushel, taking the weight that was given on the other side. He assumed that it weighed sixty pounds. He has started with 60,000 pounds of grain. When he gets to the market he finds he has been mistaken in the quality of the grain, that it did not weigh sixty pounds to the bushel—that it only weighed fifty-eight pounds. Instead of having 1,000 bushels by this reduced weight, he has 1,034$\frac{1}{29}$ bushels, that is assuming he had 60,000 pounds when he started.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is quite right as to what would be the number of bushels by measurement, he would have 1,034 bushels ; but it is not bought by measurement. There would be just 1,000 bushels for sale and he would get paid for 1,000 bushels ; but, weighing only fifty-eight pounds to the bushel, he would get three or four cents a bushel less, and therefore 1,000 times three or four cents less for the lot.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. senator from Northumberland evidently neither appreciated nor understood the point I tried to make. My hon. friend from London is strictly correct in the way he has put his argument. The minister just put the hon. gentleman for Northumberland right. If I were to tell a farmer coming to town that his wheat weighed 60 lbs. to the bushel when it only weighed 58 lbs., he would be right in his contention, but I made no such contention. What was stated by the hon. gentleman from London, is the practice to-day. What I wanted to point out is that the very system by which he buys his barley, and by which wheat is purchased, by the tester, gives less than the actual weight of the grain when measured by the bushel. If that be the case, then the farmer loses in the sale of his grain just in proportion to the depreciation in weight when weighed by the tester, as against the weight by the bushel measurement—I do not know whether I make myself sufficiently clear.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—In other words you contend that the Winchester system of measurement is unfair.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I say that the instrument by which they arrive at the weight of the grain does not, in testing, give the full weight of the grain, and if that is the case, the farmer loses in proportion. I explained it in this way, that in the sixteenth part of the bushel they pour the grain into the tester, and the displacement of grain by the air between the kernels is sufficient to make it weigh less than it would if it were put into a bushel measure.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—You can shake it down.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You have no right to shake it down. You are to pour it in gently until it is full, and then scrape off the top. I say that the smaller the quantities tested and the greater, the number of tests you make of a certain quantity, the greater is the displacement between the grain and the air, and you make it weigh less. If you were to take thirty-two instead of sixteen tests, the farmer would lose still more, because the air does not weigh as much as the grain. I can understand if a man has grain weighing less than sixty pounds he would not have a bushel according to law, and he would only be paid in proportion to the weight. The law fixes the standard of measurement at sixty pounds. If you are buying oats at thirty-four pounds to the bushel, you fill the measure with oats and ascertain exactly what they weigh, and then ascertain the total weight of the quantity you are buying. If the oats show a greater weight than thirty-four pounds to the bushel, the farmer is paid in proportion. I have never been in the grain business, but it seems so plain to me, with the tables placed in my hands, that I thought the farmer should not be placed in a position to lose on every bushel of grain he sold.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Is it compulsory that this tester should be used?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—It is evident that this tester has the same effect in testing grain as it has in testing flour. The inspectors of flour in Montreal used to procure as large quantities for a test as possible, and sometimes got three pounds out of a barrel, which was their profit. It shows there must be something imperfect in this test. Either the tester is incorrect or the original weight of the grain could not be right.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not say it is incorrect, but the results are what I have pointed out.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I know perfectly well that men in Montreal made fortunes by having large testers and taking as much as they possibly could out of a barrel and the poor man who bought that barrel of flour, if he weighed it, found that he was two or three pounds short.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—I quite understand now the position taken that if an unfortunate farmer goes to the market with grain which he assumes weighs sixty pounds to the bushel, when he gets there, by some doubtful mode of weighing he is told that his wheat does not weigh sixty pounds but only fifty-eight pounds to the bushel; consequently he must submit to a reduction in price on account of lightness in weight, but still has to give sixty pounds for a bushel. So the farmer is ground between the two millstones.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has made his statement not very clear. There is no such deduction to be drawn from what I said.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—In a law suit, would the judge have to go by the tester?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Yes.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Then it is an injustice.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—A larger tester is what is needed.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Yes, and let the farmer and the merchant fight it out, but if the farmer is handicapped in the measurement he has a poor chance.

Hon. Sir JOHN CARLING—If the hon. gentleman will be kind enough to allow the matter to stand over until to-morrow, we can look into it. I am satisfied that it will cause a great deal of dissatisfaction among those who purchase barley. We had a good deal of trouble in getting at the method of weighing barley, but with those standard weights we should give satisfaction to the buyer as well as to the seller. Take a car load of barley; you send and get a bushel of that out of the body of the car. You weigh it, test it, and if it is up to the weight you take it, and if it does not come up to the weight you notify the seller that you will not take it because it is not up to the standard: Sometimes some parts of the car will weigh more than others, because it is got from different farmers, and taken from their wagons, and we have to take the average car load and it is a method which gives general satisfaction to the trade all over Canada. I think it will be a mistake, as far as barley is concerned, but I cannot say about wheat.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend is literally correct. It is a fight between the buyer and the seller. If the buyer can get a better bargain than the seller, he wants it continued; but if he loses by the tester, then he wants the change made. If my hon. friend buys a car load of barley at a certain rate, and it falls short in weight, he deducts a certain amount from the price paid, because it is not of as great value to him; but if it goes two or three pounds more to the bushel than the weight which was guaranteed to him, he should certainly pay the farmer the difference.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The whole difficulty arises in this way: a farmer measures his grain in his half bushel measure and puts it into his bag and puts it on his scale and ascertains its weight; he says it weighs sixty pounds or more to the bushel. He takes it to the market and the tester is used, and there being so small a quantity tested there, it does not weigh as much and he believes he is being cheated. He has weighed his grain on scales that were marked as correct and he finds the tester gives a different weight. There is no doubt it will, as long as you use a very small tester. If you were to use a tester that would hold a bushel, or half bushel—not sixty pounds as my hon. friend says—that is all right for wheat. For oats it would be thirty-four pounds. So that it is the Winchester bushel you are using. The farmer would be dissatisfied if he was selling his barley by this tester; he would be disappointed when it came to be weighed, because the barley would weigh two pounds less to the bushel than it weighed at home. He makes his bargain with perfect honesty with reference to the weight as he has ascertained it, and he is disappointed because when it comes to be tested the weight is something less. But supposing you were to adopt the larger test that my hon. friend suggests, and his barley weighs more, my hon. friend buying his barley buys it according to the tester. When he says "I want barley that weighs fifty pounds," it is with reference to the weight as shown by that tester. It is a better quality of barley than the farmer has in view, because the farmer's barley is determined by a different standard. If we adopt the large test my hon. friend suggests, when he comes to buy barley he will find he gets a slightly inferior article, fifty pounds to the bushel, than he got before when he used the present tester.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—He gets an inferior article.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He gets an inferior article because it will not weigh fifty pounds by the tester. If he had got one that would weigh fifty pounds, it would be a better test than if it would weigh fifty pounds when you put a whole bushel together. What is the result? When he comes to buy, when you apply a new standard he cannot afford to give what he said he would give before, the standard being less. Therefore you must fix a lower price. Supposing my hon. friend was buying barley, and he says: "I will give you fifty-five or fifty-six cents a bushel if your barley weighs fifty pounds." He determines the weight of that barley to the bushel by his present tester. That barley would weigh perhaps fifty-two pounds to the bushel by the ordinary bushel tester. It would weigh more than the fifty pounds, because there is a larger quantity of it together, and it is packed more closely ; but when he comes to get a bushel of barley that weighs by the bushel the fifty pounds, which would be an article inferior to what would weigh fifty pounds by the tester that he had before, he cannot afford to pay the same price, the market being the same, because he is getting a less valuable article than what he got tested by the former standard.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The only difference, as I understand it, is this : the contention of the hon. gentleman is quite right if the tester gives the actual bona fide weight of the grain. The contention is—and the figures I have given show—that it does not, because you weigh a certain amount of air which is in the tester with the small quantity of grain, and consequently you get a less weight than the grain honestly weighs.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I will put this case to the hon. gentleman : supposing my hon. friend from London (Sir John Carling) were buying barley as he suggested, and that he said I will pay a certain price if it weighs fifty pounds to the bushel, but his fifty pounds to the bushel means fifty to the bushel as settled by the small tester that is in use. My hon. friend says that is more than a bushel. If you weigh a bushel altogether, I quite admit that if you put a bushel in the tester, it will pack more closely than a sixteenth of a bushel, but when my hon. friend is fixing a price on that barley he is fixing a price with reference to the standard that now exists, and if he were buying by that standard, and were buying to-morrow by the larger test that my hon. friend proposes to introduce, he could not pay the same price. Is not that clear?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is clear if it were, but there is a market price for the barley, and if he buys by this tester more than a bushel, he gets more for his money than he is entitled to.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But the market value amongst all purchasers is a market value fixed—

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Fixed by weight.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Not by weight, but by the bushel. But it is the weight to the bushel according to the means of testing it. If you adopt another it gives you barley of an inferior quality. Surely he cannot pay the same price.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—But the farmer would like to have the actual weight.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It makes no difference to him.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is like buying a bottle of spirits where you can put your head in the hollow at the bottom of the bottle. You do not get the full quart. If you get an imperial quart measure you have the full quart. But whether the contention of my hon. friend be correct or not—and admitting for the moment that it is correct—then the purchaser knows exactly what he is getting, and the farmer knows he is getting paid for the 60 lbs. I will give notice of my amendment, if my hon. friend would prefer it, and let it go on the Minutes and move it on the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I do not think the amendment would attain the object the hon. gentleman has in view. It would complicate the Act and make it more unworkable than it is at present. If any amendment is made it should specify that in making a test for grain by measure or capacity, the smallest measure to be used should be the Winchester bushel, and according to that the price should be fixed.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is contrary to what my hon. friend proposes.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Clause 6 reads :

No trader shall use with a weighing machine a greater number of weights than is required by its certified capacity.

2. Every trader who violates this section shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding ten dollars for the first offence, and not exceeding twenty dollars for each subsequent offence, and to the confiscation of the weights.

What is the meaning of that?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If the weighing machine is certified to weigh 200 pounds, he shall not use more weights than would make 200 pounds.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—If it will stand the weight it will not make any difference if you put another 150 pounds on.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There are certain machines which, if you put more than the certified weight upon them, will never weigh accurately afterwards. That is true of spring scales. I dare say they have discovered that the scales are rendered inaccurate by this practice.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Allow me to make a suggestion from experience: the hon. minister should get from the department a brief of the reasons for the changes which are made in any Act. I frankly tell him that I never would take charge of a bill in the House, unless I had a brief from the department giving the reasons for the changes. Unfortunately my hon. friends have run through four or five bills of an important character and they could not tell us the reasons for the change. I can understand that no more weight should be put on a scale than it is intended to hold, but a reason should be given why a penalty for doing so. There may be results following. It may be that it disturbs the accuracy of the weighing of it, but I cannot tell.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I know it is so with regard to some.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—As far as the platform scales is concerned this clause is vicious, but it may be very proper for the spring scales, because too much weight on a spring scale might strain the scale and it might never weigh properly afterwards. A platform scale could hold 150 lbs. extra and not be injured in the slightest. It would weigh just as accurately afterwards.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN, from the committee, reported the bill with an amendment, which was concurred in.

COLD STORAGE ON STEAMSHIPS BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (149) "An Act to authorize certain contracts with steamship companies for cold storage accommodation."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This bill consists with only a single clause, which I will read:—

1. The Governor in Council may enter into contracts with Furness, Withy and Company, Limited, and with the Manchester Liners, Limited, to provide cold storage on steamships from Montreal, St. John and Halifax, to the United Kingdom, during the seasons of one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine, and one thousand nine hundred, on such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council deems expedient,—the sum to be paid for such cold storage not to exceed twelve thousand dollars in any one year.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Has there been a sum placed in the estimates to meet this $12,000?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think not for this purpose, or else it would not be necessary to put it in the statutes. My hon. friend knows we have two methods of appropriation, one by special provision in the statute and the other in the estimates, which is an appropriation for the year only. This is an appropriation extending over three years.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Then I understand this amount of $12,000 for the year 1898 will not be in any other Supply Bill that will come before us for the year 1898? My object in asking that question was that I scarcely understand why the government is not taking authority at the same time to provide for cold storage at Charlottetown. My hon. friend the Secretary of State knows very well that there has been a distinct promise that there would be such cold storage provided for Charlottetown. This year a sum of $5,000 has been placed in the estimates as a subsidy for a steamer to call at Charlottetown and to connect between Charlottetown and Britain. Now I do not see why if it is intended to utilize that amount, or if it is not intended to be put there for show, why there should not be authority taken at the same time by the government to make a contract to put cold storage on any steamer that will act upon the subsidy. There should be some provision in this bill authorizing the government to make a contract to put cold storage facilities on whatever steamers we may give the subsidy to. The other day, in answer to a motion of mine, a return was brought down showing that the citizens of Charlottetown have made most strenuous efforts for the purpose of effecting cold storage there. They have subscribed nearly $20,000 stock for cold storage premises in the city of Charlottetown, but that is contingent upon getting a communication with the British market. There is no use putting cold storage premises in Charlottetown unless the government make a contract with a steamer to carry products in cold storage from those cold storage premises in Charlottetown to the British market.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I understand the Minister of Agriculture has been endeavouring to make arrangements with parties.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Why does not the Minister of Agriculture ask this power from the House the same as they are doing in this bill for other places?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Because these provisions are for contracts that are consumated, the other is not. He is endeavouring to secure a contract, and there is an appropriation made for the other, contingent upon the ability to get the work done. Prince Edward Island is not overlooked, it is not neglected, but it could not be embraced in this bill because this is dealing with parties who have already made contracts with the government.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We had a bill brought down just at the end of the last session to ratify contracts that had been made and the contracts themselves were brought down—my hon. friend the Secretary of State will bear that all in mind very well—and we found they were entirely for the ports of Montreal and Quebec. We were assured then that efforts were being made to embrace the other ports, and it was hoped that some of the other provinces would be included in the arrangement. Now, if these contracts are already made, why do the government ask for power to make them? I do not see why the government do not include Charlottetown in the bill; why they did not take the power to make a contract in reference to Charlottetown as well as with reference to the other ports. There has been a subsidy granted for the steamers to call at Charlottetown, but, as far as I know, there is no vote or authority for the government to contribute there, as they are doing in this bill. The promises made last year were not fulfilled and the cold storage was not supplied. Another season is now entered upon, and the government do not even propose to take to itself power to make this contract for putting cold storage facilities on a steamer to call at Charlottetown, although they are professing to offer a subsidy to cold storage steamers that will call there.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This bill says:

> The Governor in Council may enter into contracts with Furness, Withy & Co., Limited, and with the Manchester Liners, Limited, to provide cold storage on steamships from Montreal, St. John and Halifax, to the United Kingdom during the season 1898, 1899 and 1900.

Now, if one of these companies could be persuaded to stop at Charlottetown, there is nothing in this bill to prevent it. Does my hon. friend say that if the government find it impossible to induce the Manchester Company, in running from Montreal to Manchester, to stop at Charlottetown that we ought not to have entered into this contract? Is this his contention? There is nothing in this that says they may not stop there, and the provision is that the sum paid is not to exceed $12,000 in any one year; that during the three years mentioned the Governor in Council may enter into contracts with these companies on such terms as the Governor in Council deems expedient. Now, in regard to this cold storage, if it is possible to induce any one of these companies to call at Charlottetown, I am sure that the government would be delighted, and if they cannot induce them, then they would be pleased to get some other company, if it can be done on terms that are at all reasonable. My hon. friend is railing at the government; he himself was a member of the government and he had just as much interest in Charlottetown then as he has today.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I agree with the remarks that have been made by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield on this subject. We have been applying in Charlottetown for facilities for cold storage for several years. At the time my hon. friend from Marshfield was a member of the government, there was not the same need of cold storage in any part of Canada and there was not so much need of sending articles in cold storage then as there is now. The people of Charlottetown went to a great deal of expense and trouble last year and the year previous in order to be prepared to take advantage of steamers which it was expected the government would obtain to call there and to take goods in cold storage to the United Kingdom. It was stated at that time that the government would give a bonus to any parties establishing cold storage in Charlottetown for the purpose of utilizing it for steamers calling there to take the goods to the old country. That promise has not been carried out. The government has not given any assistance in the way that was then suggested. Now, we find that Charlottetown is again getting the go-by in the bill that is now before us. There is no provision made there for the purpose of having steamers call at Charlottetown to give us the benefit of cold storage shipment as it was expected there should be. The hon. leader of the government says there is nothing in this bill to prevent their calling there. There is nothing in the bill to induce them to call there. It is not at all likely that any steamers would call at Charlottetown without some money inducement to bring them there. It is true there is nothing to prevent them going, but without this bill if it is to their advantage to do so. It requires something more than ordinary freight rates to induce a steamer to call there, although there is a large amount of freight now prepared to be shipped in cold storage from Charlottetown. We know that one firm alone has invested $100,000, in establishing a business in Charlottetown in connection with which there is a cold storage department where he prepares a large amount of bacon and other products for shipment to the old country, and without the benefit of steamers calling prepared to convey those with cold storage facilities to the old country, he is at a very great disadvantage compared with his competitors in the other provinces. I should like to see some provision made for a steamer to call there fitted out with cold storage facilities.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. members from Prince Edward Island are not fair to the government. We were perfectly frank this year and last year. If you cannot induce steamers to call there for even a larger sum than is granted to other ports are the government to blame for it? The answer to the government is that there is not enough freight to make it worth while calling. It will not do to call there simply for the subsidy that is granted other ports. The Minister of Agriculture himself went to Prince Edward Island to ascertain if it was not possible to make an arrangement to call at Charlottetown, whether the products could not be sent to Halifax. That was found not to be feasible, because if the temperature is changed the articles become of less value; but the Minister of Agriculture has this year placed a special sum in the estimates and he will use it in his best endeavours to obtain a vessel to fit up cold storage to take products from Charlottetown.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The people of Prince Edward Island are quite accustomed to hear such speeches with regard to this subject as the hon. Secretary of State and Minister of Justice have made. The Secretary of State says that the members for Prince Edward Island are not fair to the government, and my hon. friend the Minister of Justice asked me, do we want to prevent the government from making a contract with these companies for the purpose of connecting Montreal and Great Britain unless they will call at Charlottetown. Now we are not unfair and we do not ask any such thing as that, but when the government come down with a bill of this kind giving them authority to enter into contracts for the purpose of furnishing cold storage facilities in regard to other points, why do they not also come to parliament and ask for power to make such a contract for Charlottetown as well? If it is necessary in making these contracts to come and get power to do so, is it not also necessary to get some power from parliament in order to make contracts for Charlottetown? Here we have the government coming down and taking power to make contracts between the ports of Montreal, St. John and Halifax, on this side, and the ports of Great Britain on the other side, and they do not ask this parliament to give them power to make similar contracts with Charlottetown. Now it need not be with the Furness line or with the other line mentioned here, but they ought to take power from parliament to make a similar contract with some steamship company for Charlottetown and carry out what they have been promising for so long a time.

There has been a subsidy of $5,000 provided for, but the government did not do for Charlottetown what they are doing in this bill for other ports, and if cold storage is necessary at all, it is necessary that Charlottetown should be treated in the same way. We have had promises year after year, and I say plainly that unless something is done in addition to the grant of a subsidy, that the government will come back next year and say, "we have no power; we must get power from parliament to get a steamer to call at Charlottetown, and consequently we were not able to get a boat or to make any arrangement." I ask them why do they not take to themselves the same power from parliament to make a contract as they are doing in this bill? We ask nothing unreasonable for Charlottetown; we know that Charlottetown does not serve as large a territory as the other ports do; we only ask for facilities in proportion to the trade we would have, which, necessarily, would be small, but from the fact of it being small, it should not be withheld. Now, my hon. friend thinks he is going to get out of this difficulty by pointing to myself as a member of the late government. At that time there was no cold storage provided for any port in Canada. The government, of which I was a member, initiated a scheme; they had it all ready to put into operation, and it was known all over Canada that the matter of cold storage was being considered——

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Had you a steamship subsidy?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend says, had you a steamship subsidy? No; because the matter of cold storage had not developed at that time. My hon. friend takes care to say that the subsidy has been granted, but he takes care not to ask parliament to give the government power to apply that subsidy for cold storage steamers, and if they are sincere they ought to add to this bill a provision giving them power to provide cold storage facilities.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not read this bill in the same way that the hon. gentleman does. This bill simply authorizes the Governor in Council, who, I presume, have really come to some understanding with these two steamship companies, that on the steamers of these companies, which ply between the ports named, storage facilities will be provided. The hon. gentleman does not advert to the fact that the bill provides for three years.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The contracts run at the same time.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The subsidies to these steamers and their contracts extend over three years. Now the sum to be paid for cold storage for these three ports is not to exceed $12,000 in any one year. Inasmuch as no arrangement has yet been made with either company to run a line from Charlottetown, it was not practicable to include that in this bill. The government have shown their desire to help the cause along by putting some $5,000 in the estimates; and I know myself that the hon. Minister of Agriculture was most anxious, when he was in Halifax last fall, to try and make some arrangement with the Furness Company to get their steamers to call a certain number of times at Charlottetown, at the time of the year when the products of the island were to be shipped; and I do not think the hon. gentleman is a bit more anxious than the Minister of Agriculture is to see the products of the island carried over by cold storage. But if he has up to the present time failed in coming to an arrangement with any of these steamship companies, he is not to blame for that. The government have put this $5,000 in the estimates, and I trust that before the season is out they may succeed in making an arrangement with some other steamship company. It is not necessary to have a bill to authorize the contract when the thing is authorized by the Supply Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This $5,000 which appears in the estimates is an extra amount over and above what is paid to any other port. The arrangements at other ports have been offered to all steamship companies to send their steamers to Charlottetown, three companies, I am advised, the Furness Company, the Mosgrave and Mr. Carmichael of New Glasgow; they have corresponded with the department and they said they would not undertake it for three years, but they might for one. In addition to the offer to all the companies there is an offer of a sum of $1,000 each trip, specially to call at Charlottetown, and it was with a view of inducing them to call five times at Charlottetown this year that the present sum was put it, but Mr. Fisher has not been able to induce them to accept that offer. The answer is that there is not freight enough to warrant their calling at Charlottetown. Mr. Fisher says he has abundant authority to make a contract with them if he can induce them to accept his terms, which are, besides paying half the amount of the fitting up of the cold storage on those vessels, to pay in addition $1,000 a trip if they will call at Charlottetown.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I must draw this distinction between my hon. friend the Secretary of State and the hon. Minister of Justice. The hon. Secretary of State tries to talk fairly anyway, and the hon. Minister of Justice does not even try to talk fairly not to say anything about acting fairly in the matter. My hon. friend the Secretary of State gave us a good deal of fair talk and fair promises last year. I must say that the hon. gentleman behind the hon. Minister of Justice seems to know more about what the government is doing and their intentions than either of the government members in this House. There was more information in what my hon. friend said than we have got from either members of the government. But to come down to the point, there is about $20,000 subscribed in Prince Edward Island for putting up cold storage premises. It is subscribed with the understanding that there will be three years cold storage service connected with the port ensured. The subscribers to that cold storage warehouse in Charlottetown do not feel that they would be justified in going forward with the warehouse and incurring the expenditure unless they had an assurance of connection by steamers, and cold storage on board the steamers, with the markets of Great Britain. They feel that putting a sum of $5,000 in the estimates for one year only, and without any contract for cold storage, extending over a period of three years, by steamer, or without any ghost of assurance of that, there is not a bit of use in their going forward and establishing cold storage premises in Charlottetown. The fault I find with the government about this is that they do not take power to make a three years contract for cold storage steamers.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is a new objection.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is only a subsidy for one year, but I have no doubt that it would be voted from year to year; but the government should take power to themselves to make a three years' contract and the money would be voted from year to year in order that the facilities should be continued for three years, because capitalists will not put their money into a cold storage warehouse until they are satisfied they are going to get the communication. If they do not get the communication the warehouse will be no use to them, because hon. gentlemen know very well that if the products that are intended to be preserved are once preserved in cold storage premises, they do not stand the stress of a long voyage even as well as if they had not been in the cold storage originally. The cold storage must be continuous. The goods must pass from a cold storage warehouse in which they have been preserved to a steamer having cold storage facilities, and landed in the markets to which they are being sent. If they do not have that facility right through it is better not to have a cold storage at all. The whole matter is tied up because the government do not take to themselves power to make a three years' contract.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong. The Hon. Mr. Fisher said: "I have endeavoured to make a three years contract, but they positively refused to undertake it."

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Why do you want this bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—These companies have agreed to it. But with reference to Prince Edward Island, the hon. minister has asked the companies: "Will you undertake, if you receive an additional subsidy over and above what is given to Halifax and Montreal, to give us a contract for three years?" They say: "No, we will not, but we will consider whether we might not enter into it for one year. We will not undertake to make a contract for three years." Mr. Fisher was perfectly willing to have made a contract for three years if he could have got them to make the contract. But those three firms said they would consider it, and Mr. Fisher undertook to pay any one of them $1,000 for every trip, and that is the reason the item is there. If there had been the slightest possibility of making a contract with them, he would have done so, but they absolutely refused.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When was this?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Quite recently, and he now expects to hear from one of the companies, and he is quite ready to enter into a contract if they will agree to it for one year or three years, and in addition he is giving this bonus of $1,000 a trip over and above what any other port is getting.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend's information is more recent than mine.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have just seen the hon. minister below the bar of the House.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The president of the Charlottetown board of trade has taken a vast amount of trouble on this question during the last two years. He is working on account of his love for the province, and when Mr. Hazard was here trying to get this business arranged, he told me, when I was leaving for Prince Edward Island, that he was detained here because he found that all the government proposed to do was to make a one year contract and that would be of no use whatever, and he was compelled to remain to endeavour to get them to make a three years' contract, and I told him less would not do, because it would not justify the building of a warehouse. He was determined to remain until he got that arrangement effected and I thought we would have a bill on the subject giving the government power to make the contract.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no objection to putting a clause in the bill to make a three years' contract with any company who will take it. Mr. Fisher has not the smallest objection, but it would be entirely misleading, because he failed in it before.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Will the hon. gentleman do what he suggested?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman knows no such contract can be made. Here are two companies with whom the government have a contract, and this appropriation, the hon. gentleman knows, is made under the provisions of the contract. The best we can do in the case of Prince Edward Island is to ask for the appropriation for a year, and if he can make the contract extending over a longer period, then we may legislate upon the subject. But the hon. gentleman knows that the appropriations made by parliament in the Appropriation Bill are appropriations from year to year. That is the condition here:—

The Governor in Council may enter into contracts with Furness, Withy & Co., Limited, and with the Manchester Steamship Liners, Limited, to provide cold storage on steamships, &c.

Why? Because they have a contract with these parties under subsidies granted to them extending over a period of three years. Then, having a contract for three years for steamers from Montreal, St. John and Halifax, they make arrangements for contracts running the same period of time. But my hon. friend knows the declaration here for the purpose of carrying out an arrangement with these companies which have no revelancy to a proposal that had no relation to these companies.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend, the Secretary of State, has made a suggestion, which, I think, is a very fair one. He suggests that the provision should be put in this bill giving the government authority to make a three years' contract. The hon. Minister of Justice certainly pays his colleague a very poor compliment when he tells me across the floor of the House that I know nothing of the kind can be done. He assumes that his colleague does not know it. I may reply to my hon. friend that I do not know that it cannot be done. On the contrary I know that it can be done.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If there was a contract made, the hon. gentleman would have no grievance, and I know he would a thousand fold prefer a grievance to a subsidy.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend seems to be confusing things in a remarkable manner. I do not want that any contract shall be made with these people, or any other person. All I ask is—and that is just what the hon. Secretary of State suggested—that power should be taken in this bill by the government to make a three-year contract with somebody.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Does the hon. gentleman suppose we can make a charge on the revenue of the country?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. Secretary of State proposed it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Does the hon. gentleman think we can make a charge on the revenue of the country?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend will settle that with his colleague.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am asking the question. The hon. gentleman is addressing me with a proposition that we ought to put an appropriation in this bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is simply taking power to make a contract. It is simply the suggestion of his colleague. He had better settle it with him. If this House cannot authorize the contract, the hon. Secretary of State is wrong and I have been wrong in believing it. The government certainly could have put it in the bill originally, and they should have done so.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—There is something else to be said in reference to this matter besides the question of cold storage. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield knows perfectly well that those steamships will not make a contract for three years without knowing the quantity of freight they will get. If the local government of Prince Edward Island will give a guarantee of a large quantity of freight, they can get steamers under the Act. But I disapprove of all subsidies to steamship freight lines, and I think it is time a halt was made in Canada in reference to this matter. I fully approve of the mail service contract which we cannot avoid and the cold storage subsidies which we cannot avoid, but I disapprove of giving subsidies to carry ordinary freight across the Atlantic. What is the result of it? They say "steamers object to going to Prince Edward Island because they cannot get full cargoes. What is the matter with the whole east coast of New Brunwick, where we have very large exports and steamers can at all times get timber cargoes?" This matter should be taken into consideration by the government. They are subsidizing freight steamers to carry lumber from Montreal, St. John and Halifax, lumber certainly constituting a large portion of the cargoes shipped. There are certain sections in New Brunswick where we are handicapped in our trade with Europe on account of these very subsidies. Steamers are compelled to go to those ports. They cannot get full cargoes of farm products from the west, consequently they take in large quantities of deals. They have to take these deals at 15 to 20 shillings a standard under current outport rates, and handicapping the timber trade of Canada in the ports where they do not get the subsidy. Why should the people in St. John and Halifax get a bonus on these deal shipments when the east coast of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are handicapped in this matter and are driven out of their own markets? I consider it is extremely wrong to subsidize steamers from these ports, especially to an inland port in Europe. It is bad enough to give a steamer a subsidy to induce her to call at Montreal or St. John, but what have we to do with subsidizing a steamer going to Europe, going past the port of Liverpool, say to Manchester? I thought it was important to bring this before the House and I have taken this opportunity to do so. I hope the members of the government will bear the matter in mind and give it due consideration.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the bill provide for carrying the cold storage articles to Manchester?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is a line of steamers to Manchester, and they propose to fit up these steamers for cold storage to Manchester.

Hon. Mr. FISET, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

RECORDING THE SPEAKER'S RULINGS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved—

That all the words after "that" in the 43rd line, page 561 of the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, of Friday, 3rd June, 1898, be struck off, up to the end of the paragraph, and the following inserted in lieu thereof, as follows :—

The SPEAKER—If I thought for a moment that the honour of the hon. senator from Stadacona was at stake, I should be the last one to encourage the letting of that opinion go abroad. I never understood by the language of the hon. the Secretary of State that he wanted to accuse the hon. senator from Stadacona of having stolen the letter. If I had so understood, I would state my decision in some other way, but as I have to decide a question of order, I must lay aside my personal feeling.

Rule 14 provides that no resolution prefaced by a written preamble is received by the Senate. In my opinion, if there is anything like a preamble it is certainly the wording of the four or five paragraphs which precede the motion. I cannot otherwise consider that as anything but a preface to the motion, and I am of opinion that the motion cannot be put in its present shape.

He said : My object in bringing this matter before the House is not to challenge in any way the correctness of the ruling given by the Chair. I made a motion previous to the one now before this House, in which motion I recited what I thought was the imputation of the hon. Secretary of State against my own character. I incorporated that alleged imputation in the motion which was then put before the House, and that motion was declared by the Chair out of order because it had a written preamble. The journals of the House contain actually the recital of that motion in which all the imputations that I thought the hon. Secretary of State had brought against me were contained ; and my object to-day in bringing up this decision of the Speaker with a view to having it recorded in the journals, is to put on record the answer to that imputation given by the hon. Speaker himself. It is because I consider the decision is something to my advantage that I claim, as an act of justice, that the decision be put in the journals, as the accusation framed in the way I drew up the motion is already on record in the journals.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is clear to my mind, from the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, that he is under a very serious misapprehension as to the language used a few days ago, when discussing this subject, and the very words he has quoted as having formed the subject of the Speaker's ruling evidently should show him that other gentlemen, who heard my language, did not attach to it the meaning, which the hon. gentleman seems to have drawn. I made no personal charge against the hon. gentleman in connection with the letter. I was quite aware that it would have been practically impossible for him to have acquired the letter from either of the writers, and I was not aware that the hon. gentleman had visited Rome in the month of October or November last. Therefore, there were no grounds, and my language did not convey the personal imputation he seems to have attached to the words used. What I did say was that, from the evidence I had received, I had come to the conclusion that the letter had been purloined, or improperly obtained, and therefore, it should not form the subject of a debate before this House, particularly as it referred to a matter that, in my judgment at all events, was not one of which the public ought to take any note. I stated in addition that the grounds I had for that were letters I had seen from Mr. Russell, and also a communication, that I was not at liberty then to communicate to the House, from Rome stating that the letters had been improperly obtained. I then said that the language used in the communication that I saw was very much stronger than the language I used on the floor of this House. What I did say and what I felt was that under those circumstances, as the hon. gentleman had not explained to this House how he came in possession of those letters, I was amply justified in saying that their possession by him was obtained in such a way as would not justify any gentleman in bringing them before the notice of parliament. I may say to him that the conclusion I had come to then as to the manner in which the letter had been obtained have been confirmed by the highest authority, and while I have no desire to parade the source of my information before the public, I have no objection to showing the hon. gentleman privately the communication on which I have based my observations. The hon. gentleman may rest assured, however, that I did not desire to make any personal imputation to him as to his having improperly come by the letters. Some one must have obtained them improperly. They may have been handed to the hon. gentleman innocently enough. He may not have inquired of the party who delivered them to him how they came into his possession, and therefore he is unnecessarily sensitive in applying my language to him personally. I regret very much that he interpreted my words as reflecting on his honour in connection with the letter. I presume the hon. gentleman will be satisfied with this explanation, and if it is contrary to the rules that this ruling should go on the journals, that he will not desire to press his motion. I acquiesced in the ruling of the Speaker in which his honour said he understood that I had not intended to make a personal application of my observations to the hon. member from Stadacona in the manner that the hon. gentleman interpreted them.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—With these explanations, I ask permission to withdraw my motion.

The motion was withdrawn.

MANITOBA SCHOOL LANDS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to :

Direct the attention of the government to the following extract from No. 80, page 3 of the Orders of the Day of the House of Commons for Monday, 6th June, 1898 :—

House in committee to consider a certain proposed resolution declaring it expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may, from the moneys invested under the provisions of subsection three of section twenty-five of chapter fifty-four of the Revised Statutes of Canada, forming the school fund for the province of Manitoba, pay from time to time to the government of Manitoba, on the request of the said government, such sum or sums as the Governor in Council thinks proper, not exceeding in the whole the sum of three hundred thousand dollars, the sum or sums so paid over to be expended by the said government of Manitoba in the support and maintenance of the public schools in that province ; provided always that not more than two hundred thousand dollars shall be so paid to the said government for the purpose aforesaid during the present calendar year.—(Mr. Fielding.)

And asked :

1. By this Resolution does the government ask to dispose of, to the amount of $300,000, the very capital forming the school fund produced by the sale of certain Dominion lands ?

2. In giving this sum of $300,000 to the government of Manitoba for the maintenance of public schools in that province, does the government take account of the fact that the legislature of Manitoba has changed the definition of the term "public schools," and established in 1890 public schools different from what they were before that date, and that consequently this $300,000 will be destined for public schools as they exist to-day and not as they existed when this school fund was created by the Federal legislation ?

3. Will the Catholic schools of Manitoba be protected by the Federal legislation in such a way as to be able to get the proportion to which they would have a right in virtue of the spirit of the letter and of the Dominion Lands Act, or will this gift of $300,000 be made without any conditions to the government of Manitoba and with the right for the latter to dispose thereof as seems good to it ?

4. Has the government of Manitoba asked the government of the Dominion to cause to be adopted by the parliament of Canada this legislation which will permit the Federal government to give to that of Manitoba this sum of $300,000, to be taken out of the capital created by the sale of Dominion lands specially reserved as school lands ?

5. When did the government of Manitoba make such a demand or require such legislation, and upon what did it base itself in asking it ?

6. Is it a favour which it solicits, the accomplishment of a promise which it demands or the revindication of a right which it claims ?

7. If it is a favour which it solicits, what does it give it in exchange ; if it is an accomplishment of a promise which it demands, what is the promise and where was it made ; if it is the revindication of a right, when did this right arise and what arrangement has given birth to it ?

8. In any event, is the Federal government by the legislation which it asks, going to make the Greenway government this gift of $300,000 without regard to the rights of the Catholic minority, and going to give to the provincial government the proportion of money to which the minority pretends that it is an undeniable right.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say to my hon. friend that it is not a usual thing to undertake to question the government in one House categorically about the proceedings of another House. My hon. friend has quoted from a speech made in the House of Commons by Mr. Fielding with reference to a payment to the government of Manitoba of the sum of three hundred thousand dollars, and on that subject he puts a series of questions to me. It would not be in the public interest at this moment to undertake to enter into a minute discussion of the questions which the hon. gentleman puts. He asks me, in the first place, by this resolution, does the government ask to dispose of the amount of three hundred thousand dollars, the very capital forming the school fund produced by the sale of certain Dominion lands. My hon. friend will see that certain lands in Manitoba were, at a very early date, pledged towards the maintenance of the public schools, and I do not understand that pledge as tying the government of Manitoba or the government of the Dominion to the proposition that those schools shall continue to be of a particular form, but that whatever may be the public schools for the time being, whether they be secular schools or schools in which religious instruction is given of a denominational character, if they be such as, by the law of the province, are counted public schools, then those schools under the original reserves are schools that would be entitled to share in this appropriation; and if the school system to-day is somewhat different from what it was at the time these lands were set apart, it would not be contrary to the provision originally made, but on the contrary it would be in accordance with that provision that the payment should take place.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Were the lands set apart in Manitoba specially?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, and in the North-west Territory. These lands are lands that were under the control of the Dominion at the time they were so set apart.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And so are the funds arising therefrom.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, there is no doubt that the funds and the lands are alike pledged to the government and the people of Manitoba and that the country is being settled up and that the settlers who have gone there might very properly complain of a breach of faith that the funds were not paid over in accordance with this understanding. Of course we have the power of refusing to keep faith.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—The physical power.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, and the legal power, but it would be a gross violation of our pledge.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—The hon. minister then claims that the provincial government could draw on the Dominion government for what capital has been paid.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Not necessarily. That is a matter of which the Dominion government, whenever it chooses to make a payment at the instance of the province or at its request, assumes the responsibility, and that responsibility is assumed on the present occasion. The hon. gentleman asks whether the government of Manitoba has asked the government of the Dominion to cause to be adopted by the parliament of Canada, legislation which will permit the Federal government to give to the government of Manitoba the sum of $300,000 to be taken out of the capital created by the sale of Dominion lands and so on. The province of Manitoba and the government of Manitoba no doubt are anxious to receive these moneys. They are anxious that these moneys should be under their control, and my hon. friend will scarcely expect me to say that the Dominion government is doing this gratuitiously and against the will and wish of the government of Manitoba. That of course is not the case. But the government of Manitoba, being a government possessing the power of self government, these lands being set apart for the maintenance of the schools in that province——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is the hon. gentleman not opening a discussion that he deprecated when he began? Because he is laying down principles to which many others object. I have no objection to his answering in his own way.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am answering in my own way. And I may go further and say that as far as the payment to the government of Manitoba is concerned, I think it is in accordance with the original understanding and with the duty of the government and the parliament of Canada. It was never for a moment supposed or indicated, when these lands were set apart, that either the lands or the funds should remain for all time under the control of the government of Canada. That would have the effect of putting into the hands of the government of Canada the control over a subject which with certain limitations, is under the exclusive control of the province.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Unless the policy of the Dominion government was to capitalize it to pay the interest on it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If the Dominion government were at any time to refuse to make payment, it might be a source of serious embarrassment to the government of Manitoba, and therefore I say that when the government of Manitoba became an established government, when the party system was introduced, it was in the power of the government, in conformity with the spirit of the original intention, to pay over the capital to the province. It was in the power of the government of the Dominion, in conformity with the spirit of the original intention, to pay over the capital to the province in order that it might control all the sources of revenue except those specifically provided for in the terms of union upon which it relies.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Act is silent on that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am speaking of general principles that are deductable from the very nature of our system of government.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Can Manitoba divert this fund to other purposes, if it wishes to do so, irrespective of the Dominion government?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It would be a gross abuse of authority if it were to do so, just as it would be a gross abuse of power if we were to withhold payment or to divert this fund to some Dominion purpose. I think when the pledge of a parliament has been given, some regard should be had to it. That is a pretty well settled rule in public law, and it is one that will be applicable to a transaction of this sort. As the subject will likely be before this House at a later period, it is not desirable that I should go further at present into topics presented by the series of questions which the hon. gentleman has put.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The hon. gentleman made reference as to what was the intention of the government with regard to this land. May I ask him if it was the intention of the government that it should be for the common schools of the country or for sectarian schools?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It was for the schools as they then existed that they were set apart, but if subsequently the system was changed, it would be for the support of the schools that might exist at any time. The whole system might fifty years hence be wholly different from what it is at the present time, and the schools that at that time would be regarded as public schools would be the schools entitled to the appropriation under this provision. The system in Manitoba has undergone a change, but I have no doubt that the practical results will, at no distant day, be found to be satisfactory to the country.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Could not the hon. gentleman answer specially question No. 7.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I cannot gratify my hon. friend at this moment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I shall not follow the example set by the leader of the government in this House, by entering into a discussion of the question at the present moment. He has given his views of the constitutional attitude of the Dominion in reference to the provinces, and the rights of parliament to deal with the question. Upon that point, there can be no difference of opinion; but when the hon. gentleman told this House that the lands were set apart with a prospective idea of having them transferred to the Manitoba government, the present or any other government, he is certainly labouring under a delusion. The lands were set apart for one special purpose. It was considered at that time that it would be a munificent endowment, for all time, in and of support of a common school system. So particular was the government at that time, to make provisions to prevent the lands, or the moneys arising from the sale thereof, being diverted to any other purpose, or to allow in any way the Manitoba legislature to deal with the question other than the expenditure of the interest upon the money which was invested arising from the sale of lands, and so particular were they to protect the interest of this educational fund, that they placed upon the statute-book a law which provided for the setting apart of a certain section in each township in Manitoba and in the North-west Terrritories, that provision was made that that land should not be sold, even by the Dominion government itself, unless by public auction.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—With a reserve bid of $5 per acre.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, with a reserve bid, as my hon. friend says, of a certain sum per acre. That money, when received by the Dominion government, was to be placed to the credit of the school fund of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and the interest payable thereon was to be handed over annually or semi-annually—I am not sure which—to the government, whatever it might be, for certain purposes only as specified in the Act.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Not a dollar of the principal.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, not a dollar of the principal. Had my hon. friend said that they proposed to advance out of the capital fund a certain sum to aid them in carrying on the public schools in Manitoba, to be recouped hereafter from the sale of the lands, then I could have understood him, because the late governments did precisely the same thing. The early history of that government was this: when the country was becoming settled, the amount of lands which were sold did not yield a sufficient capital to give enough interest to enable the Manitoba government to extend the educational system in the province, as far as they thought was necessary to meet the growing wants of the settlers, and the government at that time advanced out of the fund a certain sum of money to be recouped after the lands were sold; but it never was intended that any portion of the capital arising from the sale of those lands should ever be diverted for any other purpose than that of the maintenance of schools in that part of the Dominion; and it was thought at one time, and I think every member of the Senate and every member of the House of Commons knew well when they acquiesced in the policy of the government at that time, that it was establishing for all the time to come a fund in aid of public school education in that new and growing province. I speak sincerely in this matter, apart from all party feeling or predilections, as I should be very sorry indeed to see the capital depleted in the manner, in which the Minister of Justice has indicated it is to be depleted, because he does not tell the House that they propose to advance this money in order to enable them to meet immediate requirements, but he tells us that they are to give Manitoba this $300,000, and reduce the capital to just that amount. If the hon. gentleman's theory be right, if this Dominion thinks they should divest themselves of the position of guardians of that fund, then let them transfer the whole school lands, capital and all, over to the Manitoba government, and have done with it for ever, if such be considered advisable. I think it would be a fatal error in the interest of the education of the rising generation in Manitoba and the North west Territories, if this fund were handed over to the local authorities to be frittered away just as they please. We should hold it inviolable for the purpose for which it was set apart; individually, I would never be a party to diverting it from the original intention of the parliament of Canada. In Ontario, we all know that there are large sections of land which, many years ago, were set apart for this purpose. The proceeds from that was invested, and it is out of that fund to-day—although it is more than half a century ago, yes, three-quarters of a century, since these lands were set apart, in the reign of George III, for educational purposes in Ontario and Quebec—and it is the interest upon those investments that the Ontario and Quebec governments are now paying out annually to assist the common school system. I think it was a very wise policy in the past, and I sincerely regret that this government intends to depart from it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I did not say that, not a word of it.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I was speaking on the lines on which the leader of the opposition has spoken on this matter. I take the ground that these school lands were a perpetual fund, the interests of which should be applicable as the capital is realized. The amount of lands—computing 25 townships and forty ranges—would make 1,280,000 acres. I have just included that area that is now comparatively settled. It does not cover one-half the whole province of Manitoba; but counting 25 townships running from north to south and forty ranges running from the eastern boundary of the prairie section to the western boundary, we have 1,280,000 acres. Now the reserve price of that, at which it can be sold, is not less than $5 an acre, and it readily brings that as settlement increases, and even seven or eight dollars an acre; but at five dollars an acre that gives a capital fund of $6,400,000. The question is whether that $6,400,000 capital is to be gradually paid over on any demand or request from the provincial government, or whether it is to be perpetuated as a capital fund which will yield for all time to come a matter of $200,000 annually to assist education in the province. That is a question that arises upon the introduction of the bill so far as I am concerned, and as the hon. leader of the government said that the bill is to come before us, I will defer any further remarks I have to make till then.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I wish to say a few words in answer to the hon. Minister of Justice. He refuses to answer my question, as he says I have taken the speech of Mr. Fielding.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I understood the hon. gentleman to say I had based my question on the speech made by Mr. Fielding in the House of Commons. I never saw or heard any speech of Mr. Fielding's. I just took what I understood to be the policy of the government, as indicated by Mr. Fielding bringing down his resolution, which I supposed embodied the policy of the government. It was to certain details in that policy that I was alluding. There is one question at all events that the government could answer, and it is this: the hon. minister could say if in the legislation which is to be introduced here the share belonging to the Roman Catholic minority has been provided for. Is there anything in the government measure making such provision?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see the bill when it comes here in a day or two.

THE YUKON SUPPLIES CONTRACT.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I should like to ask the government whether it is a fact that the Boston Transportation Company, which contracted to take goods up the Yukon, has abandoned its contract, not being able to carry it out?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have heard nothing of it. The minister was asked in my presence a couple of days ago whether the report to that effect in the papers was true, and he said no, that he had no information on the subject.

ABSENCE OF SENATOR ADAMS.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to direct the attention of the government to what I consider an oversight on their part in not providing the same sessional indemnity for Mr. Adams as for Sir Adolphe Caron and Mr. Beatty. I notice in the supplementary estimates that full indemnity has been provided for those hon. gentlemen, notwithstanding that they have been absent. It is known that these two hon. gentlemen in the other House have been absent through accident and illness, and in consequence of that, the government have decided to grant them their full sessional indemnity, which I think is right. Senator Adams attended to his sessional duties as best he could, but owing to extreme illness was compelled, not only to absent himself from the meetings of the House, but to go home. I hope the government, now that their attention is called to the subject, will see that the same justice is done to Senator Adams as to the other hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This is the first time my attention has been drawn to the subject, and although I knew that Senator Adams has been for some time in delicate health, I was not aware that he was unable to attend on account of illness. I will draw the attention of my colleagues to what the hon. gentleman has stated.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I can confirm the statement of the hon. gentleman that Senator Adams is absent through illness. Now that the attention of the government is called to it, I am quite sure they will add his name to the others which have been mentioned.

WINNIPEG AND GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of Bill (148) " An Act respecting the transport contract between Her Majesty and the Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway Company."

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Before that motion is put, I move the motion of which I gave notice yesterday, that the said bill be not now read a third time but that it be read the third time this day six months. My intention yesterday was only to move with reference to the land grant, but I was ruled out of order on the grounds that we have no right to make amendments to any bill which conveys either land or money, and also on the other ground that we have no right to change the destination of any grant which has been made by the government of the day. I therefore want to offer my criticism and also to try and induce this honourable House to accept my motion that the whole bill be thrown out on the ground that the subsidies granted to this company are wasteful and extravagant, and detrimental to the best interests of the public in that part of the province of Manitoba through which this line passes. The hon. Secretary of State yesterday wanted me to put my motion to a vote without speaking. Silence gives consent in a great many cases, but criticism is the safety valve that the people have in any legislation that might come before this parliament. The policy of silence is thoroughly understood by a great many people. I was greatly struck by a sage remark in an article I saw in the Toronto Globe the latter part of the year, that silence would kill any agitation. It was an article referring to an agitation in the United States against the monopoly of the Standard Oil Company. By its control of the press, it could command a policy of silence. The policy of silence, where agitation on a particular subject is concerned, seems to be understood by that newspaper, and by some other newspapers in the country, I have no doubt, where the interests of our monopolies are concerned, railways or others. In fact, I was greatly struck, the last time the discussion of the Kaslo and Slocan Railway case was up here, when I opposed that bill which gives the Canadian Pacific Railway Company power to build that ten miles of a branch, although the debate lasted for three days in this House and was very heated and where the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was trying to get the advantage of the weaker company, I observed the next day I could not find any reference in the leading press to the fact that this discussion had taken place, or that there was any opposition to the bill, or that the weaker company had come here to ask the protection of this House. That is what I call the policy of silence in opposing the weak and allowing the strong to have their way. I think it is most objectionable that any portion of the press should in any way lend itself to a policy of that kind. The press is certainly a power, but if it is controlled, in special interests, the people's interests suffer, where they should be paramount. I am quite prepared to say that our press stands very high as compared with the press of other countries, in its business management, its news and everything of that kind, but it is the organ of communication between the people and the legislatures in all the various provinces and the Dominion, and it should be impartial and always give the people the full benefit, in relation to anything that may be said on the floor of either House, of the criticisms made in their interests. The reason I have moved in regard to this bill is to show the enormous subsidies which have been granted to the present railways. It is only in pursuance of a policy we have been for a great many years following, but it is a policy to which we should call a halt. We should stop encouraging the promoters of railways at the expense of the people, by giving them the lands of the people and bonuses of money. It is a policy that for many years was strongly opposed by the Liberal party when in opposition, and when the Liberal government now brings down a bill giving greater subsidies to this company than were given originally, in so far as they have reduced the mileage that the company are called on to build for the same amount of subsidy, in addition to the guarantee of the bonds of the company for $8,000 a mile by the provincial government and in addition to the fact that their lands are exempt from taxation for thirty years, to bring down such legislation is an additional exhibition of the fact that what the Liberal party advocated in opposition they have no intention of carrying out when they have the power to do so. I wish to show to the House the subsidies which this company enjoys for 125 miles of road : they first of all have the contract subsidy of $40,000 a year, which is one-half the subsidy originally granted for the line from the city of Winnipeg to the Saskatchewan River. Afterwards, in 1896, this was changed, so that 125 miles of this road should obtain $40,000 of that contract subsidy between Gladstone and Lake Dauphin, or upon the 125 miles of road. Now the Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway is transferred over to the west side of Lake Manitoba, to be tacked on from the terminus of the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company's line, and they are now to get that other half of that transport contract and $40,000 for building from a terminus in the neighbourhood of Lake Dauphin for 125 miles north. That is a less mileage than was originally designed, by a good many miles, when the transport contract was first made. In addition to that, they get 6,500 acres per mile, and they get from the provincial government a guarantee of bonds to the extent of $8,000 per mile at four per cent interest. In addition to that, the provincial government exempt all their lands from taxation for a period of thirty years. Those subsidies are enormous. The portion of the road which they constructed last year and the portion which they have to construct this year is as level as the floor of this Senate. It is an alluvial deposit which extends all the way on the west side of Lakes Manitoba and Winnipegosis, until they get their rise in the Riding mountains and Porcupine hills. It is along that alluvial bed that this railway has been projected upon the west side of Lake Manitoba, towards the Saskatchewan River. I wish to show, in addition to that, that they have the right to issue $20,000 a mile bonds. They have $40,000 a year from the transport contract and they have 6,500 acres per mile exemption from taxation for thirty years on that land according to Act of the provincial government. I wish to show that it is extravagant, because if the Dominion government wish to save the resources of the country and assist that country by a liberal policy, they will guarantee the bonds really instead of giving that company any grant. It is out of the building up and the settlement of the country and getting the business of the country that they should expect to make a fair return for the capital that is invested. When you guarantee the bonds of a railway, you secure its construction. You obviate the necessity of giving further aid of any kind or description. The object of giving the aid originally was to induce the opening up of certain portions of the country that had no settlement. When you guarantee the bonds you furnish that power. A guarantee of four per cent interest on $8,000 a mile by the provincial government is equal to a guarantee of $12,000 a mile at two and three-quarter per cent on the capital, the rate at which the Dominion government place their securities. It does not cost more than $8,000 a mile to build that road. The earth is easily removed. There is no fencing to be done and no right of way to purchase. The timber for ties is scattered all along the line. They have simply to purchase the rails under present circumstances. Take the evidence of Mr. Jennings as to the cost of the rails in the Yukon district, and you will find that the cost of constructing this road is only $8,000 a mile, with a good margin of profit. The guarantee of bonds by the provincial government furnishes the whole of the funds they require. If they were to sell their bonds, say $4,000 unguaranteed and $8,000 guaranteed at 4 per cent together, it will give the purchasers of bonds of $12,000 a mile two and three-quarter per cent on that capital. It leaves them enough to pay their interest and have a large surplus. Then $40,000 a year for thirty years is equal to another $8,000 per mile, or capitilized it is equal to a gift of a million dollars. There is $8,000 a mile guaranteed by the credit of the Manitoba government and $8,000 a mile a clear gift through the transport contract. That is spoken of as something they have to pay, but in this generation at least the outside that probably that railway will be called upon to do for the Dominion government is probably a couple of thousand dollars a year for the mails they have to carry, so that the transport contract is more of a loan to hide up an enormous subsidy than anything else. Then the sale of bonds at $16,000 a mile, on half of which interest is guaranteed at four per cent, is equal to two per cent on the whole. The issue of bonds at two per cent would fetch a high price on the London market with the security of a railway serving prosperous settlements behind it, hon. gentlemen will see what a large asset they have in that. They have $16,000 a mile of a cash asset at two per cent, to build a road which does not cost more than $8,000 a mile to construct. Then, in addition to the bonding power, there is the land grant, 6,500 acres per mile, and exemption from taxation for thirty years, and a million dollars capitilized by the $40,000 a year. All the Hudson Bay Company's lands are taxed, and the Hudson Bay Company pays an average of six and a half cents per acre on all the lands that they own in the country. So that that is a fair basis for us to make a calculation upon as to what the bonus accorded to this company in the exemption of their land grant from taxation amounts to. It is equal to a cash bonus of $40,000 a year for thirty years. That is what that company gets. They are getting all the bonding privileges, the guarantee of interest and in addition to that they are getting an exemption for thirty years from taxation for a land grant. It is an outrage on the settlers. It is the settlers who live in the neighbourhood of those lands who have to bear that $40,000 a year.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is there a guarantee of interest in the old Act?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—No, it is a guarantee of interest by the provincial government. The provincial government guaranteed the interest. I will read the section of the Act:

> And whereas by an Act of the legislature of Manitoba entituled "An Act to amend an Act respecting Aid to Railways," and being chapter 10 of the statutes of Manitoba for the year 1896, it was made lawful for the government, on such terms and conditions as might be agreed upon with the company, to aid and assist the construction of a line of railway by the company from a point in or near the town of Portage la Prairie or in or near the town of Gladstone or from some point on the line of the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company which may be authorized by the charter of the company, running in a northerly or north-westerly direction west of Lake Manitoba to a point west of Lake Dauphin, or passing west of Lake Dauphin to a point at or near Lake Winnipegosis, in the province of Manitoba, by guaranteeing the principal and interest of first mortgage bonds of the company to the amount of eight thousand dollars per mile of such railway, bearing interest at the rate of four per cent per annum, for a term of thirty years from the date of the issue of the said bonds, and by exempting the company, its property and franchises from taxation during the period of such guarantee; such bonds and the interest thereon to be a first charge upon the line of railway, and the franchises of the company, and the rolling stock, tolls and revenues of the said line of railway (other than any aid to which the company may be or become entitled from the government of Canada) in pursuance of the Act of Incorportion of the company and the General Railway Act of Canada.

The provincial government guarantee the bonds at four per cent, and they merely take a lien upon the line that is laid down, and the road bed and the station houses that are constructed. There is still left in the hands of the promoters the 6,500 acres per mile and the $40,000 a year from the transport contract, and, in addition to that, an exemption from taxation for thirty years. All those lands are exempt from taxation, and where the settlers live in the neighbourhood of those lands they have to bear the full burden of maintaining the roads, schools, their municipal institutions and everything else. That must present itself to us as a perfect swindle upon the public, that promoters should be able to get enough money by the guarantee of the bonds to build the whole road, and that then they should be allowed to walk in and deposit it in any shape or form wherever they like without any obligation to the public, a land grant of 6,500 acres per mile with exemption from taxation for thirty years, and a money grant of $40,000, which could be capitalized at any time and $1,000,000 raised on it. Is it a wise thing for us to pursue a policy of that kind? Is it right that the public interest should be sacrificed in that way? For what? For the enrichment of a few men. That is all it is. It cannot be shown by the government that, so far as the construction of that road, is concerned, it will cost anything more than the guarantee of four per cent interest by the Manitoba government. Is it right that the settlers of the country should be compelled for thirty years to live alongside of the land which is not called upon to pay any taxes of any kind, and that the settlers are compelled to maintain all the organization which is absolutely necessary and to construct bridges and roads and everything else. I say it is a wrong and should be stopped. I say we should stop it at the present moment. We should throw this bill back and remodel the principle upon which public aid is to be given. It was only my intention to amend it in so far as the land grant is concerned to save the settlers from exemption of large tracts adjacent to their holdings. I moved yesterday that the land granted was ultra vires. I could find no record of the government having divested the Winnipeg and Great Northern of this land grant before reassigning it to another locality. As regards the transfer of the land grant on the first 125 miles, they apparently divested the company before transferring to another route, but they do not appear to have pursued that course in this case. If they like to leave the transport contract and the guarantee of the bonds the provincial government would then have no power to except these lands from taxation for thirty years. I ask this House to give the six months' hoist to this bill. The 125 miles which is supposed to be covered by this bill does not contain one solitary settler of any consequence at present. The settlement had gone up as far as Lake Dauphin and the 125 miles serves the whole of that district and it is paying its way,—paying interest on its bonds, paying all its charges and everything else ; so that what they got last year in the shape of a land subsidy and exemption from taxation and a cash subsidy of $40,000 a year, is a clear cash profit to the promoters of the road and a few friends that may be attached to them. There is no immediate demand for this road. What the transport contract that was granted and the petitions of the people were for was to urge that we should construct this road, because it is the opening of the Hudson Bay route. They would like to see that road opened as competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway and if this bill is not designed with that object in view, not designed in order to promote that object, and that these large assets should go to pay for the most expensive part north of the Saskatchewan, I say it is a fraud upon the public and the people there to construct that road at the present moment except in connection with the whole construction to the bay. I have no doubt a few people would be disappointed in Manitoba, by the postponement of the work, but that is not reason for haste in this matter. If hon. gentlemen will consider what the subsidies to that 125 miles of road on that level district amount to, they will find it is equal to the subsidies given the Canadian Pacific Railway as a whole. The aid given to that great line that we built from the Atlantic to the Pacific, which was a great national work, was denounced by members of the Liberal party, and we were told that the country was being robbed. This is a company that has only to build 125 miles upon alluvial soil and if you compare the subsidy given to this company with the subsidies given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, which ran on the north shore of Lake Superior and into the Rocky Mountains, and through the desert prairie for 800 miles, you will find the Canadian Pacific Railway mileage subsidies were no greater than you are giving to this company to build 125 miles on that level piece of land which cannot possibly cost more than $8,000 for its construction, even if they were to pay the men much more liberally than the Canadian Pacific Railway contractors were doing on the Crow's Nest Pass, and which has lately developed such widespread indignation in the neglect of the safety or ordinary comforts of their hands in that isolated section of the country which offered them no relief except that provided by the company.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I would ask the hon. gentleman whether he considers it would be better that the road should be built to the Saskatchewan as was originally intended, or in the section of country which it is now traversing. I had always opposed the building of the road to the Saskatchewan and I understood at the time of the debate that the country to the westward was very much better. I think that was clearly demonstrated. When the line was subsidized, as it was in 1891, with a land and money subsidy, the argument used was that it was traversing a country not fit for settlement, and few of us believed it would ever reach the Hudson Bay. At all events, the money and the land grants were also given for the construction of a line to the Saskatchewan. I have the statutes of 1891, but the land grant appears to have been earlier than that, because a reference was made to the land grant at that time. So that parliament, having committed itself to the land grant and money subsidy, my hon. friend considers we should now avail ourselves of the opportunity, when the road is being deflected through a country which I am advised is very much better than the road originally intended to open up, that we should now repudiate this land grant and the money subsidy.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Never refuse to repudiate an evil.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But it received a very large vote at that time, I voted against it myself.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—There was no question of exempting the land from taxation then, or the practical abandonment of the Hudson Bay Railway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Was it the present government that granted the exemption?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then the hon. gentleman's strictures are not intended for the present government. Having given a land grant and having confirmed it I do not think that we would stand in a very favourable light if we repudiated that grant.

The amendment was lost on a division.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

IRON AND STEEL BOUNTIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (159) "An Act to amend the Act to provide for bounties on iron and steel made in Canada."

(In the Committee.)

On clause 1.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When the Finance Minister made his statement on the 23rd April, he announced that it was proposed to give for another term of five years the bounties on iron and steel made in Canada. The five years were to expire on the 23rd day of April, 1902. In bringing in the Act, it was dated 29th June, and there was no reference to its ante-dating to the 23rd April, as it should have, and this is simply to correct what was an error at that time in order that the parties may be entitled to the full five years as promised.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It was to continue the bounties?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, the bargain was made that the bounties should be continued another five years. The bounties were to expire on the 23rd April, 1897. The Act was only passed in June, and the commission was made in the Act, and it was not made to date from the 23rd April as was promised in the Finance Minister's speech. This is simply to correct that in order that the five years term that was announced should be correctly given.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Could the hon. minister tell me who is interested in this matter?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I asked the Minister of Finance as to that, and he said he did not know of anybody who was specially interested in it, but the announcement was made that it would be continued for five years. The five years would not have been complete unless it was dated from the 23rd April, 1897.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Some person must have been interested in this, for it is not likely that the attention of the government would otherwise have been called to the subject. It is not usual for the government, in cases of this kind, to dispose of the public funds without somebody applies, but if my hon. friend says he does not know, I must take his word for it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I suppose my hon. friend will admit that the intention of the Finance Minister was that this bounty should date from that day for five years, and the country would naturally expect the promise would be carried out.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know when it is intended by the Finance Minister, representing the government, to give effect to any proposition that he may make in changing the duties, to state by resolution when it shall take effect. That is the practice, and if that be not done, then the law goes into operation when it receives the Governor General's sanction. It is not always that the provision is made for bringing the Act into operation on the day of the announcement of the Finance Minister. What was the intention of the Finance Minister at the time I do not know.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the bill be read the third time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to ask if the attention of the government has been called to the fact that some of these smelting works have been bringing in ore from the United States, and if so, whether that ore in being mixed with the Canadian ore and the pig iron made therefrom receives the bounty? I know that under the old law that was not permissible.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I think not. The words are :

The Governor in Council may authorize the payment of the following bounties on steel ingots, puddled iron bars and pig iron made in Canada, that is to say :—

On steel ingots manufactured from ingredients of which not less than fifty per cent of the weight thereof consists of pig iron made in Canada, a bounty of three dollars per ton ;

On puddle iron bars manufactured from pig iron made in Canada, a bounty of three dollars per ton ;

On pig iron manufactured from ore, a bounty of three dollars per ton on the proportion produced from Canadian ore, and two dollars per ton on the proportion produced from foreign ore.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That being the law, as I understand it, the smelting works have the right to import free of duty, ore from a foreign country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A part.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, and they would receive two-fifths of the bounty on pig iron manufactured from the foreign ores and three-fifths on iron manufactured from Canadian ores.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, that appears to be the law.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time and passed.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (76) "An Act to provide for the abolition of the Civil Service Superannuation Act and for the retirement of members of the Civil Service." He said : I may say to hon. gentlemen that this bill is intended to supercede the present Civil Service Superannuation Act. It does not affect civil servants who are now in the service of the government ; it is prospective in its provisions, with this exception, that any of those who are now in the civil service who desire to have the contributions they have made, with the interest at a certain rate, may come under the provisions of this bill, and in that event they would be counted the same as the civil servants who are appointed after this bill comes into operation. The bill provides that every person who is now in the service, and who before the 1st day of January, 1899, with the consent of the Governor in Council, elects to accept the provisions of this bill in lieu of the Civil Service Superannuation Act, he has the power to do so. Then it also provides for a retirement act. Hon. gentlemen know that under the Civil Service Superannuation Act at the present time the number who can enjoy the benefits of that Act are few and uncertain. If one lives up to the period of his retirement, on going out he is entitled to a certain retiring allowance during his lifetime, but if he dies in the public service there is nothing awarded to his wife, or his children, or his next of kin. In that respect the principle of the Civil Service Act that is now in force differs entirely from the principle on which this bill is based. Under this statute, a party who is appointed to the civil service, after his appointment, will contribute five per cent of his salary per annum, and upon the sum so contributed he will receive four per cent per annum, compounded half yearly, so that of course the amount he receives——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He does not receive it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Receive is not the proper word to use ; it is placed to the credit of the party, who receives nothing as long as he is in the public service, but if he should die in the public service, or if he should retire from the public service, then he himself, in case of retirement, receives the amount of money, with the interest accumulated on it in the way I have mentioned and at the rate I have mentioned at such retirement ; or on his death it will be paid to his wife, or children, or the next of kin. It is thought that this system, on the whole, will prove more satisfactory than the other, and that there will be less anxiety on the part of persons in the public service to retire before they have reached that age when they can no longer, to their own comfort or to the advantage of the public service, continue as public servants.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill.

(In the Committee.)

On subsection a of clause 2.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I see that the effect of this clause and of the bill generally would be to do away with the present Civil Service Superannuation Act, so far as the appointment of any new persons to offices under the government is concerned, and that after this bill passes, any person receiving an appointment in the public service will not receive the superannuation allowance to which he would be entitled under the Act as it stands at present. Now I think this is retrograde legislation: people who go into the civil service generally receive appointments which they hold during good behaviour, and which they should hold as long as they are capable of discharging the duties of the office. They should not be discharged from any office of that kind for political considerations, and it is owing to the very fact that people have been discharged for political considerations, from offices of this kind, that the Civil Service Superannuation Act has come to be considered as a burden on the revenues of the country. When a man goes into the civil service and has spent the greater part of his life in that service, it is but right that he should receive some consideration other than the salary he receives for giving up his life practically to the benefit of the civil service of the Dominion. He is unfitted for going into any other business after he has been a number of years in the civil service, and it is only right, and a reasonable policy, that there should be some further consideration given to him than that which is proposed under the bill we now have before us. The civil service superannuation of the Dominion is looked on as a good and wise provision for those who are in the civil service, and I am very sorry indeed to see that it is the intention of the government to do away with it so far as any new appointees are concerned.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Those who have been in the civil service for ten years remain as they are, I understand.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—All who are in the civil service.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I think that is a very good feature of the bill, that on the death of a civil servant his legal representatives will receive the amount to his credit.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 3.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does this clause refer to those who have been paying to the superannuation fund for say six or eight years, who would not be entitled to superannuation until they had served ten years? Their rights and privileges are conserved by this bill, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know that was a great cause of complaint. The original measure excluded them.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This bill does not touch any one already in the service. Any one in the service has until the first of January next to make up his mind whether he will remain under the old Act or come under the provisions of this bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This abolishes the system of superannuation to all appointees in the future, and a reserve fund established in lieu thereof, which is taken out of the salaries instead of being applied to the superannuation fund, and it does away with the old system of superannuation and establishes a fund which goes to the family in case of death or dismissal.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The man who contributes to the fund is absolutely certain to receive everything to which he is entitled, with compound interest at the rate of four per cent compounded half yearly, so that he and his family are absolutely certain to receive that to which they were entitled, whereas under the old law the chances were he would get nothing.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Would he not receive as much or more in an insurance company as under this act?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—When a man retires does he get the interest or take the whole amount to which he is entitled?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He draws all that he is entitled to.

The clause was adopted.

On the title of the bill.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I need scarcely say that the bill, as remodelled, is entirely free from objection.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to call attention to the title of this bill. It does not abolish the Superannuation Act, so far as it affects those who are now in the service. Might I suggest to the hon. gentleman to make it read an Act to limit the operation of the Civil Service Superannuation Act? It is true it abolishes the operation of the Act so far as future appointments are concerned, but it does not abolish or repeal the Act now upon the statute-book.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is a bill to provide for the abolition of Civil Service Superannuation, and it does provide for that. All these persons will disappear under the operation of this bill. The old law will apply as long as they live, but the time will come when they will cease to exist and there will be no further perpetuation of the system.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hope the hon. gentleman will live until it ceases to exist.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I thank the hon. gentleman for his good wishes, I hope to remain where I am that long.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, no, not there.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is really a bill to provide for the abolition of Civil Service Superannuation. I move that the title be amended by striking out the word "the" before "civil" and the word "Act" after "Superannuation." It will then read: "An Act to provide for the abolition of Civil Service Superannuation."

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I could suggest a somewhat different title from that which my hon. friend has suggested, if it were necessary, but the enacting part of the bill will not be affected by the title, and it is hardly worth while to send this bill back to the House of Commons for the sake of correcting what we think is an obscurity in the title.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You provide for the abolition of the Act, yet you provide in clause 1, that it shall apply to those who are now in the civil service.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that it is really not for the abolition of the Civil Service Superannuation Act. Abolition is not the proper word to use. If it was intended to repeal the Act, "repeal" is the word that would be used. But this is to provide for a limitation of the Act and it limits the duration and the application of Civil Service Superannuation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The amendment would not jeopardize the bill; it is well to use the word "limitation."

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is hardly necessary

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was then read the third time and passed,

ST. JOHN BRIDGE & RAILWAY EXTENSION COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (157) "An Act respecting the repayment of moneys advanced to the St. John Bridge and Railway Extension Company." He said: It is practically an extension of the loan the government made to the company. It was advanced for a period of fifteen years, which is now expiring, and this bill is to continue the loan for a period of fifteen years longer, the government having the privilege of taking over the bridge under certain conditions.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the bill.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The government do not collect their interest do they?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, it is a good investment.

On clause 4.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Has the government at present power to take over the bridge?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, the bill is word for word the same as the old arrangement.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Are the government contemplating taking over the bridge?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The government is merely protecting its own interest in the Intercolonial Railway.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Do I understand that the government are obliged to pay for the cost of that bridge, adding ten per cent?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the government take it over they are obliged to pay the cost of the bridge and ten per cent additional.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—How long has that bridge been in existence?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Fifteen years.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Bridge building was more expensive then than it is now, and that would be an excessive price to pay for the work.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We do not intend to take it over.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The Canadian Pacific Railway Company are interested in this bridge as well as the government, and they might wish to buy it and might be willing to give more than that for it. The bill ties the company up to sell the bridge to the government.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Do you think that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would pay, as a commercial transaction, the cost of a bridge built fifteen years ago, with ten per cent added, when we all know that such work cost a great deal more then than it costs now? I do not believe that any commercial concern in the country would do it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Let me say to my hon. friend that the dividends from the management of the bridge may be considerable.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Then keep the bridge as it is. But if the government exercise their privilege and take it over, they should bear in mind that they could build that bridge for twenty-five per cent less now than it cost fifteen years ago. The government take the power to do it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We have always had that power.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—At the ten per cent advance.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—It might be a very comfortable investment for the shareholders of the company, in which case it would be only fair, in taking it over compulsorily, that some compensation should be given to them.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As a matter of fact, the business of the bridge has been larger than was expected, and at present the work is a paying property. I regret that the Secretary of State rather scouts the idea of the government taking it over. I think the day is not far distant when it will be good policy on the part of the government to take it over and operate it as part of the Intercolonial Railway. Every car going from the upper provinces or elsewhere to St. John crosses this bridge going to the point of shipment to Europe, and each car has to pay, as I understand, a fee of five dollars. It would be a very important thing for the government to get rid of that altogether in the interests of the Intercolonial Railway.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that the Intercolonial Railway has to cross that bridge? It does not go that way at all.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There are steamers which sail from St. John which receive a subsidy and, as I understand, these steamers sail from the west side of the harbour, and in order to get there it is necessary to cross the bridge.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—But the Intercolonial Railway does not cross there?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Intercolonial Railway cars do go over the bridge carrying freight for the steamers to Europe, and every car which goes to Carleton has to pay a fee for crossing this bridge.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—The Intercolonial Railway might carry goods to St. John, but not over this bridge. The cars would go over the bridge by the Canadian Pacific Railway or the western extension, as we call it; but I cannot conceive why the Intercolonial Railway should control this bridge except in the interest of the people of Halifax. The people of Halifax are anxious that the government should take over this bridge in order that Halifax might get the advantage of it. St. John went to an expense of eight hundred thousand dollars the last few years for the purpose of having a winter port there, and we do not think it would be right on the part of the government to make a free bridge of this by any means.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

DOMINION ATLANTIC RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (162) "An Act to confirm a certain award in favour of the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company,"

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the bill.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I stated, when this bill was read the first time what the object of it was. The Dominion Atlantic Railway Company was exempted from certain customs duties upon their imports for their road. It was found that this gave rise to a great deal of inconvenience, and it is proposed that these rights and privileges should terminate —that the company should hereafter pay for anything imported for the use of the railway, the ordinary customs charges. The matter was referred to the judge of the Court of Exchequer and he estimated the value of these franchises to the company at something over one thousand dollars, and this bill is for the purpose of carrying out that decision or award, to enable the government to pay the amount and to collect from this company the same charges that are imposed on other parties importing like articles.

Hon. Mr. KING, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS AND FISHERIES PROTECTION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (153) "An Act further to protect the Customs and Fisheries." He said: It has been found that very considerable smuggling has been going on in the lower St. Lawrence at the French islands, St. Pierre and Miquelon. Some swift boats are engaged in the smuggling and they have eluded our cruisers. The object of the bill is to authorize the officers having charge of the Canadian cruisers, when they see vessels that they suspect of having smuggled goods on board, to hail them and if they do not come to, our officers can discharge a blank shot, and if that does not have the effect they can fire upon them. The other clauses of the bill are simply providing for the penalties for refusing to come to, amounting first to the seizure of the smuggled goods and on the refusal to acquiesce to seize the vessel.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill.

(In the Committee.)

On the second clause.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—That is a very dangerous clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has been found necessary in several countries.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I have no sympathy for the smugglers; but seeing that the gulf is navigated by many vessels who have no business to know our laws, you might find yourselves in a very peculiar position if you fired into and sunk a valuable yacht.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When the blank shot is fired across her bow, she generally comes to.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I would strike out that line about firing into the vessel itself.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The bill is of no use if you have not the power to inflict injury.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no doubt this is a declaration of war on the part of the customs official, or police magistrate, or any one sailing with the vessel, and while I would go a long way to place power in the hands of customs officials in order to protect the revenue, still I must confess I am very much of the opinion of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, that it is an exceedingly dangerous power to place in the hands of those who ordinarily command these vessels. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if the power granted in this clause is given in the marine service? In firing into a vessel you may kill half a dozen people, and of course this is for the very purpose of exempting the captain of the vessel, or the police magistrate, or whoever may give the command, from being indicted and punished for committing, what, under other circumstances, would be considered either manslaughter or murder—murder under the circumstances. It is not my intention to oppose the passage of the bill, but I call the attention of the hon. gentleman to this fact, that serious complications may arise with foreign nations if the provisions of this law be carried out, and death result from attempts to catch a smuggler. Yet I admit that where they have swifter vessels than the Canadian cruisers or those engaged in the protective service, they can run away. Smuggling in the St. Lawrence is beyond all conception, and will continue just as long as there is a profit to be made out of it, and that is one reason why I thought the government made a mistake in increasing the duties upon spirits. I am speaking now exclusively from a revenue standpoint, and alluding to the incentive which is given to parties in foreign countries to smuggle those articles into the country, while they can make one hundred dollars out of a barrel of whisky, as they can if they get it into the country by smuggling, the inducement is so great that people will engage in the business, who would not under other circumstances, as they can afford to lose two or three cargoes if they can succeed in getting one in. However, the government take the responsibility of having this extraordinary power. I warn the government as to what may possibly result, particularly if you have indiscreet commanders on board the vessels.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I entirely agree with a good deal that has fallen from my hon. friend. The explanation is that the smugglers are pretty well known to those who are after them. It is only a certain set of men who are engaged in this business, and they are known, and their vessels are known. I should not apprehend that there would be any great danger of an independent vessel, not engaged in the trade, being fired upon.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You suspect a vessel and fire a shot as a signal to heave to. It does not say it shall be fired across the bow, and if she does not stop, you fire into the vessel itself.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If this clause is adopted it will exempt the parties who obey it from responsibility as long as they are in Canadian waters. As to our powers to legislate beyond the marine league from our own shore, that is a very different question. Under the provisions of the British North America Act, which gives us power to provide for our defences by land and our naval defences, it would seem to indicate that there was an intention to form the laws of Canada so as to have force beyond the marine league; otherwise it would be difficult to see how you could commission a captain and send him from here to Hudson Bay, where a portion of his journey will be upon the high seas, if, the moment he passed the legal boundry of the country, he was under the imperial law, and not under the law of Canada upon that subject; but where our laws relating to civil matters and matters of police could have a like effect given to them, a marine league from our shore, I think would be very doubtful. Take, for instance, the question of copyright: it has been held that our law has no operating force beyond our own immediate borders, and the same with regard to other provisions. This bill, if it becomes law, of course will operate within our own territories; whether wise or unwise, it will be law. But beyond the marine league it might be that it would be no protection to a party who would undertake to act under it.

Hon Mr. DRUMMOND—Might I ask if the government is informed as to the powers given by England and other nations, to the revenue cutters, for example, especially engaged in such service as this? Does the hon. gentleman happen to know whether they have this power of firing into a vessel?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think so.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would be useless without it.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—It is a dangerous power and might lead to a great deal of trouble. If I were Minister of Marine—which fortunately I am not—I would require my coileague, the Minister of Justice, to furnish a deputy instructed in the law, and not only capable of navigation, but capable of interpreting the laws of our country, for each cruiser that goes out.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—With reference to the seizure of vessels that are engaged in illegal fishing, you cannot follow them with our revenue cutters beyond the three-mile limit.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Here is the danger in the Act. The captain would have to decide, before he fired into the ship, that it was within the three-mile limit; because, if he fired a shot outside of the three-mile limit, he would be amenable to the laws of the country into whose vessel he fired.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Under the United States Act, which is of the same character, and other Acts in connection with the revenue laws in both countries, it was a long time the custom to claim the right of searching vessels, to see if they were not contemplating a violation of the revenue laws of the country, at a very considerable distance from the shore, ten marine leagues I think. But the English law officers, and the English courts have, of recent years, held that that is not law, that a government cannot legislate so as to affect the rights of others beyond the marine league. In a case not so many years ago, where a vessel which belonged to a Sardinian was seized beyond the marine league, the government of Sardinia applied to an eminent English publicist to know whether that seizure was legal or not, and his answer was that it was not legal, but that, as a matter of comity, it was the practice of different states who had mutual interests in the enforcement of their revenue laws, not to come to the assistance of their own subjects who were undertaking to violate the customs laws of other countries, and, therefore, he recommended to Sir Travers Twist that the government of Sardinia should take no action in the matter. But the principle is well settled.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My experience has been, in dealing with the wrecking laws, that the captain and his officers, or men, or vessels engaged in smuggling or violating the coasting or customs laws, will swear to anything. I have had scores of cases brought to my notice by the Secretary of State at Washington, where affidavits of almost every one on board, were made which would lead to the impression that the Canadians had violated every principle of the law, and persecuted them even to the extent of loss of life, and when an investigation had taken place there was not one word of truth in their statements. If you fire on smugglers, I venture the statement that you will find every one on board making affidavit that the shot was fired and the injury sustained beyond the three-mile limit, and hence the danger that presents itself to the minds of those who have had experience with that class of people, in dealing with subjects somewhat cognate to this.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 4.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I take it, by the last words of this clause you are reaffirming the principle of the moiety system, that is, distributing certain portions of the penalties for the infringement of custom laws to the persons engaged in the seizure.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I suppose so—governed by the customs law.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I point this out, not for the purpose of objecting to this clause, because I took about two hours once to defend the principle in the Commons, but to point out another advance and improvement in the hon. gentlemen opposite. They condemned it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not remember it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not attributing the opposition to my hon. friend himself, because I am not sure, but I am very much surprised if he did not, because he had very seldom a good word for the late government; if he thought there was an opportunity of striking them, he never hesitated to do it, was one of the great complaints of the hon. gentleman's party when in opposition, that this system led to incroachments on peoples rights, and that it was done for the sake of making money, and should be abolished. They are now reaffirming it in this bill, so that officers who do shoot will get a part of the penalty and fine.

Hon. Mr. FORGET, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was then read a third time and passed, under a suspension of the rules.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (152) "An Act to amend The Customs Act." He said: This bill is to define more clearly the regulations and terms upon which goods can be warehoused as ships stores. Goods not warehoused may be taken by a vessel that is going to a foreign country, and she is allowed to take a sufficient quantity that she may require in her voyage. The law, I think, already exists on the statute-book and this is for the purpose of making it clear. Another clause in the bill is for the purpose of fixing the standard for tea. It appears that there is a good deal of inferior tea being brought into Canada. In other countries they have regulations requiring it to be inspected before it is sold in the country, and we propose to adopt similar regulations here. Subsection (r) provides for the transportation of goods in bond. It applies to a case which recently occurred, and which my hon. friend opposite is no doubt aware of, where goods were shipped from Canada, taken through the United States to Alaska or to the Yukon country. It provides that regulations may be made under which goods may be transported to a foreign country.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is mistaken in the purport of this bill. The object of it is not to make more clear the clause which is upon the statute-book, but to extend the privileges which have been granted to fishing vessels in the past. It goes a good deal beyond that. Under the law as it stands upon the statute-book, fishing vessels going a certain number of leagues from the shore can take on board, out of bond, without paying duty, certain goods for consumption upon the vessel while they are so employed. This gives the right, which has by courtesy been allowed in the past to sea-going vessels, to take from bond goods that may be required for consumption during the time of the voyage, without payment of duty, and also provides—of course that is the same provision as the old law—that if they are re-landed they shall be forfeited, but they can be re-landed, provided they are put in bond upon the re-landing of the goods. The section with reference to tea is a good provision. The paragraph under the letter "R" I presume is to meet reciprocally the Act which has lately been passed by congress granting certain bonding privileges on goods passing through the United States territory and entering the Yukon district.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If my recollection serves me right, that law provides for a reciprocal arrangement for the carrying on of this trade, and necessitates the passage of an Act in accordance with the provisions of the Act of the United States. That is the reason I presume for this.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have the original clause, 105.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But that is the interpretation I put upon it. Is it correct or not?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I think the hon. gentleman's interpretation of it is correct.

The bill was read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was read the third time and passed, under a suspension of the rules.

At Six o'Clock the Senate adjourned.

NORTH-WEST IRRIGATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (146) "An Act to amend and consolidate the North-west Irrigation Act of 1894 and 1895." He said : In making the amendments to this Act it was thought better to consolidate the Acts which had been passed, and to make the changes which the experience of the officers in charge of the North-west Irrigation prompted. The law originally was taken from the United States and adapted to Canada, and in the few years it has been in operation it has been found that changes were necessary. None of them are at all important. They are of such a character, however, as will be best explained when we go into committee. I will then point out any clauses that are new and any verbal changes that have been made in the clauses.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the bill.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 10.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The section in the Act reads :

> When any person abandons or ceases to use the waters acquired by him for the purposes, &c., his right to use them shall cease.

The provisions of section 10 in the old bill are contained in clause 33 of this bill. The only change in that clause is that the chief engineer is the officer now who is authorized to issue the licenses and the chief engineer is substituted for the agent in the old Act.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is a change which I should like my hon. friend to consent to in clause 10, and it is that this provision for the payment of the fee of five dollars be stricken out. The government is undoubtedly very anxious to introduce irrigation into the North-west Territories. This is largely confined to settlers who can ill afford to pay a fee of five dollars. There is no necessity whatever that a fee of five dollars should be paid by the settler, because he goes into the departmental office and intimates to the public officer in charge of that office that he desires to enter upon a scheme of irrigation. You might as well say that any person, desirous of improving his land should, upon intimating to the government that desire, pay a fee of five dollars. Why should the government exact this fee ? There is no expense incident to that information being conveyed to the officer in charge. There is no particular right conceded to him. Then why, in addition to the other exacting charges which I shall hereafter point out, should this charge be placed upon him ? In fact, it is an embargo, it seems to me, at the very threshold of the industry.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have never heard that there was any objection to the fee. It applies not only to the individual farmer, but to companies.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why should you exact it from the company ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It applies to companies who propose to use irrigation for profit to themselves.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is there a fee charged under the old Act ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes ; there is no change at all.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I had a conversation with the member for Alberta, Mr. Oliver, upon this subject, and he feels very strongly in regard to it. He has had many opportunities of coming in contact with those who contemplate entering upon this particular industry, and he says there is a very strong feeling throughout the whole district that fees of this character should not be exacted from the settler. Officials are appointed by the government for the purpose of performing certain duties. Why then should this office be made an office practically of taxation upon the settlers because they desire to enter upon a most salutory industry and improve their property and the property of the country to the extent contemplated by the Act ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman will see that the machinery ought to be self-sustaining, and the fee of five dollars is no more than would pay the salaries of the officers who are charged with the administration of this law, and it is only reasonable and proper that the expense should be paid by the parties who avail themselves of the privileges they can obtain under this bill, because they use water that, as mere riparian proprietors, they would not be entitled to. They are getting a substantial advantage.

No doubt they ought to be encouraged and every facility given to them, but at the same time I think the law in its administration should not be a tax upon the community outside, that it should pay actual disbursements, and the five dollars would not do more than that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Your other officers in charge of lands practically perform this duty. It only relates to the application. If you were granting some particular right, the same as you grant to a settler when he makes application for a homestead, or a miner when he makes an application for a license to take up mining land, I could very well understand it; but you are not conceding to the individual, or corporation, any right which is to-day, of any value to the country; in fact, there should be every encouragement extended to the settler that he might be induced to enter upon irrigation.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Make it two dollars.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I shall be very glad to have it reduced, but five dollars is considered large to the people out there. The only district in which irrigation is carried on is the district represented by the member for Alberta, and he took particular care to address to the Minister of the Interior a very long letter, and this was one of the subjects dealt with, but by some means or other the Minister of the Interior did not receive it; and he came specially to me and urged this objection for the purpose of adapting the bill to the needs of that particular district and making it acceptable to the people. I move that the following words in the third line be struck out "and upon payment of a fee of five dollars."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It ought not to be a tax on the general community certainly; but make it three dollars and let it go.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—All right.

The clause was amended and adopted.

On clause 11.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Referring to subsection (c), I suppose this is the old law, but still I think it is rather objectionable. This paragraph says "a general plan in duplicate, on tracing linen, drawn to a scale of not less than one inch to a line." To prepare a plan of that kind will require the services of a civil engineer, or at least of a Dominion land surveyor, and in the case of a farmer in the North-west, who is anxious to introduce irrigation on his farm, it means that he shall be put to the expense of employing an engineer, or a land surveyor, to draw this plan. It seems to me that as long as the plan is good enough to show what the applicant requires, that is all he should be asked for. My own feeling is that we should strike out the words after duplicate "on tracing linen drawn to a scale of not less than one inch to the mile."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is a much more simple method than has been heretofore in vogue under the law as it stood.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am thankful to my hon. friend from Halifax for making the suggestion, but when we reach clause 17 I am going to propose that discretion should be vested in the Minister of the Interior to dispense with those particular requirements in the case of small irrigation plans, so that the difficulty may be overcome in that way.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If hon. gentlemen will look at the section of the existing law they will see what a wonderful improvement this is. The details are very much fuller in the law than under this bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They would come under the general language of subsection (c).

Hon. Mr. O'DONOHOE—It seems to me that the clause is much better as it is, because the plan referred to here is the general plan of the district to be drained. You must have a proper tracing for that. It is not a plan to be provided by the person whose land is to be irrigated. The plan referred to here is the plan of the district to be drained, showing the source of the intake—that means from the beginning to the end of the district to be drained. For that you must have a general plan, made by a properly qualified surveyor. If it required each farmer to make a plan for himself it would be objectionable, but the plan referred to here is the plan that the engineer makes and has before him to regulate the whole district to be affected.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend is mistaken. Every applicant for license must provide such a plan.

Hon. Mr. O'DONOHOE—A general plan in duplicate showing the source of supply, the position of the point of intake, the location of the main canals or ditches—it describes everything in the way of the waters, including the tract of land to be irrigated and the names of the owners whose lands are to be crossed by the ditch. That means the whole plan of the district, and has no reference to the individual or his parcel in any way.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not seriously object to that, because there are undertakings which will require all these elaborate plans to be provided, so that the government may be seized of the character of the undertaking in view; but what I do say is this, that it would be unreasonable, where a small farmer wished to spend a moderate amount of money for the irrigation of a quarter section of land, to have to go to all that expense. That difficulty will be obviated by leaving it to the discretion of the Minister of the Interior to dispense with all those details in such cases.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 16.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would ask my hon. friend to add these words "and he shall fix the maximum rates charged by the licensee." That is to say, when an applicant makes application for water wherein the underlying purpose is to sell the water, that the public shall have some knowledge as to what they may be expected to pay by way of water rates for water to be sold by the applicant.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is fixed, is it not?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No it is not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it is later on.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The minister can fix the rate when the works are constructed, but the difficulty lies here: notice is given that a corporation applies for water rights, that is to say they are going to appropriate a certain amount of public domain for the purpose of supplying water to consumers. Now, in anticipation of those rates being reasonable the public, so to speak, assent to the application that is being made, and refrain from giving it any opposition. But after the works are constructed and the public are practically in the hands of the company, so far as water in that particular district is concerned, that company will make an application to the government to fix the rates. It will be seen that the public will have no notice of whether they are going to have reasonable or unreasonable rates; consequently the public should be apprised of what rates they are expected to pay. It should rest in the hands of the Minister of the Interior, and he should fix a reasonable high rate, but the public should be apprised of the maximum rate, so that the company could not impose on the public by charging rates beyond that limit. I therefore move that you add to subsection two the words "he shall fix the maximum rates to be charged to the licensee."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But the hon. gentleman will see that in all projects of that kind it is impossible to fix the rates. The rates must depend on the cost, and no company would undertake to construct the works unless the rate was fixed sufficiently high to give a reasonable return on the possible cost of the works, and then it may be a rate far in excess of the rate that would be fixed if the minister were to fix it after the works were completed and there was some definite knowledge as to the cost of the work. It does not seem a sound or reasonable proposition at all.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In sections 10 and 12 you have provided for the most elaborate details being prepared as to the cost of the enterprise.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As to the preparation of the work.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In fact, before granting a license to the applicant the government satisfies itself of the financial stability of those parties of the amount of money to be expended, and all the details with the greatest particularity. Consequently, after the company have completed their work, they cannot reasonably say they have made additional expenditure beyond what was contemplated, because there is a complete statement as to what they intend to expend. Hon. gentlemen know that the tendency in all these undertakings is, if possible, to exaggerate, after the completion of the work, the cost of the enterprise by the flotation of bonds and stocks and so on, and to compel the consumer to pay an extraordinary charge for the purpose of satisfying a fictitious indebtedness which is very often attached to undertakings of that kind. Let the company appear before the Minister of the Interior. No injustice can be done to the company if the matter is left entirely with the minister. Under the Railway Act the government fix the maximum rates.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not in advance of the work.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is no branch of a public undertaking where the government do not fix rates, and there is no reason why it cannot be done.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not in advance of the work. The two officers who had charge of this matter are both recognized as being clever, conscientious men. Pierce is recognized as a high authority on irrigation, and so is Dennis. This bill has been submitted to them, and the matter has been carefully gone over by the officials who have had charge of it, and they are certainly in the best position to know what is right and proper. I do not think the tolls could be fixed in advance of the work.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the hon. gentleman is going to take the position that those officials are seized with knowledge of so perfect a character as to this particular branch of legislation, we might as well delegate to them the power to pass legislation without reference to the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—These two officials appear to be so competent in the matter of drafting legislation that it is presumption on the part of any one in this House to suggest improvements. That is the position taken by my hon. friend. Those of us who have come in contact with this particular phase of expenditure, particularly in matters of this kind, consider that it is desirable that a maximum rate should be established. Let the minister fix as large a rate as he may choose, so long as the public will have some knowledge as to the outside rate with which they will be chargeable for a supply of water; because after the public assenting to this corporation becoming possessed of important water rights, a practically prohibitory rate may be charged to the people, as it is very often done, entirely against what they contemplated. I think the public should have some knowledge as to the maximum rate chargeable against them for the consumption of water.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am disposed to agree with the hon. gentleman from Calgary, but I think the amendment should be made in the first subsection of the clause instead of the second. The first subsection reads:

> Public notice of the filling of the memorial and plans shall forthwith be given by the applicant in some newspaper published in the neighbourhood, to be named by the commissioner, not less than once a week for a period of thirty days, within which time all protests against granting the rights applied for shall be forwarded to the minister, and such notice shall contain a statement of the nature of the rights applied and the general character and location of the proposed works.

It seems to me that a very essential portion of the notice should be something to indicate to the party who may be expected to make a protest what the rates are which are to be charged. A certain work is indicated by the advertisement: it is a work which seems desirable: the people in the neighbourhood think it desirable, and as nothing is said about the rates they do not make any protest. If the rates were mentioned and were unreasonable, these people would make a protest. It seems to me there is a good deal to be said in favour of the view of the hon. gentleman from Calgary.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The whole difficulty will arise for the reason that no one can tell exactly what the cost will be to the government of furnishing the supply.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The government does not furnish the supply.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Under 11 and 12 you provide for that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And then in one case it may cost very much more than another, and if the rate is fixed beyond that which the parties can afford to pay, of course no work can be undertaken. The government cannot afford, nor can any company undertake to manage a work that would entail a serious loss.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend will see that you ask the applicant to fix a rate, but you in no way bind him to that rate. Under section 11 you ask him to make a specific statement as to the project he is going to carry out, and as to the financial position of the individual, the value of such land in its present state, including improvements, and the rate, if any, to be charged for the waters to be sold. That appears in the Gazette. But after the works are erected, then there is nothing to bind the applicant or the individual carrying out the project to these rates which he has fixed, and which he, in fact, by his representation to the public induced the public to practically waive any opposition to when he applied. Surely if you ask him to fix a rate in the first instance you must pass some legislation by which he should be bound by that rate so that he cannot deceive the public by representing a very low rate, and after the completion of the enterprise asking a high rate. I fall in with the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax that it would be better to follow subsection 1 instead of subsection 2.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I could not accept the amendment, because I really cannot see how it can be argued that you can fix a toll without knowing what the cost is. The cost may be double what is first estimated, and you do not know what the consumers are going to pay. There may be ten consumers or twenty consumers. You are fixing an arbitrary figure without knowing what the cost will be. Has the hon. gentleman heard that there has been any objection to the law?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I could refer to hundreds and thousands of acres in that district that are lying idle to-day, and the ditch which runs past them is practically crumbling to pieces because the proprietors of the ditch insist upon exacting a certain charge and the owners of the land will not pay it. Then you give to these companies the right to use the public waters in that district, and they sell bonds and stock and raise money and carry out the project. Then the obstinacy which often characterizes corporations comes into play, and the people will not pay the rates.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The man loses nothing. The riparian proprietor has a right to use the water for all domestic purposes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—He cannot tap the ditch. He cannot take a bucket of water out of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He has all the rights of the riparian proprietor.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No. Almost the very first section of the Act entirely changes the common law right of riparian owners, and vests the whole right in the Crown, and makes those waters subject to this Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Will the hon. gentleman maintain that the riparian rights are taken away?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I read over the Act and I can tell the hon. gentleman it is not so.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Clause 4 reads:

> The property in and the right to the use of all the water at any time in any river, stream, watercourse, lake, creek, ravine, cañon, lagoon, swamp, marsh or other body of water shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to be vested in the Crown, unless and until, and except only so far as some right therein, or to the use thereof, inconsistent with the right of the Crown, and which is not a public right or a right common to the public, is established; and, save in the exercise of any legal right existing at the time of such diversion or use, no person shall divert or use any water from any river, stream, watercourse, lake, creek, ravine, cañon, lagoon, swamp, marsh or other body of water, otherwise than under the provisions of this Act.

I say that entirely destroys the common right of riparian owners.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is preserved in the Act. We will come to it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Look at section 4. The bill would be futile if the Crown did not reserve those.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Crown had the right.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Crown had not the right before the Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Clause 9 says:

> No application for any purpose shall be granted where the proposed use of the water would deprive any person owning lands adjoining the river, stream lake or other source of supply of whatever water he requires for domestic purposes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If you look at the Act, domestic purposes mean simply for the purposes of consumption, not for irrigation purposes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; certainly not for irrigation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The right of an owner joining a stream was to use that stream for irrigation purposes before the passage of this Act?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He has all the rights of a riparian proprietor. A riparian proprietor has not the right to divert a stream. No riparian proprietor could cut a ditch from any body of water and carry it to his farm.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is an extraordinary doctrine. He has the right to take all the water he requires, so long as he does not interfere with the owners above or below.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is peculiar that that objection was not raised before.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You will leave this legislation in the hands of parties who will simply make it tyrannical and oppressive, so far as the settlers are concerned; and if my hon. friend doubts me in that regard, he can appeal to the hon. member for Alberta, who is one of his own political supporters, and he will emphasize in very strong language the statement I have made. And I say further, that on no subject before has there been more dissatisfaction expressed by the people affected by this legislation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume that individuals, or ordinary farmers, cannot go into irrigation. It must be undertaken by capital. Capital usually finds its way into companies, and public companies will not undertake work of that kind unless they are going to make money out of it. It is either worth while to have the country irrigated, or it is not.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If my hon. friend knew the facts which invest the conditions in that country, he would not make the statement he has done. It is the small owner of land that is carrying out irrigation in that district. There is to-day no irrigation company in full operation, or I might say in operation at all, but hundreds of ditches have been carried out by individual farmers, and a very large section of the country in southern Alberta has been irrigated, not by corporations but by individual settlers, and if my hon. friend will do us the honour to visit that section of the country he will be really surprised at the amount of individual enterprise which has been carried out in this direction by the small settler, and not at all by the corporations.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the few months I was Minister of the Interior Department, it was brought under my notice that the number of companies there who had invested money in works had lost heavily by it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was not aware that any money had been made out of it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—By mismanagement.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Would the Secretary of State look at section six of the Act with regard to riparian rights? People who have had this right for years have it taken away from them under this Act. They must acquire new rights according to this bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I move that the following words be added to the end of the first paragraph of clause 15 after the word "works," "and the maximum water rates to be charged by licensee."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I maintain that that would be absolutely impracticable, to ask the Minister of the Interior to fix a rate before he knows what the cost of the work is to be. He may fix the rate after he knows what the cost of the work is to be.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the Minister of the Interior says that it cannot be carried out, then on the third reading I will withdraw it.

The first paragraph of clause 15 was adopted as amended.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—Might I ask the minister if, in clause 9, the reservation to the owners of lands of the water includes water for stock?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The riparian owner has all the rights he ever possessed.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—But if the water is all diverted, he has the right not to be deprived of what is necessary for domestic purposes. Does that include water for stock and other farming purposes?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the hon. gentleman will look at clause 8 he will see that it covers water for the purpose of stock.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 17.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would ask the minister to insert after "domestic" the words "or irrigation." It will dispense with these costly plans. You can readily understand that where the owner of a quarter section of land desires to irrigate his property, it would not be reasonable to put him to the expense of all the plans referred to in clause 11. It really would cost him more than his place would be worth, and consequently I propose that it should be left entirely to the discretion of the Minister of the Interior to say whether, in cases of that kind, such plans would be required.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman will see, no matter how expensive the works may be and whether conducted by a company or an individual, that they would be for irrigation purposes. I think that is too sweeping altogether.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not dispense with the whole of section 11, but of subsection (c). Even in a case of that kind, the applicant would be required to give very elaborate information. Subsection (e) practically contemplates the preparation of plans for a large company.

The amendment was agreed to, and the clause as amended was adopted.

On subsection 2 of clause 21.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The expense of expropriating lands under the Railway Act is cumberous and ought not to apply to cases of this kind.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the easiest expropriation you can make. You cannot take lands from people except through the courts.

The clause was adopted.

On clauses 31 and 32.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am satisfied the word "wilfully" has been omitted from these clauses.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no change in the law. Have your heard of any difficulties arising under the present law? The act must be done wilfully under the law as it stands.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You have omitted the word "wilfully." It certainly could not be an offence unless the act was done wilfully. A man may, in the most innocent manner possible, take water from a stream.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The law has stood that way for four years. If there is no cause for complaint under the law, why change it? The measure was well considered four years ago, when the law was framed, and since then it has been found to work satisfactorily.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This law has not worked satisfactorily. The very fact of coming to parliament to consolidate the Acts and improve them shows that the legislation has not worked satisfactorily. If one innocently should take water from a stream in that great northern country surely he should not be liable to pains and penalties. It would be utterly impossible for the user of water to gauge the quantity of water he is using accurately, and clause 32 makes it an offence even if he innocently takes a larger quantity of water than he is entitled to under his license.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That amendment would make it absolutely useless. You never could punish anybody for such an offence.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why do you insert the word "wilfully" in clause 29.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because it is a different offence altogether.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is a more serious offence and more evident.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You could not enforce the conviction with such an amendment as the hon. gentleman proposes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If a man takes more than a certain number of cubic feet of water from a stream, and does so innocently, why render him liable to a penalty?

The amendment was agreed to, and clauses 31 and 32 as amended were adopted.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL, from the committee, reported the bill with certain amendments.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that the amendments be taken into consideration tomorrow. There is one amendment to which I strongly object, and I should like to see the Minister of the Interior before I consent to it.

The motion was agreed to.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (150) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts." He said: I wish to consult the wishes of the House with regard to this bill, as to whether I shall proceed with it this evening or take up some other bill. I will state in general terms what the provisions of the bill are. In the first place, we have provided for one judge that, by the local law of Quebec, has been added to the Superior Court. We provide for the appointment of an additional judge to the Court of Appeal, called for by the local legislature of the province of Ontario. We have provided for an increase in the salaries of the junior judges of the different provinces. I have little doubt that the original intention was to place the junior judges, in respect to salaries, upon exactly the same footing as the senior judges of the county courts are placed. The Act as it has been construed —and which construction I do not find fault with—limited the salary of the junior judges to the sum of $2,000 a year. The junior judges have no incidental increase to their salary by reason of additional duties they have to perform. The senior judge is, for the most part, the judge of the Surrogate Court, and he receives as a Surrogate Court judge a salary ranging all the way from zero up to $1,000; so that the senior judge receives a very considerable salary, in most cases beyond that which is fixed as his salary as a county court judge. What we have done in this bill is to provide that, at the end of three years, the junior judge shall receive $2,400 instead of $2,000, exactly the same sum that is paid to the senior judge. We have also made some provision for meeting the larger expenses that the district judges in the province of Ontario are compelled to bear. They have long distances to travel, and they have often to go by canoe from one point to another, holding court within their jurisdiction. They incur a good deal of personal peril and are subjected to large expense and not a little inconvenience. After discussing this subject with those judges, we propose to fix their travelling expenses, under existing circumstances, at $500 instead of $200, the ordinary sum allowed county judges. This was thought to be an unreasonable sum, and certainly, considering the expenses to which they are put, and the hardships to which they are subjected, is not a more generous compensation than $200 for the ordinary county judge. Then there is the case of the county judge in the city of Halifax, whose salary I think heretofore has been $2,400. His salary is fixed at $3,000, the same as the county judge in the city of St. John, and the same is true also of the county judge in the city of Charlottetown. Those two county judges have a larger amount of judicial work to perform than any other judges, whether county or superior court judges, in their respective provinces. My hon. friend beside me (Mr. Miller) says that that change should have been made long ago. That is my opinion. I gave the matter some attention, and I thought it my duty, whether I succeeded or failed, at all events to show my wish to give these men a fair compensation for the services which they were performing. I admit that, so far as the Ontario court of appeal is concerned, the salaries are inadequate. Formerly the judges in the court of appeal were at liberty to go on circuit the same as the judges in the high court. Of recent years they have not done so, and consequently they have not received those additional allowances which have been paid to the judges of the high court. Their salaries, since the change in practice in this regard, have been, I suppose, about $1,000 a year less than before. One of our difficulties at the present time is to induce men of high standing at the bar, or men who are already on the bench, to accept appointments to the court of appeal. In many instances we have not been successful in that regard. But I thought from all I could learn, from my discussion with representatives in parliament, that it would be a dangerous experiment to undertake to make additions to the salaries of the High Court judges or the Court of Appeal judges at the present time. I did not wish to overload the bill by undertaking to make it ideally perfect in this regard, or to adopt a course which might lead to its defeat. So far I have stated all the changes that point to any increase, and those my hon. friend will see are not very great. The judges of the high courts in all the provinces have been undisturbed. They stand where they stood before. The only further change that has been proposed is with respect to the retirement of judges. A question is raised in this bill which has often been the subject of controversy, and that is whether there ought to be an age limit for the retirement of men from the bench whose physical infirmities may disqualify them from properly discharging the duties which, under the law, devolve upon them. Various periods of life have been suggested as the proper age for the retirement from the bench of gentlemen who have been engaged in the discharge of judicial duties. Under this bill we have undertaken to fix an age which we thought reasonable on the whole, recognizing under ordinary circumstances the long life of judges. We have named the period on the attainment of the age of seventy-six. In most cases, I think it will be found that a judge who has attained the age of seventy-six years, while his intellect may be clear, considering the hardships which, in the discharge of his duties he is obliged to face, is, in the vast majority of cases, no longer fit to discharge those duties. I am speaking now of the county court judges. Our law proceeds upon the assumption that a time will arrive when the failure of one of the vital energies, or the development of physical infirmities, may disqualify him for the discharge of his duties.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Would that be more applicable to a county court judge than to a supreme court judge?

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We propose by this bill to deal with those with whom the law, as it now stands, empowers us to deal, and we may require further legislation by the Imperial parliament, and correspondence with the Imperial government, before we can undertake to deal with the Superior Court judges upon precisely the same line.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would you give us the reason for that?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, I will give the reason. We provide, for the retirement of judges upon a two-thirds salary after a service of a certain number of years. We assume that before death, while a man is still long distant, in some cases, on this side of the grave, he will best serve the public interest by accepting the retiring allowance and retiring upon a two-thirds salary. The law contemplates that. But the practice has grown up, especially in those districts where junior judges have been appointed, amongst the senior judges of the county courts, of practically retiring upon a full allowance; that is, they will follow the practice of throwing upon the junior judges nearly all the duties that pertain to their office, and of continuing to hold the office as county judge, receiving the full salary without effectively discharging those duties. That is the present condition of things. There is this question, however, which has presented itself: when you undertake to provide for the retirement of a judge at an advanced period of life, six years after the period alloted to a man of three score and ten, when he is seventy-six years of age, you have fixed a period far on in life, and in the vast majority of cases a period beyond that in which a man retains the full vigour of his faculties necessary for the efficient performance of his work. We had to consider in connection with this matter, if you were to fix an age limit, what that age should be. In the next place, if you fixed an age limit, whether you should permit retirement on the two-thirds allowance which the law provides, and for a condition of things which the law contemplates, because hon. gentlemen will understand, as the law has been interpreted, the members of the bench have themselves, in every instance, undertaken to decide for themselves whether they will or will not retire, and in the public interest, when you are considering the public service, perhaps in a matter of that sort they are not always the best judges. I say, then, we had first to consider whether that age was a sufficiently advanced period of life to warrant legislation of this sort; in the second place, whether, in retiring men already on the bench and holding their office during good behaviour, we ought to retire them on full salary or at the rate which the present law provides. If we had undertaken to retire them on full salary, we found there would be very great difficulty in inducing the House and the public to accept that charge, and the more so for this reason, that when you propose to fix a period for the retirement of the judge, say at seventy-six years of age, he would continue to draw that full salary long after, (if he lived long enough) he was capable of discharging the duties at all, and so this idea suggested itself, whether you might not retire a judge at full salary till he attained the age of eighty, and then give him the two-thirds allowance from then on to the end of his life; so that the government had under consideration these three propositions. There was no desire to do wrong to anybody. Some gentlemen are paralytic, some have not for a good many years undertaken to discharge any duties outside of their own county town, and it is not a generous or agreeable task to undertake to persuade them, under the provisions of the law, that they are no longer qualified to discharge the duties that attach to their office and that the public interest suffers by their continuing in that position. There are not a great many such, but there are some. Upon considering the cases that have been brought under our attention, for these cases are always being submitted for consideration, if we adopt the period of life mentioned in the bill, there will be no ground to complain. Now I have stated to hon. gentlemen the origin of this particular provision. I apprehend there is no doubt in the public mind, or in the minds of the members of the profession at all, as to the propriety of this provision for the future. I have yet to meet the member of the profession, or indeed the member of either House, who says that the present system of indefinite holding of office, dependent on removal for misbehaviour or removal on the joint address of the two Houses of parliament, is quite satisfactory. In the first place, it is an ungracious thing to take the initiative of undertaking to remove a judge, and especially is it an ungracious thing to undertake to remove an old man because he is worn out and no longer capable of efficiently discharging the duties that this office imposes on him. The law enabling judges to hold office during good behaviour also provides for their removal on the address of the two Houses of parliament. The impression is a very general one that the removal, upon the address of the two Houses of parliament, is necessarily a removal for misbehaviour in office. I do not think that that is the case. There is no limitation of the authority of parliament to remove, nor is there any duty imposed on parliament to assign a cause for the address that the two Houses may present. This subject is very fully considered by Mr. Hearne, in his work on the English government. He says that the removal for misbehaviour is most regularly brought about by a proceeding under a writ of scire facias. It is a judicial proceeding. If the misbehaviour complained of is not connected with his office, if it is misconduct out of office, that misconduct ought to be established and the removal ought to be by scire facias; but when a man is not alive to his own infirmities and is no longer qualified to discharge his duties, the power to remove by the address of the two Houses of parliament is the power to enable parliament to remove a judge who is no longer qualified by the state of his health, mentally and physically, to discharge efficiently the duties that attach to his office. I say this duty is one that parliament is always reluctant to discharge, and the same result, in case of failure of health and capacity to discharge the duties of the office, it seems to me can be more efficiently brought about by the provision of this bill upon his attaining the age of seventy-six years. That is a provision we do not undertake to apply to the judges of the Superior Court. The qualification for their office in this regard is fixed by the British North America Act, and we cannot, by our legislation here, in my opinion, undertake to amend the provision of that Act in this regard; but so far as the county court judges are concerned, it is left wholly either to the local legislature or to this parliament —I am not going into a controversy as to which should determine what are the qualifications for the office. I have stated, in general terms, hon. gentlemen, what are the provisions of this bill, and the reason the government have for introducing this particular provision in respect to age. I am quite sure that, so far as the profession generally are concerned, and, in my opinion, so far as the public are concerned, they will feel that, while the present provision of the law and the present means of retiring judges for misconduct is left altogether untouched, the proposal to retire a judge when he attains the age of seventy-six will generally meet with approbation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would the hon. leader of the House inform us whether the constitutional reasons that he advanced for not fixing the age limit to the Superior Court judges apply to the Supreme Court judges? The Supreme Court is a creature of this parliament; the judges are appointed by the governments of the day; does that court, and do its judges, come within the argument advanced by the hon. gentleman as to the constitutional objections to interfering with the Superior Court judges?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not prepared to answer the hon. gentleman's question at the present moment. The law does provide for the establishment of a general Court of Appeal for Canada. It provides that the Superior Court judges shall hold office during good behaviour, which is generally regarded as a provision for life, subject to the restrictions I have named, and my impression is that the intention was to fix the same rule for the Supreme Court that was fixed for the High Court of Justice in the different provinces; but whether that particular section of the British North America Act applies to the Supreme Court or not, I am not prepared to say at the present moment.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—I regret very much that the only opportunity I have had of perusing this bill and thinking over it has been since I came to this House to-day. It was put into my hands when I came, and with the greater part of it I am entirely satisfied. There is one clause in the bill, however, which I think is seriously objectionable, and I do hope that my hon. friend will be induced to modify it in some way, as it seems to be a gross injustice. I feel that it is a little ungracious, perhaps, to take exception to any portion of this bill, seeing that tardy justice has at length been proposed to be given to the judges, which was not conceded in the past, whether from want of courage on the part of the governments, or from some other cause, I do not know, but I feel very much gratified that the justice, though tardy, has at last been conceded. But the first clause strikes me as being seriously objectionable. I am not equal to entering into a full view of the matter, as I have been for more than a month laid by and am not very strong now, but the point is so clear that it requires but to be stated to commend itself to every hon. gentleman and to every just man. What is proposed to be done by this measure is simply to legislate out of office judges appointed to hold office during good behaviour and during their capacity to perform the work for which they were appointed. Now, I have been told that there are only five gentlemen that would come within the provisions of this bill, and is it not a sorry sight to see the whole power of this government arrayed, and the whole battery of legislation brought to bear against these five individuals, and for what? We do not know. We have no knowledge whatever with regard to the persons on whom this bill will operate. They have not had any opportunity of being heard. They may be able to show at the bar of this House their entire fitness notwithstanding having arrived at the age of seventy-five. Without being heard, without any specific allegation against them, parliament is asked to legislate these men out of office, and I say that skocks my sense of what is just and right. I do not think any man of right feeling, when he considers it, can possibly adopt that view of legislating men out of office without giving them an opportunity of being heard and knowing the specific terms on which they are deprived of their positions. I quite agree with the precedents that have been referred to and quoted from a very learned author by my hon. friend, who is always just in his statements and in putting the statement of his case fairly before parliament. I quite agree with him; but let us look at that case he refers to? No doubt the power of parliament is supreme, and parliament may, whatever cause is thought sufficient, address the Crown, and the Crown may act upon that; but will parliament act in depriving a judge of his office without giving him an opportunity of being heard and without specific charges against him? It outrages the first principles of justice to say that a man should be deprived of his office because he happened to be seventy-five, without any reason being assigned and without an opportunity of being heard. I would be disposed to agree with my hon. friend that a limit as to age might be expedient. Take the ordinary run of men, and few are as vigorous at the advanced age of seventy-five as they ought to be for a full and effective discharge of the duties of their office, and any judge who has the slightest sense of honour or justice, who holds office after he feels that he is unable to render the full and effective service that is due is—well I will not characterize him—I cannot imagine any honest man continuing in office after he is conscious of his inability not merely to do the main work that falls on him, but all the work that properly falls within the sphere of his duties. It is true we all are slow to perceive when our faculties fail, the best of us, and it may be that conscientious men continue in office after they should leave it, not being conscious that their powers are failing, to the great injury of the service, in some cases, continuing their work and believing they are fully competent to perform that duty. I do not know the men who are above the age of seventy-five on the bench, and I could not, if asked to name them, do so; but such may be the feelings of some of them when perhaps they are really incompetent for the full and effective discharge of their duty. But while I admit that these men should not be continued in office, while I admit that it is wrong to continue them in office, and a wrong to the public and to the suitors of the courts, still there is a legitimate and British way of doing things. Let the matter be inquired into in a proper way and if it is found that any one of them is not fit to discharge his duties properly and effectively, let him be removed. But to ask that the power of this great parliament be invoked to remove these judges is like shooting one of those great guns they are using in the war at Cuba against a mosquito. It seems to me a disgrace and an unworthy thing to attempt to force these men out of office in a way not recognized by law. If there were no provision for getting rid of them, if they were saddled for all time to come upon the community, I could see some reason for this strong measure of legislating them out of office. But such is not the case. There is a provision for inquiry into whether a judge has misbehaved, or whether he is incompetent for his office.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—And that machinery should be set in force, and he should be given an opportunity to be heard. To my mind, it shocks every sense of British fair play and justice to legislate men out of office without giving them an opportunity to be heard. As I have said, that point appeals to me very strongly. There is another aspect, however, in which the matter might be viewed. Every one who has been connected with the administration of the law knows that gentlemen at the bar would be unwilling to accept these judicial offices, because it would be the means of preventing them increasing their fortune, and they would be receiving a salary far below their former earnings. What is the corollary of that? In the first place, it must be admitted it is the plain duty of a government to get the best men possible, irrespective of their personal associations, and on the ground of their ability and their worth, their moral character and legal ability. It is the plain duty of the government to secure the very best men for the office of judge. What are the inducements? A man of ability is offered a salary very far below what he could earn at the bar, but he has a certain dignified life, and he has a certain amount of leisure and, if he likes his profession, he has a very pleasant kind of employment, reading up cases and so on. But there is another inducement. He has a retiring allowance, and that enters into the contract between the government and the judge. He accepts office at a comparatively low salary. He has a certain amount of leisure, and he is secured an annuity when he is no longer fit for work. If he continues in office and behaves himself as he ought to do, he has a certain retiring allowance, that is part of the consideration, which he receives on retiring. The certainty of tenure of office and the retiring allowance are important considerations with the men who accept the offices. And it would be unwise for the government—and I can assure my hon. friend it is the last thing I should think him capable of doing—to lower the class of men from whom judges are to be selected. If there is an element of uncertainty in the tenure of office, it weakens the inducement to accept the office. That is a very important feature in the matter and a feature that should be very closely considered by the government.

I do not like to see legislation of this kind. I do not mean to say that it is a fraud, and I do not mean to say that the Minister of Justice would be a party to it, but it seems to me to open the door to affect a judge in not merely the way proposed, but in many other ways. It is astonishing what roundabout methods politicians will adopt, and how astute they are in carrying out the views of party. If your neighbour's house is on fire, you begin to think some sparks may fall on your own house, and in my opinion the very placing of that clause in the bill, if it unfortunately should be enacted, is a threat and a warning to the judges. What is the position of the judges in Lower Canada? They are judges of the Superior Court, and that designation was given to them when there was a re-casting of the structure of courts in Lower Canada, though they really perform the same duties that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, are discharged by the local judges in Ontario. In the province of Quebec they do precisely the same work—and not one-third of it in amount—as the county judges in Ontario do, but they are judges of the Superior Court by virtue of the peculiar formation of their judicial system. But that may be altered at any time, and they may find the whole battery of parliament brought to bear against a few individuals who may be obnoxious. I do not desire to dwell so much upon this. I merely point out that, if you do anything to render unstable the position of the judges, you strike at one of the most important portions of our system. I do not think my hon. friend could point out a parallel instance, certainly not in Great Britain, because there they understand that right must be done whatever the consequences. They are prepared to render justice and do their duty; and I do not know of a single precedent in the United States where any attempt was made to legislate judges out of office without hearing them. I do hope that what I have endeavoured feebly to say will open to the view of members of the House the great and terrible danger. It is a small matter, and may appear very insignificant. Of course the judges have no political power, but an assault upon a few individual judges is an assault upon the whole system. If the government of the country desired to be benevolent they can say: "here, gentlemen, you have really worked hard and we do not want to kick you out of office just yet, but for the rest of your life you can draw the salary without doing the work." If that had been done, I think the government might very well have said, "we leave it this way: the gentlemen will retire and accept the full allowance." It would be a comparatively small matter, and the country would not be ruined by doing it. The government might say to them: "gentlemen, you are seventy-five years of age and you cannot live very much longer; take this gratuity on which to live for the remainder of your days," but they come down and say, "you must go," although a judge might say: "I am just as able as ever I was, and my intellect is just as strong as ever it was, my judgment is better, and I am just as competent for the discharge of that duty and more competent than the day I was appointed, and yet because I am seventy-five you want to kick me out." He would also say: "That is not in the bond. There was no time limit when I was appointed. As long as I was able to do my duty efficiently and behave myself properly, I was to remain in office." I do not care to dwell upon this subject. I have said enough to point out wherein I think a terrible injustice will be done. I speak now because I wish to bring out what I may not, at a later day, be able to do. I have stated what is my very strong feeling. I think it is a measure that violates the principle of justice. It violates the implied promise at the time of the appointment of the judges, by depriving a man of a position without giving him an opportunity to be heard and without any specific charges against him. Is that right? Will this Senate ever assent to that? Apart from that clause it is a valuable bill, and the government are entitled to the highest praise for the care with which they have framed the measure. But when the bill goes to committee, as I have no doubt it will, if no one else will make the motion, I shall move that the provisions apply only to those appointed hereafter, or only come into force in the year 1920. But I do earnestly appeal to my hon. friend, as a matter of justice, to consent to one of these amendments. The amendments I would propose, would be that the bill should apply only to those hereafter appointed, or that they should retire on their full salary. I am, in the main, I think, in accord with my hon.

friend in regard to the age limit. Taking the average duration of mental power in man, it rarely survives beyond seventy-five. But when the limit is fixed, we would know what we are about, and would know what to expect. That question, however, is fairly debateable. I admit frankly, that I am very strongly inclined to agree with the hon. gentleman that the age mentioned in the bill is the proper age for retirement. But it is a question on which men may very properly differ. My strong opinion is that seventy-five or seventy-six should be the age. But it is a different matter for us to legislate a certain number of men out of office without giving them an opportunity to be heard. It is contrary to British principles and manifestly unjust. I feel so strongly on the subject that I could not let the second reading pass without speaking what was in my mind. I think the government are entitled to every credit for drafting the improvements in the measure which is before us.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I desire to ask one or two questions. The hon. Minister of Justice informed the House just now that they had given consideration to the requirements of all the provinces in this bill. Well, there is not a single line with regard to the British Columbia judges' as to whether their salaries or travelling expenses require adjusting. I think the travelling allowances do require adjusting. That is the most expensive province in the whole Dominion to live and travel in. I believe $5 a day is the allowance for expenses. I see that in Quebec and the other parts of the country judges are allowed $6 a day, and I ask whether the hon. Minister of Justice did not consider it necessary to adjust those travelling expenses.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They are more liberally paid in British Columbia than in any other province in that regard.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—In the travelling allowances?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—When the House is in committee to-morrow I will ask the hon. minister if he can give me any information about the appointment of a judge to fill the vacancy in British Columbia, and I hope he will tell me that he intends to promote one of the old judges to be chief justice and appoint some young man to the vacancy. That will be simply a matter of justice, and I hope to-morrow that he will be able to give me the answer on that subject.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I was going to suggest that, as it is getting rather late, and as the intention of the House appears to be to give the bill a second reading, that the discussion of this particular question and all other questions as to detail might be taken up in the committee stage.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not propose to discuss the principle of the bill. I think that was fully done by the hon. gentleman from Barrie (Mr. Gowan), but there are two or three questions which I desire to ask, the answers to which would enable us the better to consider the provisions of the bill when it goes into committee. I do not see any provision in the bill in reference to the county court judges who are now receiving a larger salary than $2,400. Will it affect a county court judge who is now receiving more than $2,400.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—What case is the hon. gentleman referring to.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not to any particular case, but I know there are some county judges who are at present receiving a greater salary than $2,400.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Where? Toronto?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In Ontario, does this bill reduce their salary?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then there is another point, and that is the one to which the hon. gentleman from Barrie drew attention, whether there is not a law on the statute-book which enables the Minister of Justice to appoint a commissioner to inquire into the physical and mental capacity of a county judge.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly, when a complaint is made.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And if that report be unfavourable has the hon. Minister of Justice not the power, upon that report, to remove him?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There are other questions in connection with this bill which may, perhaps, be more fully discussed when in committee, but I should like very much if the hon. gentleman would consider the question I asked him in reference to the power which this parliament is now assuming to limit the age of judges, as to whether that does not apply to the Supreme Court as well as to the county courts. I take it for granted that the hon. gentleman's remarks with reference to the Superior Court judges are correct; looking at the power which is vested in the parliament of Canada to establish the Supreme Court and appointment by the administration of the day judges to preside in that court, has not parliament the power to fix the age limit in the same way as it is proposed to fix the age limit of the county judges? It would aid materially in the consideration of this question if he would give us an answer in dealing with this bill in committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The Senate then adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, 9th June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'Clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

DEATHS ON CROW'S NEST PASS RAILWAY.

MOTION.

The Order of the Day being called:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate, copies of all letters, telegrams and other communications exchanged between the Minister of Justice, or any officer of his department, and any person or persons with respect to the deaths, on the twenty-third of January last, of two workmen named respectively Macdonald and Fraser, who had been employed on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway.

Hon. Mr. POWER said: This motion is simply one to furnish certain information to the House. Hon. gentlemen have probably seen that in the other chamber, there was a good deal of discussion with respect to the deaths of these two workmen, Macdonald and Fraser, on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, and their deaths were very melancholy. It is desirable that the responsibility for that misfortune should be placed upon the right shoulders, wherever it should lie, and I move this address for the purpose of getting information which the House would require in order to enable us to form a correct judgment on the question of responsibility.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I ask my hon. friend to let the motion stand till to-morrow.

The motion was allowed to stand.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the third reading of Bill (71) "An Act to further amend the Weights and Measures Act," as amended.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL moved in amendment:

That the said bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to a Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of adding the following as subsection 1 of section 6:

1. No weighing machine used for weighing or determining the weights of any of the articles mentioned in section 16, shall be of less certified capacity than sixty pounds avoirdupois.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think I called my hon. friend's attention to the fact that this amendment would not accomplish the object he has in view. If my hon. friend's amendment carried in this form, it would be necessary to have as many weighing machines, if the object is for the purpose of testing articles, as there are weights given in section 16, because what would weigh 60 lbs. of barley would be a very much larger measure than one that would weigh 60 lbs. of wheat. If my hon. friend merely wanted to use a larger testing machine than that in use at the present time, he should strike out the words "less capacity than 60 lbs." and make it read "less capacity than a bushel." Then that testing machine which would weigh a bushel of wheat, which would be 60 lbs., would also weigh a bushel of barley which is 48 lbs. and flax seed which is 56 lbs., of a bushel of oats which is 34 lbs. The bulk of a bushel in each case would be exactly the same, but the weight would be altogether different, and then the one testing machine would be sufficient to test all the various articles enumerated. My hon. friend speaks of 60 lbs. avoirdupois. That would mean a very much larger testing machine for oats than for wheat, if that be his object. I do not know whether I rightly interpret the proposed amendment. I have interpreted it from the discussion which took place and the observations of the hon. gentleman on this subject. As the amendment stands, it would simply mean, as I take it, that no scale or balance should be employed for the purpose of determining the weight of an article that would weigh less than 60 lbs., and that would apply to a counter scale for weighing small articles as well as to others.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We could discuss the point in committee. I do not think the hon. gentleman thoroughly comprehends the meaning of the word bushel and 60 pounds. If 60 pounds of wheat occupy a certain space in any measure, and a bushel of wheat weighs 60 pounds, it will require the same space precisely to hold a bushel of oats, although the oats will not weigh 60 pounds; and so with all other grain. If you buy a bushel of wheat you buy 60 pounds; if you buy a bushel of barley you get 48 pounds, but it will take precisely the same space to hold the one as to hold the other. So that if you make a standard measurement you know what you are doing. If you take a quart of barley, you can ascertain what it will weigh, and so with all other grains—oats, barley—whatever is to be measured in that way. I confess, when my attention was first called to this fact, I came precisely to the same conclusion as that arrived at by the Minister of Justice; but when I came to consult with men who have been in the grain business, buying grain for a long time, they simply said to me that a bushel that will hold 60 pounds of wheat will require the same space to hold 48 pounds of barley, and just the same with this.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But my hon. friend will see there is no particular article specified:

1. No weighing machine used for weighing or determining the weights of any of the articles mentioned in section 16, shall be of less certified capacity than sixty pounds avoirdupois.

Well, you cannot certify the capacity of 60 lbs. avoirdupois unless you certify it to some particular article. You can certify capacity in inches, but you cannot certify capacity in weights in that way, unless it is with reference to some article.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We can meet that in committee and say 60 lbs. of wheat.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—How is a bushel measured, by cubic inches or by lb. avoirdupois?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think I mentioned the other day that an imperial bushel is determined with reference to the weight of a quart or pint of pure water. That forms a certain fraction of a bushel. You calculate the number of cubic inches and you divide that into pecks, gallons, quarts and pints. That, of course, is cubical capacity. The bushel of wheat, or other articles, has no reference to the imperial bushel; it is measured under the old Winchester measurement.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Would that bushel be 60 lbs. avoirdupois?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, you can say that 60 pounds is the weight of a bushel, but you cannot say it is the capacity of a bushel, because the capacity consists of a certain number of cubic inches, and if my hon. friend wanted to fix this accurately he would be obliged to ascertain the capacity of a Winchester bushel. Supposing a party were to come with very heavy wheat, it might be 64 pounds to the bushel of capacity How could you test the capacity of your testing machine by the weight of a bushel of that sort? It would be a smaller one than if you were to weigh wheat in it that exactly weighed the 60 pound bushel of capacity. My hon. friend certainly will not succeed in accomplishing his object in the form in which this motion stands.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—A bushel as it is used now is not a measure at all. We do not think of it, or speak of it, as a measure. It is the weight that determines it altogether. So that inches, or gallons, or quarts has nothing whatever to do with it. We have had wheat often that would not weigh 50 pounds, we have had it that weighed 67 or 68 pounds, so that a bushel is simply the old name to describe quantities of grain, but the real quantity is determined by weights that are made law. So that the size of a bushel has nothing whatever to do with it. I have read the amendment. If wheat weighs 60 pounds avoirdupois, it will certainly weigh any weight below that, so I cannot see what the difference is. There is no bushel of wheat beyond 60 pounds.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—The hon. gentleman loses sight of this fact, that what the farmers want to get is 60 lbs. for their bushel of wheat. This legislation proposes to say that 60 lbs. of wheat shall be measured by this particular measure which really does not give 60 lbs. of wheat.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—That is not the intention at all.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—That is the substance of it. The buyer is not to be the judge of what is 60 lbs. weight, but he has to take this legislation which says that wheat shall be 60 lbs. to the bushel.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—There is no wheat or grain measure. All this grain is weighed, so the size of the bushel is simply a name.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Here is the point; 60 lbs. is a bushel of wheat, but we want to determine the grade of the wheat. To do that we have to measure it, and we must have a measure. In place of adopting the small measures now in use, my hon. friend proposes to do it all in one measure; by putting it all in at once, instead of in sixteen parts, it will give a more accurate idea of what a bushel would weigh.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see you cannot reject the idea of capacity altogether. For instance, if he were buying grain for his mill he would say to the farmer, if your wheat weighs 60 lbs. to the bushel I will give you a certain price. So far as the bushel of wheat is concerned it must weigh 60 lbs. That is not the weight he has in his mind, but the weight by measurement, and he compares the weight of the measured bushel with the wheat that is being offered for sale at 60 lbs. to the bushel, and he may find that the weight of that wheat by the measured bushel is only 58 lbs., and he gives proportionately less for it. Now, the farmer is interested in knowing what his wheat will weigh to the bushel; that is, what relation there is between the measured bushel and the bushel by weight. Does the bushel by weight include more or less than the bushel by capacity? My hon. friend will see that when he proposes an amendment for the purpose of providing a tester to determine what is the value of that wheat, or the quality of that wheat, he must have a bushel in capacity, not a bushel by weight, not less than a bushel but it must be a bushel in capacity.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—This bushel, the hon. gentleman supposes is only to hold 60 pounds avoirdupois.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But the size would depend on the quality of wheat you put into it.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—No, not upon the quality of the wheat. You do not put wheat into it at all. It is 60 pounds avoirdupois.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If I rightly understand the object of my hon. friend's amendment, his statement the other day was that the testers in use weighing but one-sixteenth of a pound weighed too small a quantity to establish the actual grade of the wheat. That was his contention.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And he proposes, instead of weighing one-sixteenth of a bushel, to have a tester that will hold a bushel. The tester you now have, that is one-sixteenth of a bushel, is a tester of capacity and not of weight, and you determine the value of the wheat by comparing its weight with that capacity, and if the wheat is a good quality it will hold 60 pounds. If the wheat is an inferior quality it will hold less than 60 pounds. If it is of a very high quality it will hold more than 60 pounds. So that you cannot speak of 60 pounds as being the capacity of a tester. You must ascertain the cubic capacity of sixteen times the ordinary tester now in use, and you must make it one that will hold a bushel by capacity.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—The usual way is for the farmer who grows the wheat to measure it and satisfy himself. But with the wheat buyers and grain buyers now there is not one bushel in ten thousand bought in any other way than by the wheat buyer taking a handful of wheat and looking at it and telling you what it is worth. I remember forty years ago, when I was younger, we used to measure the wheat and oats and all that, but nowadays that is rarely ever done. You just simply take up a sample of the wheat and say what it is worth.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I look on this as a kind of inspection. It is true you have a bushel of wheat weighing sixty pounds, but to find out the true value of that wheat it must go through an inspection, the same as a barrel of potash. You open a barrel of potash and take a piece and break it up and then say whether it is first or second, or whatever it may be. The object of the tester is to ascertain the quantity of wheat by inspection. Whether that is a proper course to take or not I do not know. I go through the market where we have no tester; I buy a bushel of oats, and calculate that I have to pay that man so much for his oats. I have no chance of having it inspected. I just buy it as it is. The test is for the purpose of inspecting that grain before it goes to market.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—The hon. Minister of Justice is quite correct in his criticism. We all know that farmers sell their grain by the bushel, and it is by capacity and they want to know what the value of that capacity is. The bushel may weigh 65, or 60, or only 55 pounds. The buyer may purchase that wheat, but the quotations are all by bushel and not by weight. A bushel of wheat is 60 pounds, barley 48 and oats 34. The law determines what the weight of a bushel is, and what my hon. friend wants to get at is that the weight of a Winchester bushel should be known.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Exactly.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—These testers that we use are very small, and we know that the fractions go against the seller. The farmer loses more or less just in that way. I think the amendment suggested by the hon. Minister of Justice would meet the case, but I am quite sure that as it stands at present it would not.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I believe the objection to the bill as it stood at first was the difficulty of determining the weight of grain by taking a sample in a small measure, dividing the bushel into some 16 parts, and taking the one-sixteenth part of a bushel as a sufficient sample to test what the value in weight of a bushel would be. Now, to my mind, the amendment which has been proposed will not carry out the object which the senator has in view. I think something of this nature would meet the case much better than the amendment, if the bill went on to say, "That no measure of capacity used for the purpose of determining by sample the quality of any kind of grain shall be of less capacity than the Winchester bushel measure."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think we ought to go into committee and discuss the bill there, but before we go into committee I want to say a word more. The view of the hon. gentleman from Montreal (Mr. Ogilvie) was correct to a certain extent, though I want to impress this upon the minds of the senators, that this amendment to the law is not for the purpose of selling by the bushel, but for determining the weight, and for that purpose you take a 60 lbs. capacity instead of a sixteenth part of a bushel capacity. That is really the pith of the whole thing. It is not to ascertain whether the farmer selling, loses in the quantity which he sells, but it is to secure to the grower of the grain the full value of the article in proportion to its quality, which is determined by weight per bushel. Now, as I pointed out the other night, you take a bushel of wheat, which weighs 60 lbs. to the bushel; my friend, as a miller, says I want 10,000 bushels of wheat, but when he buys it he expects to get a certain weight per bushel. If you take sixteen different measures of that one bushel of wheat, the test has proved that after you have filled the tester sixteen times there are about $10\frac{1}{4}$ oz. of wheat left which is not weighed, so that the seller loses in the calculation of the quality just in proportion to the loss of weight in the bushel of wheat tested by the grain tester. Then the fractions also are not counted; for instance, if a tester showed a bushel of wheat to weigh $59\frac{1}{4}$ lbs. the seller would lose the benefit of the fraction. According to the present tester, wheat is shown to weigh in the test less than it does in the bushel measure. You pour from a bushel measure of wheat sixteen times into the grain tester, and you will have some wheat remaining in the bushel measure; and the seller by this test loses the benefit of the weight of that wheat which remains in the bushel measure. It does not amount to much on a single bushel, but if you were selling 10,000 or 100,000 bushels of wheat the reduction in the price, on account of the test not being correct, would make a very material difference in the total price the seller receives. The farmer does not lose in the quantity he sells, but in the price paid per bushel which he receives for his wheat, because the tester shows it to weigh per bushel so much less than it really does weigh. The object of this amendment is to remedy this defect. My hon. friend says it does not. I am assured by those who are in the trade, and those who understand this question, that it will accomplish the object.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the House agrees with the hon. gentleman in the object he has in view. The object which he has in view is to prevent a loss of the ten ounces, or whatever quantity of wheat is liable to be lost when it is measured in a tester which holds only a sixteenth of a bushel. I think the whole House agrees with the hon. gentleman as to the desirability of making a change in that respect. But where there is a difference of opinion is as to whether the measure which is to be used is to be a measure of capacity, or whether it is to hold a certain ascertained weight. The hon. gentleman must see that the capacity of a bushel, which ought to be a fixed quantity, will vary according to the character of the wheat. If he ascertains the capacity by weight, if the wheat is of very superior character more than 60 lbs. to the bushel will go into the measure, and if it is of an inferior quality less will go in. The object is to ascertain what price a farmer is entitled to get for his wheat. The farmer gets into the market with wheat, and the purchaser says "if your wheat weighs 60 lbs. to the bushel I will give you so much; if it weighs so much more I will give you so much more." The measure which the hon. gentleman proposes, which contains just 60 lbs., will not test that. It depends on the character of the wheat which has been originally tested, and if you make it a measure of a certain cubic capacity you ascertain the quality of the wheat by determining how many pounds of wheat it takes to fill the measure. I think the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Charlottetown is the one that will meet the wish of the hon. leader of the oppposition.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You have now a measure of capacity, one-sixteenth part of what is supposed to be a bushel. If you use wheat, it will hold a greater quantity of wheat than if you put in oats, and yet you use the same machine to test the weight of a bushel in either case.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am not justifying that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, but that is the law now. You apply the same principle precisely to a measure that holds 60 lbs. instead of to one that holds a sixteenth part of 60 lbs. That is all.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—You cannot institute a comparison except between two things. You have the weight settling the amount of a bushel. What is desired is to ascertain the quality of what you are weighing. You cannot ascertain that quality except by comparing a bushel by capacity with a bushel by weight. Your weighing machine at the present time is one-sixteenth of a bushel, not by weight, but by capacity, and therefore the proposition of the hon. gentleman from Charlottetown (Mr. Ferguson) is the only way of carrying out the idea which the hon. gentleman has. My hon. friend says, take a measure that will hold just 60 lbs., whether it will hold 60, or 65, or 55 lbs. depends on the quality of what you put into it. You cannot determine its capacity in the way my hon. friend says. Supposing he were to say, "now I will have a tester that will hold just 60 pounds." Whether it holds exactly 60 pounds, or whether it will hold a larger or a smaller quantity, depends on the character of the article you put into it. If I fill a bushel by capacity and empty the contents of that bushel of capacity into a scale to be weighed, I then know the quality of the article, because it ought to have weighed 60 pounds. If it weighs more, I know it is of superior quality; if it ought to weigh 60 pounds and weighs less, I know it is of inferior quality. It is by comparison of the weights and capacity you ascertain the value. The two things you require are the tester and the weight. I do not think there will be any substantial gain to the farmer by the change, because the buyer will not offer so much for the very high weight, if you determine that quality by a large tester as if you determine it by a small tester. I do not object to the bushel being made the capacity of the machine by which the quality of the article is to be tested.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I think it would be better.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend thinks it would be better. There are a great many engaged in the business who may think it would be worse, but there is no doubt a strong feeling amongst the agricultural population in favour of a larger tester, but the amendment must provide for it, as the hon. gentleman from Charlottetown suggests.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—This does not affect us in the west, because our wheat always goes 60 pounds to the bushel, but I have been conversing with some members of the House of Commons on this subject. I am a farmer. I come to you to sell you my wheat—this is the argument used to me—they say "if your wheat weighs 60 pounds I will give you 60 cents for it; if it weighs 62 pounds I will give 64 cents; if it weighs 56 pounds I will give you 52 cents a bushel for it. We have to test the quality of the wheat. Here is a tester, one-sixteenth of a bushel, and we lost a little every time it is filled. Consequently we lose every time it is tested. By weighing it at once you save tipping the beam 16 times, which always takes a little off the genuine weight. Therefore, I think the amendment is a very good one, because you can bring the measure down to 60 pounds avoirdupois. Now I come to the market and in place of testing my wheat in 16 parts I test it in one, and it will weigh 56 pounds, while if I took the small test it would only weigh 55 or 54 pounds and I would get so much less for my wheat.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My view is this, that if all the buyers in the country would use the same test there would be really no injury to anybody, because competition would settle the price, and as all the buyers were buying on the same basis, they would give all the market would allow them to give and there would be nothing wrong. A farmer might think that he was wronged, but really he would not be, because competition would bring the price up, but all the buyers do not adopt this test. Many large buyers, I presume, use this mode of testing, while the general buyer use some other method; he fills a bushel and determines what its value is by testing a bushel. The weight of grain is an element in determining its quality. I think, therefore, there is a great deal of force in the argument of the hon. leader of the opposition. His argument, if I understand it, is that no quantity less than a bushel should be tested in order to ascertain its real weight, and, therefore, although perhaps the wording of the amendment might be improved, the hon. leader of the House and my hon. friend, who have been discussing the matter, do not essentially differ; it is only in the way of getting at it, and if the amendment does not altogether cover the ground as well as it might, an amendment might be prepared that would. It is certain that when a smaller capacity than a bushel is used, from the arguments I have heard addressed to the House, the result is that the quality, with the price, taking weight as an element, would be lower than it really should be. Therefore, taking a capacity bushel, and ascertaining its weight, and applying it to the quantity is a fair method. Adopt that and let it be applicable to the whole country and there would not be this misunderstanding, which prevails between buyer and seller.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The further consideration of this matter might be postponed till the next sitting of the House, and perhaps the hon. leader of the opposition and the hon. gentleman from Charlottetown might agree upon an amendment.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—How would it do to say "one Winchester bushel" instead of "60 pounds avoirdupois?"

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The more we talk about this matter the more it becomes obscured. The only question is as to which is the best way to arrive at the actual bona fide weight of grain, whether it shall be by testing the sixteenth part of 60 pounds, or by testing the 60 pounds in one bulk. I ask permission to withdraw my motion, and move that this debate be adjourned till the next sitting of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THE PLEBISCITE BILL.

THIRD READING POSTPONED.

Hon Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of Bill (121) "An Act respecting the Prohibition of the Importation, Manufacture and Sale of Intoxicating Liquors."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I ask my hon. friend to let this order stand until the Franchise Bill is disposed of. Perhaps it is not strictly in order to refer to what has taken place in another House, but the passage of this bill in its present shape depends in a great measure—I am speaking of my own view—upon the action which may be taken by the government and this House upon the Franchise Bill, and until that is settled we shall not be in a position to deal intelligently with this measure for the reason that I advanced the other day. The hon. Secretary of State informed the House that if the Franchise Bill did not become law, the plebiscite could not be submitted to the people. I intimated then that if the Franchise Bill for any reason should not become law, then it would be the duty of this House to amend the Plebiscite Bill so as to enable the government to lay the question of prohibition before the people for their approval or disapproval.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not go quite so far as that. I said if the Franchise Bill were not passed it would scarcely be fair to the temperance vote that it should be taken on the voters' lists of 1894. The statement was also made to the people that this vote should be taken on the Dominion Franchise. We can postpone it till the next sitting of the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Better postpone it till to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Well, postpone it till to-morrow.

The Order was postponed.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (163) "An Act to grant further aid to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal." He said: This bill is to authorize the Governor in Council to advance and pay to the harbour commissioners of Montreal the sum of $2,000,000 to be expended in improving the harbour of Montreal in addition to the amount that was authorized in the first session of 1896. In 1896 authority was taken from parliament to authorize the Governor in Council to advance the sum of $2,000,000 to the harbour commissioners at the rate of two and a half per cent interest. A part of that money has been expended, but I believe there is still unexpended about three-quarters of a million, or somewhere in the neighbourhood of $800,000. Last year, as hon. gentlemen know, the question of improving the harbour of Montreal by increasing the dock space was very widely discussed in the press, and before the bodies in Montreal that were interested in it, and from time to time the final decision has been postponed in consequence of the inability of the parties to agree on a plan. Several plans were submitted. Plan No. 6 was drawn some years ago and was very much discussed, and finally a modification was, as I understand, settled upon and this bill is the result. I am quite aware that there is a certain section of the shipping interest in the city of Montreal opposed to a policy of expending the proportion named in this bill, $750,000, in docks in the eastern part of the city, the desire being to spend the whole amount where the present docks are, about the centre or the west end of the city. Under the law as it has existed since 1896, and I think in 1894, when the laws relating to the harbour commissioners were consolidated, it was necessary to secure the approval of the Minister of Public Works to the mode of expending money. So that the plans have to be approved by the Minister of Public Works, and the Minister of Public Works, acting on the advice no doubt of the majority of the members of the city, felt that it was in the interest of the city and for their future advantage that at least $750,000 should be expended in the eastern portion of the city, and the remainder in the vicinity of the present docks. The object now in aid being granted in this manner to the commissioners is for the purpose of giving the harbour commissioners the benefit of the lower rate of interest. The interest that was proposed to be taken in 1896 from the harbour commissioners was three and a half per cent. This bill on the present loan proposes to reduce it to three per cent.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Are there arrears of interest now?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think so. I am not aware that there are any. The interest has been paid regularly.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Always.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think the harbour commissioners are in arrears for any interest.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—No, never in arrear.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—They never were indebted to the government for any favours, either.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The advance is to give the harbour commissioners the benefit of the credit of the country. They secure a loan at a lower rate of interest than if they were borrowing money on their own account. The trade of Montreal has always been equal to paying the interest on the loans that have been made from time to time for the construction of those works. The objection, I understand, that is urged by the opponents of this bill to the expenditure of the $750,000 in the eastern part of the city is on the theory that if a dry dock was built, that that should be charged to the national finances, that the trade of the city ought not to be taxed for the $750,000, or whatever portion is necessary for the construction of the dock. The question has been very much debated and discussed, and to the very serious injury of the city, because the improvement ought to have been proceeded with, as I am advised, more than a year ago if the parties could have agreed on the mode of expending the money. It is admitted on all sides that the accommodation of the docks in Montreal must be enlarged in view of the rapidly increasing trade of the city, and it is with a view of assisting the harbour commissioners to carry out what is thought to be the best plan that this bill is now before the House for approval.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I do not think the Secretary of State did it intentionally, but he did not state the matter quite fairly, or it has not been very fairly put to him. I understood him to say that the majority of the harbour commissioners of Montreal wanted this dry dock. It would be necessary, perhaps, to a go a little further back in the history of this harbour commission in order to place the matter in a proper light. Up to the year 1873 a majority of the harbour commission had always been appointed by the different boards of commerce in Montreal, the board of trade, the mayor of the city, the corn exchange, the shipping interests, and so on. But in 1873 or 1874 the government took that majority out of the hands of the harbour commissioners of Montreal, and appointed a majority of the commissioners themselves. I do not say that it was not perfectly right and proper that they should do so, but from that day the government assumed the responsibility of the harbour of Montreal. Up to that time the harbour commissioners used to work for the honour of the position. Now, it is quite true what the hon. Secretary of State says, that it will give the harbour commissioners of Montreal the money required for the improvements at a lower rate having the guarantee of the government, but it will not cost the government one cent, and why the Minister of Public Works—for it is he and he alone who does it—tacks on $750,000 to that to build a dry dock, the merchants and shipping interests in Montreal cannot tell. They cannot understand it. I think I understand it perfectly.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Do they want it?

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—No, of course not. My hon. friend on my left (Mr. Drummond) if there is a cargo of sugar coming, will not ask whether the ship that is carrying it requires to go to the dry dock or not. It is "how much freight will I have to pay to bring those goods here?" A dry dock is foreign to the trade of Montreal, and that it should be tacked on to the end of this bill I think is the most monstrous thing I ever heard of in legislation. And the proof of it is that I have been flooded with telegrams and letters for the last two or three days, and I think Mr. Drummond can say the same thing, protesting against it. These protests are from the best men in Montreal, men who never think of complaining to the government, men who are of very neutral colour as far as politics are concerned, who have hardly any politics at all—I have found fault with them for not being on my side of politics. But the dry dock if it is wanted will be built either by private enterprise, or by the government; because if I am not mistaken the government has been good enough to do that nearly everywhere else in the country, and almost everywhere that a dry dock has been built it has been built by them. It is not a dry dock that is wanted; it is harbour accommodation; and for the sake of pleasing certain people that we know of, a few inviduals down in Montreal whom it will suit very well, for they will get good value for their land, and make money out of it, this has been tacked on to the end of this bill, and of course if you do not want the dry dock you cannot get the two million dollars. I can see that this has been kept back for this purpose; I could not believe it possible before but it is true now, and the $750,000 should be expended, and is needed badly in the harbour of Montreal. A dry dock should not have any connection with the harbour, good, bad, or indifferent. The merchants of Montreal want their freight brought there at the lowest possible charges. Even 20 or 25 cents a ton is enough to drive trade away from many of our cities now as we have seen a very little thing change it within a few years, and if we can get our harbour dues lowered that is the way to bring trade to Montreal, and that is the way to bring trade to any city. Get as good a harbour as you can and get that harbour as cheaply as possible for the people who are bringing their freight here in ships. The merchants of Montreal do not want a dry dock, but they do want good harbour accommodation, and it is unfortunate for all parties, and most unfortunate for the government, that they should have been induced, through whatever influence brought to bear on them, to tack that $750,000 to this bill, telling the city of Montreal that they will guarantee them two million dollars, but that they will have to spend $750,000 for a dry dock. Then the hon. Secretary of State says it was to spend it down there instead of spending it in the west end of Montreal. There is no talk about east end or west end, and has not been for some time back, but it was to place that money and build a harbour where it was of most use in Montreal. That is what is wanted. Now, it will astonish a great many people, even in this intelligent House, to know that even yet it costs as much sometimes to bring a ton of freight from Hochelaga to where the warehouses of the merchants are in Montreal as it does to bring it from Liverpool. That looks like an exaggeration but it is not.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—What is the cause of that?

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I am living in McGill street and I have my warehouses there—I say McGill street as it is well known—and the ships are brought in and unloaded there, and if the goods are landed on the wharfs of Hochelaga I have to pay for carting them to McGill street, which costs as much to bring them from Hochelaga as to bring them from Liverpool. It would be a great deal better for the city of Montreal to do without this apparent loan altogether than to saddle themselves with an unnecessary debt of $750,000. That dry dock is said to be unnecessary by the shipping interest and by a large majority of all races and nationalities of the merchants of Montreal, and I may say by almost every right thinking man in Montreal; so, that being the case, it is a pity that this bill has been brought up in this shape.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I want to make some remarks on this bill in confirmation very much of what has fallen from the hon. member next me (Mr. Ogilvie). There is no doubt whatever that in the past the city of Montreal has obtained no favours whatever from Conservatives or Liberals. It has been taxed for everything it got to the fullest extent, and has paid its interest regularly. In looking into the public accounts, I can find records that all over the Dominion places have obtained, at the public expense, some large expenditure of public money on public works, and yet Montreal has never succeeded in getting anything. Now, this is not a Montreal question pure and simple. The port of Montreal is by nature the port of Ontario and every part of Canada to the west of it, and any burden you put on goods arriving at Montreal by the River St. Lawrence, is a tax on the community to the westward who get these goods. That is capable of demonstration and requires no argument to show it. I am firmly of opinion that eight-tenths of all the produce that arrives in Montreal inward, and nearly nine-tenths probably of all the produce which goes out of Montreal is the product of Ontario and the western provinces, and there is not a man in any portion of that part of the Dominion who is not interested in the fact that produce can be landed and sent inward or outward from the port of Montreal cheaply or efficiently and without impediment. Now, if you consider that for one moment as a fact, you will see that it is to your interest —I speak to the members of all the Dominion west of Montreal—it is to your interest to see that no unnecessary burdens shall be placed on the harbour of Montreal; in fact it is entitled to equal justice with every part of the Dominion. The hon. Secretary of State a moment ago said the intention of the bill was that this portion of the loan, $750,000, should be expended in a particular part of the harbour and not in another part. He specified exactly that the dry dock was to be built——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, the dry dock was mentioned, but docks and wharfs are also mentioned.

Hon Mr. DRUMMOND—The two million dollars is applicable to docks and wharfs, but the $750,000 which is taken out of the two million is largely concerned, if not exclusively, in the building of the dry dock.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know that. The primary object, I understand, is wharfs, etc., for it reads:

> Shall apply the sum of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars towards the building or the improvement of wharfs, structures and other accommodations, including the building of a dry dock, in that part of the harbour of Montreal below the point known as St. Mary's Current.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The hon. Secretary of State must have been informed that it was the intention of the harbour commissioners to expend any money that they borrowed under this bill in the western part of the harbour. He has no evidence whatever, not the first iota of evidence to bear him out in that supposition. It is a mere red herring drawn across the trail to endeavour to enlist the sectional feeling in the city of Montreal with regard to these harbour improvements, and I for one deprecate the idea of any racial or sectional feeling being introduced into this business at all. There is no reason whatever why the French who principally reside in the east end, and the English who principally reside at the west end, should not be a unit on this question, because it is not a racial or sectional question at all. I go on a broader principle, that the harbour dues and the cost of importing goods into the city of Montreal should be kept down to the lowest point consistent with the public service. Now, is it a fact that the expenditure under the management of the board of harbour commissioners has been principally in the west end? No, it is not. I am misinformed if the fact is not entirely the other way. The extent of new wharfage built in the last twenty-five years is as follows. The east end of Montreal——

Hon. Mr. DE BOUCHERVILLE—Where does the east end begin?

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The Canadian Pacific Railway station, which a few years ago was the extreme eastern end of the harbour; taking as a central line, the Canadian Pacific Railway elevators at the Dalhousie station, there have been built in the east end of the city 12,800 lineal feet of wharfs, while west of these elevators there have been built, in the same time, 2,870 feet of wharfs, or about four times as much at the east end. The money spent upon them during the last twenty-five years has been $504,000 in the west end, as against $1,100,000 in the east end. I for one do not grudge that. I have no complaint to make of that. If the business of the port requires it, if wharfs are to be built in the harbour, I do not grudge the fact that these wharfs have been built in the east instead of in the west end, but I frown down the attempt to insinuate that the harbour in the west end is being attended to and money spent on it, while it is neglected in the east end. The contrary is largely the case.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the plans that have been discussed in the last two or three years, was it not the enlargement of the docks at the west end?

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The question was discussed and was the subject of much deliberation. I was president of the board of trade at the time—I do not remember the year—and chairman of the committee which, after a due consideration of all the plans, fixed on the plan which is known as number six, and that plan is largely concerned in the enlargement and regeneration of the west end of the harbour. The old wharfs there were found to be totally insufficient, while the wharfs in the east end, which I have mentioned, being new wharfs, were built on an intelligent plan. The old wharfs project at right angles into the current making it difficult to enter and get out. The old wharfs at the west end of the city require to be rebuilt and remodelled. When that is done, there will not be more wharfage accommodation there than there is now, and nothing like the wharfage accommodation there is at the east end. But this question of east and west end is a false way of looking at it, a way which I, for one, have no sympathy with. I repeat what I said a moment ago, if the business requires it, I for one will be delighted to see the works extended to the east end if there is a justification for it. What does this bill profess to do? It professes to give the security of the government to the harbour commissioners of Montreal for the purpose of having the work carried on at a cheaper rate of interest. That costs the government nothing. The last loan which was effected by the government was at something under three per cent, now, they propose to lend this money at three. The proposition on the face of it is a fair one. It costs the government nothing, but when a large portion of this sum is required by the Act to be spent in a manner which is not profitable, the want of which is not felt, which is not asked by the shipping interests or by the merchants, you are putting us in this position: you have the government acting very much like the old money lenders who would professedly give you a loan of money on reasonable terms, but stipulate that you take a large proportion of it in pictures or jewellry for which you have no use. The position of the government is accurately enough given in a couplet in Hudibras. Speaking of a local magnate, it is recorded of him:

> That out of his great bounty,
> He built a bridge at the expense of the county.

Now, if the government came down with a proposition to build a dry dock in Montreal for the general benefit of the Dominion, or the ships trading at the port of Montreal, at their own expense, I for one, should hail it as an act of tardy justice. It has been done elsewhere and will be done elsewhere in the future. Why not at Montreal?

Hon. Mr. O'DONOHOE—The one at Esquimault was built by a contribution by the English government and a proportion by Canada.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—My argument is this: what is a dry dock for? It is for the purpose of repairing a vessel which may be damaged, or want her bottom cleaned, or some other things. It concerns the shipping companies, not the men handling the goods, not the merchants sending oats and wheat and breadstuffs out.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Does it not make the port of Montreal very popular with the shipping interests to have one?

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—That question could be better answered by the owners of shipping than by myself. There is a very important difference, let me assure the hon. gentleman. The very men whose ships are to be benefited by the construction of this dock do not ask for it. Surely they know their business better than you and I do.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I do not think it.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I speak as a man handling goods. To make the cost of the construction of this dock an additional charge on Montreal will add to the price of carrying goods by Montreal, and add to the cost of exporting every bushel of grain that goes out of Montreal. I therefore oppose it. Now, the general conception of Montreal and its interest is that the enormous wealth, the enormous incomes, etc., of the city can well stand a little squeezing, and that they are not entitled to the consideration that is given to feebler communities. I should like to deal with that question for a moment. Is it the fact that from its position, from its geographical advantages or what, Montreal has such an advantage that it can afford to bear the pressure of additional taxation which other places are exempt from? I say no, it is not. At this very minute it costs us very nearly as much to import goods direct to Montreal as it does to bring them into Montreal by Atlantic seaports. The fact is that the long course of almost inland navigation from the gulf adds to the marine insurance. The marine insurance to Montreal from Europe is very nearly double what it is to Boston. The rates of freight, in consequence of the bigger business and a systematic business, summer and winter, is generally a little lower to Boston than Montreal, and a little dearer out of Montreal than from that point, and Montreal, as a matter of fact, cannot stand squeezing in the way it is proposed to do in this bill. Not only so, but if you take points in Ontario and the west, the principle upon which railways appear to go is this: to get the most they can for any trade that is in sight, but to get it. The distances are disregarded; past rates are disregarded. Everything is disregarded except getting the business. We know perfectly well that from New York and from Boston to points in the west the rates of freight are just about equivalent to what they are from Montreal to the west. If you handicap Montreal by expensive works which are not called for by the community, which are not called for by the shipping interest, you will punish yourselves, if you consider you are dealing with Montreal only in this matter. I once more, at the risk of repetition, beg to enlist every man who is doing business or who lives in Ontario or in the North-west, in what I consider to be the duty of the Dominion, which is to make the port of Montreal the cheapest port on this side of the Atlantic. It would pay you to do it, and if you are acting under the delusion that Montreal can very well afford to be squeezed, you are acting under a delusion which some day or other will receive an awakening. I shall oppose this bill to the utmost of my power, and I trust I have said enough to enlist on my side of the question a large proportion of the present House. Once more, let me repeat, any attempt to enlist the east end against the west end is absolute humbug. There is no such question in the present issue at all. I am satisfied that the French who live in the east end are as much interested as I am in seeing that the port of Montreal is kept one of the cheapest ports of the Dominion, and the aspiration should be to free it, sooner or later, from all port charges whatever. Every one knows, I suppose, that the commissioners have carried on their operations up to a recent period by an issue of bonds and debentures which have been a favourite investment. In the new era of things, instead of going to the public for the money, and paying the interest regularly as they have done in the past, I am not sure but that the new business of getting money from the government, when you have appended to it stipulations requiring you to misspend a large proportion of it, will not more or less affect the value of those debentures. In any case I shall oppose any measure whatever which calls upon me to burden the port with more than it ought to bear of fair and reasonable charges.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If I am properly informed there is, of the money that was agreed to be advanced in 1896, a balance still on hand held by the government of $750,000 or $800,000. That and the $2,000,000 now proposed to be advanced would make $2,750,000. The portion proposed to be spent under this bill in docks, wharfs and other structures at a particular point in the city is $750,000, which would leave a balance of $2,000,000 to be expended unconditionally in such manner as the harbour commissioners thought best. It would leave them $2,000,000, which probably would be a sufficient amount, to re-arrange the docks under the plan that I understand has been approved of, of running them out angularly to the stream rather than at right angles as formerly. If that statement is correct—and I believe it is—the harbour commissioners would not seem to have very much ground of complaint, because they would have the $2,000,000 to expend in any way they thought wise and prudent, and it may be that the docks and the wharfs in the eastern part of the city do require considerable improvement. I cannot say what proportion of the amount was to go into the dry dock; I am not advised on that point. I presume the most important expenditure will be on the improvement of the wharfs.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Have the harbour commissioners applied for money to improve the wharf accommodation?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, they have been pressing the government for a long time.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—Did they apply for the reservation in the east end?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I think not. The hon. gentleman asked me whether they applied for the loan. They have applied for the loan. The argument was that the amount now at their credit, from $750,000 to $800,000, is not sufficient to complete the works. If they are undertaken they are to be undertaken with a view to completing them on the scale now being decided upon, and although they realize the great importance of improving the docks, they recognize that it was advisable not to commence the improvements until a sufficient amount was in hand to complete the work. They may not be completed this year, or perhaps not next year. At all events, they saw their way to the perfecting of the plan as now agreed upon, which I understand is a modification of plan number six. That is as far as the docks in the upper part of the city are concerned. The amount held by the government at present to their credit, I think is in the neighbourhood of $750,000 or $800,000. With this advance it would leave the harbour commissioners $2,000,000 to expend as they thought wise and prudent. If I am advised properly, a majority of the members representing Montreal and the surrounding district favour the expenditure of a certain amount in the eastern part of the city.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I may be mistaken.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—The majority of the harbour commissioners appointed by the government may have favoured it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am speaking of the members of the House of Commons. The hon. gentleman is quite correct in what he says, although I am not advised as to the proportion. There are six appointed by the government and five appointed by the board of trade and chambers of commerce and other bodies. The mayor of the city of Montreal, who is also a member of the House of Commons, is ex-officio a member of the board. I do not know whether the members appointed by the board of trade, by the chamber of commerce, and by the shipping interest, and the other bodies that have the nomination, are unanimous in desiring that no portion of this new amount shall be expended in the east. I am not advised as to that. Probably the hon. gentleman from Montreal would know more about it than myself on that point, but the proposal which has been submitted to me is that this is a compromise arrangement, and that it is conceived to be in the best interests of the city. The trade is extending. In all matters of this kind there must be differences of opinion. The trade of those engaged in the large shipping interests of Montreal has been compensated at the upper end of the city, where the best docks have been and where the warehouses are found, and where it is more convenient to the canal, but as the railways are extending east of the city, in the exporting of cattle and grain, I presume the eastern end of the city would be a more convenient point of shipping than the central point.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Will the board of works carry on this wharf accommodation?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no. The clause which gives the control, or some degree of control, is this:

1. The corporation shall, out of the advance authorized to be made to them under this Act, apply the sum of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars towards the building or the improvement of the wharfs, structures and other accommodations, including the building of a dry dock, in that part of the harbour of Montreal below the point known as St. Mary's current.

2. The plans, specifications and estimates for all such works shall be submitted to the Minister of Public Works within two months from the passing of this Act, and shall be subject to his approval; and on such approval being given, the said works shall be commenced forthwith and be carried on concurrently with the works on plan 21*a* mentioned in section 3.

That is a plan agreed upon in the western part of the city. This clause gives the Minister of Public Works a control to see that the money is properly expended in accordance with clause 4 of the bill.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—This $750,000 is at the credit of the harbour commissioners?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—At the time the money was granted, the harbour commissioners made their calculation and required this money to carry on certain improvements in the harbour. If this $750,000 was allowed to remain in the same position, then the harbour commissioners only required $1,250,000 to carry on the improvements of the harbour proper in Montreal.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I do not believe any final estimates were ever made. They were getting money from time to time on account.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—The harbour engineer gave an estimate the other day : to complete 12*a* would cost $1,800,000.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—There is no doubt the port of Montreal should be made as great as possible, and the rates as low as possible to carry on an immense trade, because it operates as a very great drawback if the importations and exportations are burdened by any unnecessary expense. And I think it is not only the interest of Montreal, but the interest of Ontario particularly, to keep the expenditure of the commission within the lowest limits for the purpose of carrying on the trade economically. As I understand the matter, it is the intention of the parties that a portion of this money should be used for some other purpose, and that purpose is the building of a dry dock. Is a dry dock actually necessary in connection with the transportation business of that country ?

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Yes, it is.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—If any accident happens to vessels coming to the port, and they require a dry dock, the shipping trade should supply it.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—There are dry docks at Quebec doing nothing.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—My argument is that it is an unnecessary expenditure for the great trade of the western country, and it should not be charged against the forwarding trade of the country. If it is necessary to have that dry dock can you not raise from the shipping interests and parties concerned in that industry a sufficient amount of money to pay for one ? What would be the annual amount of revenue derived from a dock of that kind ? All these matters should be taken into consideration, and if it is found to be an absolute necessity, then I think some scheme should be provided by which the outlay should be met by the revenue derived from this dock, and from other moneys that the shipping interests should pay themselves. I think it should not be added to the general debt of the port of Montreal. As far as the rates are concerned, it may affect Ontario more than Quebec. It is natural, to my mind, to suppose that these parties want all the improvements they can get. They have certainly obtained a large amount of money. It has been well spent and has been a benefit to Ontario as well as to that country. Now they want something in the east.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—They have been getting more than the west.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—The question is, is the port of Montreal obliged to lay out this amount of money ?

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—The port of Montreal must be accessible for the shipping from abroad. At the present moment there are vessels lying there and it is very difficult to get them out of the harbour. Does not that mean that the port of Montreal should be extended to the lower part of the city, to Hochelaga, i.e., below St. Mary's current ? Have not that part of the city as much right to have wharfs and other accommodations constructed there as they have in other parts of the port ?

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Nobody is saying anything else.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—Why is there so much trouble about this ? If you go down to St. Mary's current you will see that the wharfs have been begun there. So that there is no use discussing it. I remember some forty years ago the port of Montreal, which was then at the western part of the city, was quite large enough, and wealthy people in Montreal began acquiring all these properties there, and now they propose to keep the port of Montreal there and there only.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—No.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—I say yes.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—No, it is not so.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—If you go there you will find the whole of the steamships there and often no place to put them conveniently. This is not right, when there is plenty of room in front of the city from the upper part to the lower part to accommodate ten times the number that come now every year. This bill is not merely to provide for the construction of a dry dock. It is to build wharfs and other accommodations, including a dry dock, if there is any money left for it. The question has been asked whether a dry dock is necessary. I say yes. The greater part of the ships coming into the St. Lawrence comes to Montreal, and of course many of them have to be repaired when they meet with some accidents. At present they have to be sent to Quebec, some 170 or 180 miles away. Do hon. gentlemen know that the upper part of Montreal harbour is rocky, and that if you decide to build the whole port there it means most extensive work, since you have to deepen the rivers to procure 25 or 30 feet of water, while down below you have 30, 40 and 50 feet of water.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Nobody is objecting to the east end getting improvements. What is objected to is that $750,000 is provided in the fourth clause of this bill for the building of a dry dock. It is all very well to put in these other beautiful phrases about wharfs and structures and other accommodations. Why should we put in this $750,000 for the construction of a dry dock? And why should we specify the place that it shall be built? Those of us who understand Montreal know perfectly well, as the hon. member from Kennebec has very truly said, that it is not a question of nationality. It is a question of individuality—the individual influence of a few men who own property in the vicinity and want to get a dry dock built. Taking the bill as it stands, the hon. gentleman from Laval may say that it is for these wharfs; but no one except the hon. gentleman from Kennebec (Mr. Drummond) and myself had one word to say about the wharfs. It is the $750,000 to build a dry dock in a particular place that we have been discussing. Montreal can attend to its own business well enough to know how to manage this affair.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—I believe it was quite natural to put these wharfs where they are, when the city was small with a population of 100,000 souls, but now that the city has increased to such an extent, that it contains some 300,000 souls, I should think it is folly to pretend that it is not necessary to continue the construction of wharfs and other accommodation. To this day the most of the money has been expended on the upper part—that part which cannot provide accommodation for the ships coming into Montreal, and the reason was because that part of the port of Montreal was the best part, it was said, of the port, and, consequently, that there the work had to be done. Millions of dollars have been spent there, and money has to be spent there, because that work is begun and must be carried out. That is the way things have been going on, and is it wise on the part of the government to determine that such money shall be expended there and nowhere else. Is not the government quite right in adding to the bill giving this money to the commissioners, providing that a certain part of the money shall be expended at the lower end of the port? I should say they could do no better.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—The money has been spent.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I pointed out in the few remarks I made the facts as to the expenditure, and I showed the House that during the last twenty-five years there have been spent in the east end $1,100,000, and in the west end $504,000.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—What is that for?

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—That is for wharfs. For the last twenty-five years they have been taking the Canadian Pacific Railway elevators as the dividing line, to the east of Dalhousie Square there have been 12,180 lineal feet of wharfs built, and to the west end 2,870, and the money has been spent in about the same proportion. In the west end, in round figures, half a million has been spent and in the east end $1,100,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You include the stone embankments between the docks?

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I believe so. As a matter of fact, that is the cost of the wharfs. I have given you the number of feet of wharfs and the cost of building them. There has been an impression abroad that Montreal harbour has been crowded and that shipping has not been accommodated. That is not true. The fact that any one can see for himself is that a great many wharfs are empty at the present moment.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—It is not a question as to the money being spent in the east or the west.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—But that was the question that was raised by the hon. member who spoke.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I do not take much stock in that. I think in the city of Montreal everybody is about unanimous to spend the money for wharfs, and new docks, and dry docks also, and to prove it I will read a petition which was sent up here from Montreal in 1894. It is as follows:

We the undersigned, representing the various steamship lines and the shipping interests generally at the port of Montreal, beg to represent to Your Excellency in Council:

The disadvantage of not having and the absolute necessity of the speedy construction of dry docks is borne upon us more and more each season of navigation. As each season brings its crop of disasters, it shows the greatest disadvantage we labour under in not having up to date dry docks to accommodate ocean steamers of the present date and those of much greater length and tonnage which may be naturally looked forward to. An important port of the size of Montreal without a dry dock for ocean vessels is a strange anomaly.

We know of no port with the annual tonnage of the port of Montreal that has no dry dock to accommodate large vessels, which here seem to be entirely ignored.

Then this petition is signed by the following firms:—

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Did they ask to have that dock built in a certain part?

Hon. Mr. FORGET—They did not; but my hon. friend from Montreal said that we did not require dry docks, that the merchants did not want them.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—They do not want the commissioners to build it.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Then again in 1897 the matter was up, and the following was submitted:

Wherefore, because the port of Montreal is a natural and most important port of the Dominion, and because all other harbours throughout the country have been made at the cost of the government, your petitioners humbly pray Your Excellency in Council that the Dominion government will undertake and proceed with such work in the central portion of the harbour as will afford increased wharf accommodation, and also construct at some convenient point dry dock facilities.

In February another petition:

That the incoming council be requested to keep in view and urge upon the Dominion government the necessity for dry dock accommodation in the city of Montreal for ocean vessels of the largest class.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—They asked in that petition, do you not see, that the Dominion government, which had been building these docks everywhere else, should do it there. But now the proposal is that the port of Montreal shall do it.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I want to show that we require a dry dock, and have been asking for one for the last four years.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—We all know that, that is nothing new.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—At last the government came to a compromise. The commissioners asked the government to lend them two million dollars at three per cent interest, on condition that seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars should be spent, not for a dry dock only, but for high level wharfs so as to build elevators to receive grain from the Canadian Pacific Railway and Grand Trunk Railway. I have a better opinion of the harbour of Montreal than my two hon. friends, because I believe that with more accommodation and that money spent on the harbour, the trade of the harbour will increase enough to more than pay three per cent on the seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Those gentlemen are making their calculations as if the trade of the harbour of Montreal would not increase at all, and they would be obliged to pay that increased rate on the business as it stands to-day. I claim with these improvements that the harbour of Montreal and the revenue from it will more than pay the interest on that seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The government is really building the dock or the increased wharfage—indirectly if you like, but building it. They say "You build it." Supposing we could not meet our engagements what will the government do? Do you not believe that the government would come and help us and take the harbour under their own charge? In fact, for the last ten years, if I am not mistaken, everything has shown us that the government have felt morally bound to take care of the harbour of Montreal if we could not do it. I shall certainly support the measure, and I think it is only fair that the measure should be carried as it is.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I thought I explained clearly enough to the hon. member before that this is not a question of harbour improvement at all. There is no fault found with the harbour commissioners. The portion of the bill that is objected to is clause 4, because they consider it an outrage to tack that clause on to the end for a dry dock, and the men whose names you read to us from that document are the very men who to-day are against this bill. I told you some time ago that up to 1873 the harbour commissioners certainly had control of the harbour and the expenditure of the harbour, and it was a credit to every one, and they did their business thoroughly and well; and in 1873 or 1874 the government took the control out of the hands of the harbour commissioners by appointing a majority of the harbour commissioners themselves. But, as I said to the hon. Secretary of State a moment ago, the representatives of Montreal on that commission, except the mayor, are against this dry dock.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I beg your pardon.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I beg your pardon, every one of them except the mayor, and we know why he is not.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—There is nobody against the dry dock in Montreal. All are unanimous in their desire to have a dry dock on condition that the government build it themselves, but now, my hon. friend says, you are going to build that dry dock in the east end——

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—The hon. gentleman said they were going to spend $750,000 in the east end, where he knew some gentlemen had property.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—They designate the point where it shall be built; they do not leave it to the harbour commissioners.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—When these gentlemen wanted the dry dock some years ago, they wanted to have it built in the west end near the canal, and in fact they began to do it there at that time. The intention was to build a dry dock in the west end when these gentlemen were asking for it. Now that they see it is going to be built in the east end, they have changed their opinion and they think it is going to benefit the mayor of Montreal. But I am told the mayor of Montreal has not got one foot of property there, but it may make some of his property valuable just near the place. They are not going to spend seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars for a dry dock; they are not going to spend any money before they have plans and know what it is going to cost; and if they are not able to build piers and docks and dry docks with that money, they are not going to do it. That is the way I understand it. The government has the control of that yet. They must furnish plans of it within two months and if there is not enough money for it, I understand the dock will not be built.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong in saying that the people are opposing this bill because they want the dry dock in the west end instead of the east end. I disclaim that entirely. If a dry dock is to be built let it be built by the government and let them build it where they like. I deprecated the introduction of sectional feeling in this matter altogether and I deprecate it still. The very persons who signed that petition did it under the idea that the government, which was building dry docks everywhere else, should build this; and every one of them—I have the signatures of men whose names the hon.

gentleman has read out—calling on me to oppose to the last what they are pleased to call this iniquitous measure.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Because the government are not building the dock with their own money and that is the only reason they have given.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—How is that to be avoided? The bill calls upon us to pay a certain amount of interest on the expenditure.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—But surely you will get a larger trade and more revenue. No man would improve his business if he did not expect to have a return from it.

On the 4th clause.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I move that this clause be struck out.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I would ask the hon. leader of the House if this House has a right to amend this bill, being a money bill? I understand that if it is amended it throws it out.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This bill is a compromise bill, and I have no doubt it will not be accepted unless that clause is adopted. That is essential, whether the point of order is raised or not.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—It would be a very good thing to have this bill stand over in order that hon. gentlemen may agree. There is a great deal of diversity of opinion as to the expenditure of this sum. There should be a union of the people who are interested in the expenditure of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The whole discussion has been going on for the last two years.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Since 1891.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Since this government came in certainly. It has been carried on for several years. In the last two years the trade of Montreal has been pressing on the government to make an advance on such terms as would enable them to pay the interest in order that these contemplated improvements should be made. They were absolutely necessary, and large delegations have been coming up from Montreal making various proposals. This was a proposal that was accepted, and it was agreed to advance the money to the city of Montreal on their credit, giving them the benefit of three per cent interest. Before, they had been paying three per cent and on some old bonds five per cent. Now, that is a very considerable advantage to the city of Montreal. This bill is a compromise and has been agreed to by the parties interested. The effect of throwing out this bill would be to leave this controversy open and place the trade of Montreal at a very serious disadvantage.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—As I understand the position, the people of Montreal themselves prefer a dry dock, if a dry dock is to be built, at the eastern end of the city. The water is deeper there and the facilities are greater for the construction of a dry dock and at less expense at that point than it would be at the west end.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—There is no question about that at all. That has never been a question.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—So there is no dispute with regard to that matter. Then with regard to the distribution of the money. I suppose that the harbour commissioners of the city of Montreal would take special care that the money would be expended with the greatest possible advantage—that they would derive as much advantage as possible from the expenditure of a definite amount of money that is appropriated for this purpose. I understand at the present time in the city of Montreal there is no adequate accommodation—that you must furnish further dock accommodation before you can erect the necessary warehouses and elevators in order to accommodate the trade of that city. If Montreal is to secure, as we all desire that it shall secure, a very large proportion—the whole would be better—of the trade of Canada, it is necessary that its harbour accommodation should be very much more extensive than it is at the present time, and that greater facilities should be furnished for the loading and unloading of grain than now exist. So far as I understand the question, the harbour commissioners of Montreal and those interested in the city who are not adequately provided for at the present time, are desirous of securing this trade, to carry by way of the St. Lawrence as much of the trade of Canada as possible, and in order that it may do more than it is doing at the present time, greater facilities must exist than are now provided in the city of Montreal. Among the other things required, not wholly for the direct purpose of trade, but nevertheless that are matters of important consideration, as incidents of that trade, is the erection of a dry dock where ships that may be injured or that require repair may be repaired without having to be sent away to the city of Quebec. My hon. friend will see by a close examination of this bill that it is not provided that a sum of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars shall be spent upon a dry dock at Montreal. There may be a very much smaller sum. It may be less than half that sum.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—But likely to be larger.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It cannot be. It says they may apply the sum of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars towards the building or the improvement of wharfs, structures and other accommodation, including the building of a dry dock, in that part of the harbour of Montreal below the point known as St. Mary's current. Now, that may not include very much of the expenditure upon the dry dock at all. It may be that it will be found best, in the commercial interest of the city, that the larger portion of this sum definitely mentioned should be applied to the improvement of wharfs and other accommodations. That being so, my hon. friend will see that there is considerable more latitude allowed than has been stated in the discussion. There is no attempt to supercede the judgment, in this regard, of the harbour commissioners altogether, and that being so it does seem to me, looking at the divided opinions that exist in the city, and the necessities of commerce, and the interests of the whole west in Montreal securing this trade for the St. Lawrence, that this measure should become law. It does seem to me that if amendments are proposed, that will have the effect of defeating the measure—for, as I understand the situation, that would be the effect of the amendment of my hon. friend if it were carried—we are bound to consider what would be the position of Montreal and what would be the position of the carrying trade of this country if the harbour improvements of Montreal were left in the condition in which they are at the present time. I understand that some large shipping companies that now have their headquarters at Montreal are indifferent to those improvements. The harbour accommodation that now exists is adequate for their purposes, and they are not at all sure that it would be in their interests that this further accommodation should be had, and that ships of other lines should be brought to the city which might divide the trade amongst them. The view they take is a rather narrow view, and they have not really the faith in the growth of trade that it seems to me the surrounding circumstances warrant. If you furnish to the city of Montreal the harbour improvements that are required, and if Montreal furnishes to the public grain elevators and other public works that are necessary to carry on this trade, there can be no doubt whatever, that an enormous addition will be made to the trade of the city of Montreal, and that the question of the precise point at which the money may be spent is one altogether subordinate to the general advantage that will be derived from this loan and from the use that will be made of it.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The following letter has been sent to Mr. Allan, as harbour commissioner:

MONTREAL, June 1, 1898.

ANDREW ALLAN, Esq.,
Harbour Commissioner, Montreal.

DEAR SIR,—We the undersigned, members of the shipping interest, hereby enter our protest against the proposals for harbour extensions laid before the harbour board by Mr. Préfontaine and call upon you as their representative on the commission to oppose the same by every means in your power.

We are of opinion that the Plan No. 12a, if built at the expense of the harbour, will afford additional berth room for shipping and revenue from dues to an extent altogether inadequate to meet the cost for interest and maintenance, and will thus become a burden on the trade of the port rather than a benefit.

We also demand as a common right, due to Montreal, that the graving dock proposed by the government be built and managed as other graving docks are built throughout the Dominion, and that no portion of harbour moneys be used for this purpose.

And we further declare our preference for the discontinuance of all extensive harbour enlargements by the commissioners, otherwise than on the former undertaking, that the works are to be constructed at the public cost with the view of hereafter opening the harbour to the commerce of the Dominion free of all tolls and charges whatsoever.

We are,
Your obedient servants,

Signed by Henry Dobell & Co., H. & A. Allan, Hamburg-American Packet Co., James Thom, manager, Robert Reford & Co., (Limited), David Torrance & Co., Elder, Dempster & Co., Beaver Line

Company, D. W. Campbell, manager, Carbray, Routh & Co., J. G. Brock & Co., Wm. Johnston & Co., (Limited), Dominion Coal Company (Limited), Kingman & Co., agents, McLea, Kennedy & Co.

It is absolutely beyond all question that the harbour of Montreal is insufficient at the present moment. It is in bad shape, in this respect, that the wharfs are inadequate—they are too low. But there never has been any talk of a block until the present year, until the newspapers spread the idea that there was a blockade. There was no block. I am informed that not more than thirty-five per cent of the wharfs in the east end of the city were occupied all last year. If that be so there is no immediate hurry. There is a strong opinion among the largest shipowners in the port, that this bill, until the plans are matured and there is time to consider it, had better lie over for another year. I will read you one or two communications with reference to that. First says one important shipping interest:

All reference to a graving dock should be eliminated. All reference to a particular plan should be eliminated, and the harbour board given a free hand. Failing these amendments, the shipping interests would prefer the bill being put forward to next session for mature consideration.

One thing will strike you and it is this, that the plans of the proposed dock are not even prepared. They are to be prepared and submitted within two months from the passing of this bill. Why cannot those plans be prepared——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You are referring to plans, specifications and estimates, but I understand that the general design has been agreed upon and settled. That is my information.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—They have been kept secret then. We do not know it in Montreal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If my hon. friend will just read clause 3.

The sums of money advanced to the corporation under this Act shall, subject to the provisions of the next following section, be applied by the corporation towards the completion, construction, extension, or improvement of wharfs, structures and other accommodations in the harbour of Montreal, in such manner as the corporation have, by a plan of the said harbour works known as plan 12a, signed by the harbour commissioners and their engineer, and approved of by the Minister of Public Works, determined upon and defined, subject, however, to such modifications thereof as the said harbour commissioners, with the consent and approval of the Minister of Public Works, may make,—such works to be commenced forthwith and prosecuted continuously until completion.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—That refers only to the wharfs. If you look at clause 4 subsection 2 it says the plans and estimates shall be submitted within two months from the passing of this act:

2. The plans, specifications and estimates for all such works, shall be submitted to the Minister of Public Works within two months from the passing of this act, and shall be subject to his approval; and on such approval being given, the said works shall be commenced forthwith and be carried on concurrently with the works on plan 12a mentioned in section 3.

Even at the risk of putting the bill over for another year I insist on my amendment.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—In seconding that amendment I should like to say a word. The hon. Minister of Justice, whom I am always delighted to hear, spoke of our necessary improvements, but I think I know something about the moving of grain and elevators. I believe I was instrumental in bringing the plans to Montreal for building the first floating elevator ever built in the country, and I have followed it up pretty closely ever since to see what it was doing. If the money was to be spent in wharfs I would have nothing to say against it at all, although these very wharfs that some hon. members wanted and seem to get so very wild about were not urgently needed. I pass down two or three times every month, sometimes four or five times, by those wharfs in the lower end of the town, and I venture to say that last year not one-tenth of all those expensive wharfs that were built in the lower end of the town were occupied one-fourth of the year, and there was nothing there but a few wood barges.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is the current too strong at that point?

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Yes.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—But the objection the shipping interests take is to the building of a dry dock. It would be better for the harbour commissioners to do without the loan altogether than to be saddled with $750,000 to construct something which they should not be obliged to build at all. Then the hon. Secretary of State and the hon. leader of the House spoke about the harbour commissioners agreeing to such and such a thing. We who live in Montreal know well enough that for the last three years plan after plan has been prepared and agreed to by the harbour commissioners, and agreed to by the engineers, but it was not agreed to by the Minister of Public Works, and until the Minister of Public Works gets it to suit him he would not agree to it all. I think the proposition made last year would be a great deal better. If the Minister of Public Works knows more about our needs in the harbour of Montreal than our commissioners do, then he is the proper man to go to work and build these improvements himself. But, if there is any use having a harbour commission at all, the commissioners should be allowed to do it. We know there was complaint after complaint and no attention paid to them. In seconding the motion I do not feel the least hesitation in saying that I know we will have the good wishes of and will be working for the best interests of the largest class of the mercantile community in Montreal, the shipping interests, and all these other interests, if we can put this bill off for another year, rather than have that monstrous clause enacted.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Whether we live in the east or in the west, as Canadians we must feel a deep interest in the port of Montreal. It is our great commercial emporium for Canada, and must necessarily continue to be such, and our desire should be that the port of Montreal should, in every respect, be at least as good as any port on the American continent. I understand that up to the present time all the improvements that have been made at that port have been made at the expense of the citizens of Montreal. They have borrowed money, on which they have been paying interest, and this loan which they are authorized to make is one on which they are to pay interest at three per cent.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—The grain shipped from the west has to pay the interest.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Not at all. The railways are on the wharfs. It does not cost a cent more.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I understand the port of Montreal has paid its own way. I am not aware whether the loans were from the government or not, but it has paid interest on its loans, and it is proposing to do the same with the money now being borrowed under this bill, and I do think, under these circumstances that the disposition of that money should be left with the harbour commissioners of the port of Montreal, and that this House should not dictate where that money is to be spent, or how it is to be appropriated.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The majority of the harbour commissioners favour this bill.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Those appointed by the government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And the majority must govern in this matter.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I thought the majority of them favoured another disposition of the money. I understand a portion of these commissioners are appointed by the government, and I suppose the government exercises a certain influence in the disposition of the money, if the harbour commissioners are the nominees of the government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And the mayor of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes. It certainly will not be denied that the majority of the harbour commissioners chosen by the city of Montreal itself, by the board of trade and the chamber of commerce, those who are representative of the city of Montreal, are opposed to the proposed disposition of the money.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—That will not be denied.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—The chambre de commerce is in favour of it. Its representative voted for it, and he is not appointed by the government.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think that I understand the position, and I am right in saying that a majority of the harbour commissioners chosen by the city of Montreal from the board of trade or chamber or commerce favour a different disposition of this money to that which it is proposed to make under the terms of this bill. If that is so, in voting this money, which the city of Montreal had to pay the interest upon, we should follow the views of the representatives of the city of Montreal and not interfere in the disposition of the money. While I say that, I hear my friends here say that it will be the duty of the government to deal with Montreal as it has dealt with other cities and build a dry dock, which it is admitted should be in the east end, as having the deepest water. I think there is no difference of opinion on that. I think there would not be found in this House or the parliament of Canada any such sectional feeling as would oppose a grant of that kind to Montreal, as we have already built a dry dock in Kingston and Halifax. Considering the great importance of the city of Montreal to Canada as a whole, there would be a disposition to undertake that work when the people of the city of Montreal themselves agreed upon its construction and asked for it as a work of great public importance. However that may be, I must say, from what I have heard, that I shall vote with my hon. friend from Kennebec (Mr. Drummond) in the motion that he has made, that this clause should be struck out of the bill, because I think it should be left to the disposition of the majority of the harbour commissioners elected by the citizens of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—My hon. friend spoke of the majority of the board as appointed by the government. The majority was not appointed by the government. Two of those commissioners, Mr. Lemay and Mr. Bickerdike—Mr. Bickerdike especially—have been strongly against it and doing all they can to oppose it, and they are two nominees of the government. The remarks of the hon. gentleman from Alma (Mr. Ogilvie) would lead the House to believe that it was carried by a majority of the government appointees.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—It seems to me that this amendment, if it is carried, is outside of the power of this House. This is a government bill, and if we vote for the amendment we vote to throw the bill out altogether.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I wish to correct any misunderstanding which may exist. It is not a question of east end versus west end. If this graving dock is to be built—and perhaps sooner or later in the history of the port it may be built—I am perfectly willing that it should go to the east end, and I see good reasons why it should go to the east end instead of the west end. That is not the question. Here is a proposal involving a considerable expenditure, as to the advisability of which the citizens of Montreal, whom this bill professes to oblige, are very much divided in opinion, to say the least of it, and I do not think it would be the duty of parliament, or of the government, to force on a community a bill which professes to be a favour and an obligation against the will of the recipients. I think it is the duty of the government to lend this money at the low rate of interest, seeing that they lose nothing. That is a favour so far as it extends. The harbour commissioners get the credit of the government. But if it is mixed up, and a condition imposed that we are to expend a portion of it in the construction of a dock, which we have a divided opinion about, which we doubt the benefit of under the present circumstances, which we think unnecessary, I say the men who are to be benefited by the graving dock, if any, to wit, the owners of vessels trading to Montreal, should be the best judges of that, and they say they would prefer that the bill lie over for another year, instead of being passed in its present form.

Hon. Mr. POWER—For a little while I thought it was going to be a rather hard thing to vote against the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Kennebec; but when I find that his views do not represent the views of a majority of the harbour commissioners, I have no difficulty in voting against it. We vote the money and they dispose of it as they think proper.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—It is a matter of regret that the discussion of this question should convey to this House the impression that the city of Montreal, or the shipping interest, are opposed to a dry dock. That is not the case. It is greatly to be desired that there should be a dry dock at the city of Montreal; in fact it was only to-day that a representative of one of the shipping firms, in speaking of the subject, said if any accident happened in the river coming up, as it frequently happens, they are obliged to return to Quebec, and there is no shipowner who wishes to take a vessel to Quebec a second time. There is no opposition, and it is a monopoly, and the charges are so excessive that shipowners do not wish to take their vessels to Quebec to place them in dry dock. For that reason, it is very important that there should be a dry dock in Montreal, and I also wish to say that the impression that has been conveyed that the position of this dry dock as recommended has not been received with favour is not correct. The east end of Montreal is no doubt the proper place for this dry dock. There is one question I think we should all agree with, that the dry dock in Montreal should be built by the government, as the dry docks in other sections of the country have been built.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They have not been so built.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Neither at Halifax nor at Esquimalt.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—Well, the dry docks throughout the country generally, have been built by the government, and that is the only question that can be raised against it, but if the effect of this amendment, if carried, is to throw this bill over for another year, opposed as I might be to place any additional charge upon the harbour of Montreal, I should prefer to vote against the amendment rather than have the bill thrown over for another year. The city of Montreal has suffered enough in the past, and I do think it is most important, in the interest of the harbour and in the interest of the country generally, that this work should be proceeded with.

The amendment was lost, and the clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. DEVER, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was read the third time and passed under the suspension of the rule.

DAWSON CITY ELECTRIC COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW moved the third reading of Bill (123) "An Act to incorporate the Dawson City Electric Company, Limited."

Hon. Mr. POWER moved in amendment:

That the bill be not now read a third time, but that it be amended by striking out the words "or any other motive" in the 8th section of the bill, at line 8 of the third page.

He said: This bill is entitled "An Act to incorporate the Dawson City Electric Company, Limited," and in clause 7 the company are given very extensive powers to do all manner of things, some of which are not connected with electricity at all. For instance, in paragraph "e" they are empowered to—Carry on the business of carriers, and all other business incident thereto or connected therewith.

And under paragraph "i" they are given power to:

Acquire shares in the capital stock, debentures and securities of other companies possessing powers similar to those of the company, as the consideration for goods, wares or merchandise sold to such other companies in the ordinary course of business.

In fact, this bill is what is very often denominated an omnibus bill. The committee, to whom this bill was referred, decided that the company should have these omnibus powers, and I do not propose to quarrel now with the decision of the committee, but it will be remembered by hon. gentlemen that several bills—a bill introduced by the hon. gentleman from Calgary amongst others—were held over in the other House because they contained powers which authorized the parties incorporated to build railways in the Yukon country. This session no company has been chartered with power to build a railway in the Yukon country. One English company was incorporated last year which is building a railway from the coast to the Yukon, and one United States company was incorporated last year which selected a route which is impracticable, so at this time there is but one English company chartered to build a railway to the Yukon country. The United States company selected the Taku Inlet as the terminus, and they are doing nothing.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B. C.)—They are surveying there now.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This charter coming up to us at the close of the session was supposed to be a charter simply for an electric company, but in clause 8 it says they are authorized "to lay out, construct and operate single or double lines of electric railway or tramway, or both, and such lines may be worked by electric or any other motive power." Steam is another motive power, and the consequence is that these words which I propose to strike out allow this company to do what no other company has been allowed to do this year. The territory which is set out for this company in the beginning of clause 7 runs to the international boundary, and under this clause, unless it is amended the company could run a steam railway to the boundary and then connect with a railway in Alaska. In order that the action of parliament should be consistent, these words should be sticken out. That will leave the company all the manifold powers which they take under clause 7 and will leave them power to build and operate lines of railway to be operated by electricity, but will not allow them to construct a railway to be operated by steam.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I cannot see what difference it can make whether they have steam or electricity. The other bills hung up in the lower House were lines running to the coast, but this does not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This applies to a road within a radius of fifty miles from Dawson City, clause 8 provides that:

> The company may, in Dawson City and elsewhere in the Yukon district within a radius of fifty miles from Dawson City, and also to form and along the Bonanza, Eldorado and Klondike Rivers, lay out, construct, and operate single or double lines of electric railway, or tramway, or both, and such lines may be worked by electric or any other motive power; or the company may aid in or subscribe towards the construction of any electric railways, or any tramways, constructed by any other company within the district and radius, or along the routes, above described.

It is in the interest of that country that we should favour every possible line of railway in the interior. Whatever argument there may be against lines connecting with the coast, it cannot apply to this. If there were no falls or rapids by which they could obtain the electric power, they would be precluded from building the railway all together if they were not allowed to use steam.

The amendment was declared lost on a division.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not rise to oppose the third reading of the bill, but I wish to remark that if one has an objectionable measure, a judicious thing is to hold it back to the end of the session, and then you can get all the rules over-ridden and you will find the Senators prepared to pass almost any sort of measure just on the ground that they have not time to consider it.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—This bill was before the other House several weeks, and it was no fault of its promoters that it did not come before us sooner.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the third time and passed.

THIRD READING.

Bill (118) "An Act to incorporate the Dawson City Electric Lighting and Tramway Company, Limited."—(Hon. Mr. Clemow.)

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day being called:

Third reading Bill (71) "An Act to amend the Weights and Measures Act" as amended.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—After considering the suggestion made by the hon. Minister of Justice, I think it will answer the purpose, and in all probability make the clause much clearer, and I am prepared to accept it. With that understanding I presume we could go back into committee and add the subsection as amended by the suggestion of the hon. gentleman and then pass the bill.

The house resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I move that the following clause be added as subsection 1 of clause 6 :

No weighing machine used for weighing or determining the weights of any of the articles mentioned in section 16 shall be of less certified capacity than one Winchester bushel.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL, from the committee, reported the bill with the amendment, which was concurred in.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

THE SENATE DEBATES.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE moved that the report of the Standing Committee on Debates and Reporting be adopted. He said : The first paragraphs of the report are those which appear every year. The first paragraph is to confirm the appointment of Mr. Smith as press reporter of the sittings, and the second paragraph is as to the translation of the debates into French. The third paragraph is about the delay in the publication of the debates. The reasons given by the Bureau were that there was too much work on hand, but if proper machinery was provided them, the publication of the reports might be done a good deal more quickly and with more economy.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to make one or two observations on the last paragraph of the report. I have no doubt that if further machinery were procured, the printing might be done a little more expeditiously than it is, but it will be noticed that it is only to the Senate reporting that this remark applies ; and why should that be? Our neighbours and friends in the other House get their Hansard the day after the debates take place. We get ours about a week afterwards. I think, considering that the minister who is supposed to have charge of the Printing Bureau is a member of this House, that that is a very unsatisfactory condition of things and one which we should not accept ; and unless the minister undertakes next session to have things better done, we had better move a vote of want of confidence in that particular minister. I think it is most unsatisfactory that when the Secretary of State is in this House we cannot get our report for six days after they get the Hansard in the House of Commons. They might put one machine to work for the Senate and take one off the House of Commons if the work has to be done by machinery.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—There is no doubt this work has not been done very satisfactorily, and the debates are perfectly useless as they are issued now. If the publication cannot be done more expeditiously, we had better dispense with the reporting of the debates, and save that much expense. If there is not sufficient machinery, let them get it. Men are always telling me that they cannot get work at the Bureau. It shows, at any rate, that we have not the same amount of influence that the Commons have. But if this new machinery is required, let them get it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The suggestion made by my hon. friend behind me is a perfectly good one if acted upon, and that is that the best printing machines should be employed in printing the debates of the Senate. The House of Commons will then take care of itself, and as it controls the money, if it chooses to go on with the hand machine then that will be its business. But if the best machinery is employed in printing the debates of the Senate, then the duty of reform will devolve upon the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I understand that the Hansard reports that comes to the House of Commons the next day after the speeches are delivered are the unrevised ones, and I find very few of the speeches recorded there are such as any member of the Senate would care to have recorded in our reports. The revised reports of the House of Commons are published some days later. In our case, the proofs come to us and we have an opportunity to revise them, and these are sent back to the printer and the report is then issued revised. If we did not revise our speeches before publication, we would have them issued just as quickly as the House of Commons their unrevised reports; but if the members wish to revise their speeches, then it will take a much longer time.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—It is very easy to find fault, but when you come to take into account that our speeches have to be reported and extended, sent to the Bureau and put in type and proof read before they are submitted to us for revision and correction, and that the corrections must then be made at the Bureau before the reports can be issued, we have no great reason to complain. We are perhaps a little too anxious. It is true it might be possible to have our speeches the day after they are delivered, but they certainly cannot be issued so rapidly as hon. gentlemen think they could. I have watched the proceedings pretty carefully and I find that there is a great deal of work, and the senators are not always prompt in correcting and returning the proofs of their speeches, and the reporters and those who transmit them to the Printing Bureau must necessarily lose time in consequence of the fact that some times the senators themselves take the full twenty-four hours that they are allowed to make their corrections, and until the corrections are made and all the proofs are returned to the Bureau, the printers are not justified in issuing the reports of the speeches.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman who has just spoken has given the explanation. Evidence was given before the committee, and it was found that the fault lay entirely with the members holding back the proofs of their speeches before correcting and returning them, and that is really the cause. If it were not for that, the reports would come out just as rapidly to this House as the House of Commons.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, there is another point I think that might be added to what has been already said, that is the inferiority of the work that is put upon the Senate reports as compared with that done for the House of Commons. The explanation of that is, that the type used for our debates is old half worn out type set by hand, while the House of Commons reports are set up by a type machine, and consequently is renewed every time that it is set, while in the other case they use old half worn out type, set by hand in the old style. Consequently the work never can be kept looking as clean, and it is not as good work. I am not complaining particularly of the Secretary of State. I should not be prepared to support the motion for want of confidence in the Secretary of State upon that ground. From some little knowledge I have of the work, I can easily understand why it is delayed. There is no reason in the world, if the Bureau is supplied with proper machinery to do the work promptly, there should be any delay, and I am satisfied that a large saving in the expense of conducting the establishment could be made and the work present a much better appearance, and be handed to us earlier.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The reason given by the hon. Secretary of State as one of the causes for delay in the printing of the reports of the debates of this House, namely, that hon. gentlemen keep back their proofs after revising them. I have no doubt that that is the cause of delay. The remedy would be that the printing should not be held back, and that after a reasonable time, a very few hours, for hon. gentlemen to make revision and corrections, the galleys should go back to the Bureau without revision. I do not see any reason whatever why the reports of this House, matter of useful information for members themselves, and matter of information for the press, should be held back because a member occasionally is careless or is absent from Ottawa and neglects to correct the proofs of his speech.

Hon. Mr. POWER—An order of that kind was passed some two or three years ago. The rule is that after a lapse of twenty-four hours after the delivery of the proofs the printers are to proceed with the printing.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—That should be done as far as possible, but some times it is almost impossible to comply with that rule. I must say it would be rather difficult to have the reports published here so satisfactorily as in the Commons, because we have long recesses and some times for three or four days in the week we have very short sessions, and they cannot keep a staff at the Bureau waiting for work which does not come some times for weeks. So that we cannot expect to have our reports issued as promptly as those of the House of Commons on account of that irregularity. But if there was better machinery in the Bureau, we would not have to wait a week.

The motion was agreed to.

NORTH-WEST IRRIGATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day having been called:

Consideration of the amendments made in Committee of the Whole House to Bill 146 "An Act to amend and consolidate the North-west Irrigation Acts of 1894 and 1895."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This bill was held over for the purpose of ascertaining the views of the Minister of the Interior on the propriety of accepting the amendments that were made to the bill when the House was in committee. There was a change in clause 10, in the fee. That is unimportant and I shall be glad to accept that and move the concurrence of the House on the substitution of "three" for "five." I am advised, however, that under the bill there will be no single farmers attempting to carry out any irrigation. It will only be done by a company or a party with large capital. The Minister of the Interior informs me of that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the Minister of the Interior states that, he is unacquainted with the facts. I state that as a member of this House, and I state further, that the only irrigation which is now being carried on in southern Alberta is irrigation by the individual farmers in that district.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Did not some people attempt to irrigate up there and fail?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Two or three companies commenced work and lost their money.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The largest company I know of is the one promoted by Mr. Pierce, the officer of the Dominion government supervising irrigation, and that company has not met with much success, owing largely in my judgment to settlers considering it too costly to use the water in the experimental stages of irrigation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We will come to that later on. I move concurrence in the first amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The amendment to clause 15 is the one which I thought would make the Act unworkable The hon. member from Calgary proposed to add to the 15th clause:

And the maximum water to be charged by the licensee.

The effect of that amendment is that before any license could be taken out at all the water rates must be fixed. I considered at the time that that would be absolutely impracticable, because you could not tell within fifty per cent of what the cost of the works would be. I know very well in estimating work mistakes of that kind will occur. Assuming a work is to cost one hundred thousand dollars, it might cost one hundred and fifty thousand or even one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars. It is only after the money has been expended and the cost of the work ascertained that you can fix a fair water rate on the capital invested. I must therefore ask the House not to concur in that amendment. It would be better to drop the bill altogether than to accept that. The hon. Minister of the Interior says it would be unworkable.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then why do you require the applicant to state the rates in section 12 to be charged for water? If the applicant is compelled to state the rates which he is to impose upon customers, how do you reconcile that with the statement now made, that it is impossible for the minister to decide what should be a reasonable rate? I refer to clause 11, and I ask my hon. friend to reconcile the statement he now makes, that it is impossible for the minister to determine what the charges are, with this provision in the bill, section 11, line 46, reads as follows:

The applicant shall state the probable number of consumers and the rate, if any, to be charged for water sold.

If the Minister of the Interior states that he at that stage cannot determine what rate should be charged, so far as fixing the maximum rate is concerned, then it is absolutely ridiculous to ask the applicant to fix a rate. When he gives notice to the public that he is asking for a certain right to be given to him, the rate which he himself fixes should be the maximum rate chargeable to consumers; because if in that notice he gives it to be understood that upon his representation to consumers that no more than a certain rate is to be fixed, and that in consideration of that fact the public and the consumers offer no opposition or express satisfaction at the rate, then, after this rate is stated, the applicant should not be able to double that rate and extract from the consumer a hundred per cent more. If that were permitted, a great injustice would be done to the consumer. If the licensee fixes that rate, I ask that he be bound by it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What is stated in the memorial is a general estimate which the party cannot be bound by possibly until the expenditure is absolutely known. It is simply a general foreshadowing of the amount of country to be irrigated and the size of the pipes, the number of consumers and the rates charged, and so on. But it is only in a general way.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As I understand the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Calgary, it does not bind the party to charge just the amount he mentions. It is a maximum rate, and if the minister can require the applicant to give the rate that he proposes to charge for water in his memorial. I do not see why the applicant cannot give it in the public notice as well as in the memorial.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because it cannot be fixed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But you have asked the applicant to fix it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—And the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Calgary requires this to be done by the applicant. You simply ask the applicant to do for the people in the neighbourhood who may be interested what section 11 requires him to do for the minister.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He gives the minister a general idea of the whole thing.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—All I ask is that the minister should accept the statement of the applicant and fix that as the rate.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The amendment provides that the applicant shall state the maximum rate to be charged by the licensee. That is one of the things included in the notice given by the applicant. It is not the minister who does that; it is simply the applicant acting here as the bill requires him to act under clause 11.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I simply ask that the bill be amended so that the rate be fixed in the notice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the applicant makes a public announcement in a paper, he is bound by it, and he is not bound by the other, which is only an estimate of the probable result. He cannot define it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—He has already defined it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no. That is simply as to the section of the country and the number of consumers and the volume of water.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And the rate to be charged.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will be absolutely useless if it is passed with that amendment in it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think it will work out successfully. Having had a good deal of experience since the initiation of irrigation legislation in that country, I can speak with a good deal of confidence.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I can see no reason whatever why the applicant should not be bound by the declaration set forth in the memorial. He is seeking for a license, and in order to obtain it he is required to make some statement, and one of these statements is the rate that he is to charge.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Before the company know what they are going to expend.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—They ought to know.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—How can you tell?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The law insists that they shall know. They are required to set forth a number of particulars, and one is the rate to be charged for water. I think they ought to be bound by it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that the amendment added in committee be struck out. The bill will be dropped if that amendment is allowed to be made. This bill is simply the present law codified. We are making no change. I am quite willing to accept any amendment in reason, and I was quite prepared to accept other amendments, and I understood the hon. gentleman to say if that amendment did not meet with the concurrence of the department he would drop it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I then asked that the minister fix the maximum charge, and I said that the rate fixed by the applicant himself should appear in the notice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would not be possible for any sane business man to estimate a rate which would form anything like a fair basis for a dividend. You could not tell within twenty-five or thirty per cent the cost of the work.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am quite satisfied that thirty per cent more than the rate should be fixed as a maximum charge.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then do you not see that if a maximum charge is fixed, it will be adhered to? If the company are allowed to charge a rate that may possibly yield ten, twelve or fifteen per cent, they will adhere to it certainly. It is not in the interest of the consumer that the clause should be there. The minister will know the cost of the work, and know what would be a fair dividend on that after the charges of management.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As I said before, it was only after being strongly urged by the member for Alberta, who is a warm supporter of the government and knows the requirements of that part of the country, that I made the suggestion, and I fully concur in the expression of his views with regard to it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that the words which have been added to clause fifteen be not concurred in.

The Senate divided on the motion which was rejected by the following vote :—

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that the amendment be now concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The bill will probably be withdrawn, but I shall go on and take the sense of the House on the other amendments made in committee. My present opinion is that the bill will not be proceeded with.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman announce the fact that the bill will be withdrawn? I understood him to say so, and notwithstanding that fact he is going on with the bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I say it may be withdrawn. Before the third reading of the bill I shall be able to announce what the minister will do. I was advised by the department that that was so serious and important a change in the bill that it could not be worked.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend entirely exaggerates the effect of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I state what those who are acquainted with the subject say. Mr. Pierce has the credit of being one of the best irrigation engineers on the continent.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Mr. Pierce and also Mr. Dennis are surveyors. The exception which I have always taken to the administration of this Act has been this, that the government has not appointed an irrigation engineer—a man who has practical experience in the carrying out of such undertakings. Instead of doing that, the whole work connected with this irrigation in the North-west has been handed over to surveyors who have had no experience in irrigation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Had not Dennis and Pierce been in charge of this work long before the change of government? The present government made no change.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Under the late government the same thing prevailed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This question has been decided, and we cannot go back to discuss it further.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The next change is in section 17; the words "or irrigation" are added. I move concurrence in that amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In clause 18 an amendment was made which is as follows: "that on page 6, line 47, after the word 'Act' insert the following as subsection 6: 'provided that where under section 17 the minister waives the necessity for plans this section shall not apply.'" I move that that amendment be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. member from Calgary, in clause 31, wished to have the word "wilfully" inserted in line 13, page ten, after the word "who." The hon. senator thought that that was too strong, and unless parties committed the offence wilfully that it would not be fair to hold them guilty of an offence. So far as individuals are concerned I am prepared to accept that amendment, and therefore I move that the House concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then in section 32, the hon. senator from Calgary, wished to have the word "wilfully" on page 10, line 27, inserted after the word "license." There it had reference to the licensee, and the same argument would not apply. The licensee cannot be considered a very innocent person, because his temptation would always be to divert more water than he is entitled to, and I think the word "wilfully" ought not to be introduced here, because he would not divert the water without knowing that he was doing wrong; and therefore I move that the amendment to clause 32 be not concurred in by the House.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The licensee might possibly take a greater quantity of water than is permitted by his license and have no knowledge that he is exceeding it. However, I do not press the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was a verbal change in line 3 of section 33, and I do not think it is necessary to make a motion to adopt it. I will not move the third reading.

Hon. Mr. POWER—With all respect to the Secretary of State, I do not think the course which he proposes is the proper parliamentary course. We make certain amendments to the bill, and in the ordinary course it goes down to the House of Commons; and there it is a question whether they will accept our amendments or not. I think the holding of the bill until it is ascertained what the House of Commons is likely to do with it is rather irregular, just as irregular as the action taken by the leader of the opposition with regard to the Plebiscite Bill. I think in both cases the action is irregular.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not prepared to proceed with the bill. If there is a change made in the bill to destroy it, I do not know that I am prepared to proceed with the bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I must take exception to the threatening way in which my hon. friend refers to the passing of this bill. If the officials of the department referred to by my hon. friend last night are to prepare legislation and pass upon legislation, and are to take the position that no amendment should be made by this House or the House of Commons, and that their view is the only one that can be expressed upon it, the sooner we abdicate our functions to these gentlemen the better. I fully accord to those officials credit for the interest they have taken in irrigation. But I hope it may not be thought egotistical on my part to say that I have some knowledge of this subject; I might say I was among the first in the district to take up and urge the passage of legislation with regard to irrigation; and when I say I have some knowledge on this subject, my hon. friend brings forth the statement that these two gentlemen have very carefully prepared the bill, and there must be positively no departure from it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, not positively.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When he considers the amendments suggested, and which were carefully gone into by Mr. Oliver and myself, I think he must acknowledge that those amendments contribute very considerably to the improvement of the bill, and I am satisfied they will be so accepted by the public in that district. I further assure my hon. friend that the amendment which meets with his disapprobation is the most important improvement to the bill, and it will be received by the people in Alberta with the greatest approval.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend will know that he made eight different changes. I accepted six and there were only two that I was able to concur in.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But the amendment with regard to rates is really the most important.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is one important thing which should not be lost sight of. The provisions of this bill are purely administrative. The work of administration has been considered by the Department of the Interior to which the duty is assigned. They come down with a measure which they believe will carry out the object that the department has in view. My hon. friend opposite proposed certain amendments to that scheme of administrative work proposed by the department. The head of the department is consulted with regard to this work, not a question of public policy, not a question of ordinary legislation, but a question purely administrative, and my hon. friend suggests certain changes. The head of the department says that these changes will make the measure unworkable, that the department will be unable to carry out the object it has in view if a change is made. But my hon. friend, upon whom the responsibility does not devolve, insists upon this change in an administrative bill simply to facilitate the work of the department. He insists upon the substitution of his view rather than the view taken by the department, and the majority of the Senate concur with him. My hon. friend says it is a threat for my colleague to say that until he consults the minister he will not say whether he will press the third reading. I think that is a perfectly reasonable proposition. It is not any threat to the House, but it is a declaration that the minister adheres to the judgment which he formed, and of which the House was informed before the vote was taken.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The clause of the bill to which I moved the amendment is not of an administrative character at all. Will my hon. friend say that there is no distinction between an administrative provision and a provision by which a corporation may bleed the public to any extent they may choose in a matter of imposing rates? Does my hon. friend say that that is administrative? I say it is one of the very essentials of the bill. It is a matter of a most vital character and I ask my hon. friend, as one possessing a judicial mind, as Minister of Justice, when an application is made to the department and the applicant states the rate he is to charge consumers, is it an unreasonable thing that that rate should be put in the notice which goes to the public? When that person asks for a public right and for a concession of a very valuable character, is it not a reasonable thing that he should make such an announcement? That is all that is asked.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not undertake to quarrel with the doctrine laid down by the hon. Minister of Justice, or to question its correctness, but I wish to state that the doctrine which he lays down is not one on which we have acted in this House. I remember, myself, that when I was a member of the opposition I continually moved amendments to bills which were just as much administrative in their character as the bill now before us. I can remember a good many years ago that a bill with respect to Dominion lands was before the House, and that I moved a dozen or more amendments to it, some of which were accepted by the House: and there is a good deal to be said in favour of the view that if we are not to deal with money bills, and if we are not to deal with bills that refer to administration, why then we had better close this House up and let the other House and the ministers conduct the business.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The bill stands for the present; I will give notice if I wish to put it on the paper again.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think if the bill is withdrawn like that it is not very likely to go through this session.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is for me to say.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then I move the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You cannot take a government bill out of our hands.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then I withdraw the motion, but I hope my hon. friend will think better of it.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (150) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting the judges of provincial courts."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Last night I gave a verbal notice that I would ask the hon. leader of the House, as to the judges in British Columbia, whether the vacancy would be filled up soon, or to let me have an intimation of what was intended to be done.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not think that question comes up on this bill.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—But it is germane to the subject dealt with.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the adoption of the first clause.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—I regret that I feel it incumbent upon me to move an amendment to a bill that, with the exception of one point, I heartily approve of; but I feel it to be a public duty, and I would therefore not do right if I failed to move a motion which I think will commend itself to the majority of this House. It is in the second and third subsections of the first clause. I do touch the first portion of the first section of the bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But we have not come to that yet. We are only at the first paragraph.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would point out that the second subsection applies to judges now holding office, and I ask the Minister of Justice how he interprets this language "provided no person shall hold or retain office after he has completed the 75th year of his age," if it is not intended to apply to those who now hold the office. In that case the second paragraph would be requisite. If it is intended to apply only to those who are to be appointed hereafter, then this second subsection could be struck out as unnecessary. That is the point I want to ask.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman asks whether that first proviso applies to those who at present hold office. As it stands it is applicable to everybody. The second clause makes that point more clear. If you wish to confine it to future appointments, it would be necessary to add some further words in substitution of clauses 2 and 3 so that if my hon. friend were simply striking out section 3 and adding nothing else, it would be extremely doubtful whether it would change the character of the measure.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is precisely as I understand it. I have no doubt my hon. friend will see that point at once. If the second clause is struck out which makes special reference to those now holding office as judges, would it not retire every judge who has attained to the age of seventy-five? I would ask the hon. gentleman from Barrie to look at the proviso in the second clause.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—As I understand it, the first portion of the first clause of the bill makes provision for a time limit, when a judge shall be compelled to retire. It is perfect in itself so far as it goes, but the subsections make it retroactive and general. I propose to correct it in this way: to eliminate clauses two and three and substitute these words, "the subsections so substituted shall apply to judges who may hereafter be appointed." I do not object to the principle of fixing the age, but I entirely object to legislating a man out of office. I do not propose to repeat what I have already said. My objections are simply these: I think it would be a plain violation of the guarantee given to the officers on their appointment by the commission under the great seal of the Dominion. It would be, as respects the men to be affected by it, a most unjust act. It would be depriving them of office without giving them an opportunity of being heard, without any charge against them, and I contend that is absolutely unjust and contrary to the principle of British law and British practice. Even in the case of prisoners, all exceptions are made in their favour and they are presumed to be innocent before they are pronounced guilty. Now this legislates judges out of office without a charge against them and without hearing, and I say that that would be a plain violation of right; therefore, I beg to move to leave out the second and third subsections and substitute these words:

The subsections so substituted shall apply only to judges to be hereafter appointed.

I feel very strongly on the point, and I have done what I consider my duty in submitting the amendment to the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The objection I have to this clause is, in the first place, the county court judges are appointed precisely on the same terms, and under the same conditions, as the Supreme Court judges. They hold their parchment in which it is declared that they shall hold office during good behaviour. I can see no reason why a county court judge should be dealt with differently than a Superior Court judge, only for the reason, which has been assigned, that the Confederation Act places it beyond the power of the government to deal with the Superior Court judges. The county court judges are appointed under a statute passed by this parliament, and so are the judges of the Supreme Court, and the question I asked the Minister of Justice the other day, when this subject was under discussion, was, whether the Supreme Court judges did not stand in the same relation to the executive of the day as the county court judges. The hon. gentleman at that time was not prepared to give me an answer; neither do I know that he is now, but the question suggested itself to me, as a layman, was not the Supreme Court a creation of the parliament of Canada under the Confederation Act, stands in precisely the same position to the executive as do the county court judges. The other day my hon. friend, when discussing the Franchise Bill, stated that the county court judges, as soon as they are appointed, become provincial officers. Well, they are appointed by the Dominion government under authority of an Act of parliament. They are subject to dismissal, under certain circumstances, by that power and not by the local government, although a statute was pointed out to me yesterday which was passed by John Sanfield Macdonald when in power in Ontario, and I presume at that time he must have held the same view of their constitutional rights as the Minister of Justice has taken. That law provided for the dismissal by the executive of the province of Ontario, for cause, whenever they thought proper to remove them. That has never been acted upon, so far as my recollection serves me. Then, during the administration of Sir John Thompson, a case occurred in which a county court judge, afflicted with softening of the brain, became unfit for the duties of his office. The difficulty presented itself then as to how a vacancy was to be created, and in order to do that, a bill was introduced and passed by parliament, giving power to appoint a commissioner, one of the judges of the Superior Court, to make an examination and report. The late Judge Paterson was appointed to make the investigation to which I have referred, as to the physical and mental capacity of the judge—I dare say my hon. friend will remember who it was, an old and intimate friend of my own—and he was found to be incapable. Action was to be taken to enable the government to superannuate him. There was no power to retire him under the Superannuation Act. A special Act was passed for that purpose, but the poor judge relieved the government of any trouble in the meantime, for during the investigation he died. What I want to impress on the Senate is this: there is a provision upon the statute-book to reach the cases which, it has been intimated, exist at the present time in the county court, to remove and superannuate a judge who is not capable of performing his duty. The only answer made to that is, that it is an extremely delicate thing to take action against any man who has been overtaken with infirmity, whether mental or physical; but I do not see why, under such circumstances, the government should hesitate a moment, in the interest of the country and the courts, and litigants, to issue a commission at once—it would be no reflection on the government—instead of taking the extreme step of removing every judge by special Act, who has been appointed for life, during good behaviour, simply in order to get rid of four or five who, they say, are unable to fulfil their duty? I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether the position of a Superior Court judge is not of infinately more importance to litigants than a county court judge? I know there is not the same amount of travelling to be done, but the questions with which a county court judge has to deal, are not of that importance which a Superior Court judge has to deal with and decide. If that be the case, then this bill should apply to all judges, and not to a certain class of judges. Like my hon. friend who moved the amendment, I am oppossed in toto to the principle. It may do for future appointments, but it should not apply to men who are as capable, physically and mentally, to perform their duty to-day as they ever were. A gentleman, my senior, waited on me to-day, who is just as vigorous and active as I am, if not more so. Perhaps, on account of my age, I may be considered incapable to fill the position I do, but I have vanity enough to consider that I can perform all the duties pertaining to my position in life, and so can that man. Another gentleman was here from New Brunswick to-day. He has passed the proposed age limit, but he is vigorous, physically, mentally, and in possession of all his faculties. As long as the mental and physical capacity are retained, age is not a bar to administering justice. Long experience on the bench, places a man in a much better position to give judgment and to deal with intricate and important questions than a younger man who has not had the experience. If age debars a county court judge from sitting on the bench, why should it not also apply to judges of the Superior Court? Take the late Chief Justice Haggerty as an illustration. Until he retired a few years ago, nobody could say that he was mentally or physically unfit for the position he held. Not long ago a Toronto judge was promoted from being a puisne judge to be chief justice, though he was about eighty years of age. He is alive to-day and capable of discharging his duties. Yet the same men who promoted a man eighty years old, from a lower to a higher position, imposing more responsibility on him and more labour, now come down to parliament and say that a judge who has attained the age of seventy-five years must retire from the bench.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—When he has completed seventy-five years.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If a judge accepts a position with that law upon the statute-book, then he knows when he accepts it that he is removed by statute at the end of his seventy-fifth year. In such a case the bargain is a fair one. If he does not like the position with that condition attached, he need not accept it. But the man who has been appointed for life, while capable of doing his work—because I have already pointed out means have been provided for removing an incapable man—he should not be interferred with, and I hope my hon. friend will consent to the amendment which has been proposed; and he can make any provision he likes for those who desire to retire. That an injustice is likely to be done in this respect is evident by the fact that the premier himself, feeling that an injustice was to be done to these judges, made a proposition in the House of Commons, in the interests, I understood him to say, of the judiciary and the bench——

Hon. Mr. POWER—Who made the proposition?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The premier.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The present premier?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, the present premier. It was only the other day. I have not said yet what the proposition was. As an evidence that the premier himself believed that the passage of this Act would be a hardship upon the gentlemen to whom I have referred, he gave notice of a motion to retire them upon full pay. If that had carried, the objection which I have to this measure and the objection which the hon. senator from Barrie has made, would not exist. If a man is incapable of performing his duties, it would be easy to issue a commission and superannuate him on two-thirds salary; but the proposition of the premier was to give him the full salary during the remainder of his life. I suppose the opposition was too great in the House of Commons, because, for some reason or other, the premier dropped the notice, and we have the bill as it is now before us. These are my views upon this question, and they are formed from a constitutional standpoint. My views as to the tenure upon which all officers of this character hold their positions, under the British constitution, and under our system of government, are in accord with the views of the hon. gentleman from Barrie, and knowing the kindness of heart of the hon. Minister of Justice, if he is not driven into a position by his colleagues, I am sure he would like to retire them upon full allowance, or allow them to live on in the positions they hold until they become incapable of performing their duties, and when they are incapable, to take advantage of the law as it stands upon the statute-book to-day and put them on the superannuation list.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Before the Minister of Justice closes this debate on the amendment, I should like to say a few words. The hon. gentleman asked why the judges of the Superior Courts were not treated in the same way as county court judges. I think I heard the hon. Minister of Justice inform the hon. gentleman last night that under the British North America Act parliament had not the right to interfere with the tenure of office of the judges of the Superior Court.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I said that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—And as to the Supreme Court the hon. Minister of Justice did not express an opinion. Section 99 of the British North America Act says:

> The judges of the Superior Courts shall hold office during good behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on address of the Senate and House of Commons.

And then section 101 says:

> The parliament of Canada may, notwithstanding anything in this Act, from time to time provide for the constitution, maintenance and organization of the general Court of Appeal for Canada and for the establishment of any additional ports for the better administration of the laws of Canada.

I do not undertake to express any very strong opinion on the matter, but I should suppose that if the judges of the Superior Court shold office during good behaviour, then a fortiori, the judges of the highest court, the Supreme Court, would, under this Act, hold office during good behaviour. The proper way, then, in order to put parliament in a position to deal with the judges of the Superior Courts and with the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, would be an address from both Houses of parliament, asking to have the British North America Act amended in the direction desired. If an address of that kind were to go to England, and it was made to appear that the judges with whom this parliament had power to deal had not been dealt with in the same direction, it would probably render it a little more difficult to secure the necessary legislation in England. I have not, myself, any interest, either personally or otherwise I may say—that is, material interest—in the measure before the House, or in any other measure concerning judges. But I must express my gratification at the fact that the government have introduced this measure. For years the necessity for some measure of this kind has been felt, and the hon. gentleman from Barrie (Mr. Gowan) has practically admitted himself that some measure of the kind was necessary. Now, what sort of measure should it be? The hon. gentleman admitted, and we all know that it is the case, that a man whose faculties begin to fail through old age hardly ever realizes the fact himself. Then the object should be to fix some age at which, at any rate, nineteen people out of twenty cease to be at their best, and I do not think any one complains that the age of seventy-five is too low.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Some times it happens at the age of 50.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Some times it does. But take the average well preserved man, such as a county court judge generally is, and at 75 he is not, as a rule, up to his work. His work is not merely intellectual, but physical as well. He has to travel, and sit in court, and at least 19 men out of 20 are not up to their work at 75 years of age. It seems to me that the course proposed by this bill is the least objectionable possible way of dealing with the matter. The government have nothing to do with the removal of the judge. They cannot offer him any inducement to retire, and they cannot offer him any inducement to remain. It is the annus domini that gets him off the bench. There is nothing to affect in the slightest degree the judge's independence. I think the hon. gentleman from Barrie, in the course of his speech, if I may be excused for referring to a speech of yesterday, said that this measure opened the door to affect the independence of the judges. The hon. gentleman did not indicate how it could. The government cannot add a month to the judge's age or take it off, and when the year comes round he goes off. It is very well known that when the late Sir John Thompson was Minister of Justice he proposed to introduce a measure for the purpose of retiring certain judges from the bench. I do not mean to say that his measure was pointed at any particular judges, but he did propose to introduce a measure for the purpose of getting off the bench judges who had outlived their usefulness.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He did introduce a measure and passed it, and that is the one that gives the power to the administration of the day to remove a judge who is no longer capable.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That law is older than confederation.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I remember there was a good deal of discussion amongst the lawyers in the two Houses at the time, and the age which Sir John Thompson proposed to fix in his measure was seventy. He proposed to take power to the government to retire any judge of seventy years whom they chose, and to retire him on full pay.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think he made any such proposition. The question was discussed over and over again, but no decision of that kind was arrived at.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is the decision the members of the profession were given to understand was in contemplation. In the first place, there are a great many more men who are mentally and physically vigorous at seventy than there are at seventy-five. It would have meant the removal of a very large number of judges from the bench : that is, if the government removed every judge who had attained the age of seventy. And then, again, that measure would have given the government an undue influence over the bench, because the government would be in a position to go to a judge who had attained the age of seventy and offer him his full salary as a retiring allowance. This measure does not give the government any influence whatever over the judges. It brings about the desired result, that gentlemen who have ceased to be at their best shall cease to be judges, without any interference on the part of the government. The hon. gentleman wanted to know why the government could not now take the steps that are authorized. As the Minister of Justice said, it is a very delicate and awkward thing, and hon. gentlemen will see that a commission has to be appointed, and that is a very roundabout and unsatisfactory way of getting at the facts.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—It is the legal way.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is the legal way, and this bill proposes to make a very much shorter way legal.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—Cutting off the heads of the judges.

Hon. Mr. POWER—When a judge gets to be 75 years of age, he cannot complain that he has been prematurely cut off. That just reminds me, after all, that there is a divinity that hedges a king, or there used to be, and it seems to me that the divinity of a king is nothing compared with the divinity which hedges a judge. Take people in the civil service, any man in the civil service, no matter how high up he may be or how able he may be, may be retired at any time after sixty years of age on what ever allowance the statute entitles him to.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not quite so young as that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think it is sixty.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I thought it was sixty-five.

Hon. Mr. POWER—And in England the age is about the same ; and military men, no matter how eminent or able, are liable to be retired at a comparatively early age. I do not see any reason, because a man happens to be a judge and happens to take to law instead of the civil service or the army, why it should be an outrage to retire him at 75 ; and the plea made by the learned judge on behalf of his colleagues, not on behalf of himself in any way, that it is a breach of faith would apply to the statutes which have been made shortening, the terms of the military officers of England.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—The military officers in England at the age of 45 receive a very handsome pension for life.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The judge gets two-thirds of his salary, which is a handsome pension. The judge holds office according to the law of the time being. The amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Barrie simply means that this enactment would be of no value whatever, because if the law is to apply only to the judges who are to be appointed hereafter, it will probably not come into operation in any case for the next 20 years, and there would be no object in dealing with the matter at all. The section of the Act reads :

> Every judge of a county court in any of the provinces of Canada shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, hold office during good behaviour, and his residence in the county or counties in which the court is established.

Parliament did not give up the right to amend that section if it saw fit. The second subsection says :

> A judge of a county court may be removed from office by the Governor in Council for misbehaviour or incapacity or inability to perform his duties properly on account of old age, ill health or any other cause.

The question is whether it is to be presumed that the average judge is not quite up to his work at seventy-five. It is not unreasonable to presume that, and it is a good deal better that the law should so presume than that the government of the day, whoever may happen to be in the administration, should be obliged to issue a commission which may appear, perhaps to be dictated by party feeling, or some other motive. It is a great deal better that the law should fix the matter itself. One of the things which struck me some time ago was this : we get the impression that the judges in England are, as a rule, older than the judges in this country, but I find that that is not the case at all, that it was looked upon as a marvellous thing that Lord Esher should have been allowed to remain on the bench until he was over 80 years of age. We have several judges in this country who are over 80 years of age. The popular feeling was very strong on the subject of Lord Esher's remaining on the bench. He was an exceptionally able judge, and he did retire some year or two ago. That is the difficulty, hon. gentlemen. The present method of issuing a commission is an unpleasant and objectionable one, and it involves expense and puts the commissioner in an awkward position as well as the government and the judge, and I think that to retire a man at the age of 75 with two-thirds of his usual salary is not an unreasonable thing. By the time a gentleman has attained the age of 75 his family is pretty well grown up, and his own tastes are generally quiet and moderate, and a two-thirds salary enables him to get along very comfortably.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Were those the terms upon which he accepted office.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He has not accepted office on any terms. There is no contract.

Hon. Mr. POWER—He simply took office under the law, whatever the law might be. If the law increases his salary he takes the increase. He does not say, "When I was appointed my salary was to be only so much and you are giving me more." If this thing works one way it should work the other. I think we should consider the public interest. The public interest is that the gentlemen who sit on the bench should be in a position to give the country their best work, and have their intellects at their best ; and it is a notorious fact that the man on the bench himself is the last who realizes that his intellect is not at its best. I can recall only one case in my own experience where the judge did have the wisdom and self-denial to retire, and that was the case of the Equity Judge in Halifax, Judge John W. Ritchie who retired when he found that his health was failing, although he was still a very good judge and a good deal better than the average run of judges. Still, when he found that he was not giving the country his intellect at its best, he retired. He stands almost alone, in my experience at any rate, in that respect. So that it just means this, if there is not some method of inducing a gentleman to retire from the bench when he has become too old to remain there, he will not retire, and although under the law steps may be taken to remove him, still those steps are so disagreeable that practically they are not adopted, and I think in the public interest this measure ought to become law, and the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman should not be adopted.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—My hon. friend from Halifax has entirely misconceived my view with regard to this bill. I do not object, I never did object, to the age limit, but I do object and I will object to legislating men out of office. It may be unpleasant, as my hon. friend says ; it may be attended with trouble, although recent experience would show that there is not any great want of pleasure in removing men from office. It may be expensive to do so, but it is the law of the land, and the law shall be complied with, and men that are incapable of holding office ought to be removed from it. I quite agree in that; and I have no objection to fixing a time limit, and down to the twelfth line of the first section I have no objection. I affim the principle that judges hereafter appointed having attained the age of seventy-five shall vacate their office. Had that been the law when the man accepted office, the thing would be entirely just; but here they accepted office upon the guarantee of a patent from the Crown that they should hold office during good behaviour and during ability. Now, that gaurantee is broken if men are removed from office by Act of parliament, without notice, without calling on them to answer, and without assigning any cause. It may be that some, as my hon. friend the leader of the opposition has said, are thoroughly capable. My hon. friend from Halifax has suggested an idea from his reading of the British North America Act, and I think it is almost conclusive against the enactment proposed to remove these men from office. The judges of the county court held office under two distinct commissions. They have a commission at the time of their appointment to hold office during good behaviour. In 1882, under a statute that was passed, they were appointed local judges of the high court, and they are judges of the high court at the present time, and it may be a somewhat serious question if the contention is right in regard to the ordinary judges of the Superior Courts, whether the judges that were appointed under the commission in 1882 do not come within the same. I know what their commissions contain: they are appointed to hold office during good behaviour, and that commission which every county judge holds was issued in 1882. I do not object, as I said before, to the time limit, but I object most decidedly to oust men from office without giving them an opportunity to be heard and without reasons being assigned. It is an unfortunate thing that government and public officials have occasion to do unpleasant things. Judges every day of their lives have to do that which wounds their feelings; but it is their duty and they have to administer the law. I do not see why a government should be in a different position from a judge. There is a law and the government of the country can bring it into play, to enable judges unfit to continue their duties to be removed from office instead of cutting their heads off in this summary way.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that if they were allowed to retire on their full pay he would be willing to agree to the bill with that provision?

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—Certainly; I think it would be an exceedingly graceful thing if the government had offered to do that, and I do not know that I should then have said a word.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say, in reply to the observations made by my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Gowan), that I do not think this clause is open to the objection which he and other hon. gentlemen have pressed. In the first place, it has been decided over and over again that there is no contract between the Crown or the executive government of the country and the officers who are serving it in any capacity, and so there is no contract between the government and the judges that they shall continue in office so that parliament would be debarred from legislation, if it may seem proper, in the matter. If parliament chooses to legislate, then parliament may do so. Let me take a case by way of illustration: formerly there were three high courts in the province of Ontario —the Queen's Bench, the Court of Common Pleas and the Court of Chancery. A measure was introduced consolidating these courts and making one High Court of Justice, and making what was before three distinct courts three divisions of this one court, called the Chancery division, the Queen's Bench division and the Common Pleas division. Now when that law was carried, Mr. Cameron, Chief Justice, I think, at the time, of the Common Pleas, declined to act, holding that the effect of that law was to legislate all the judges out of office who had previously held office in any one of these three courts, and while many of his colleagues did not concur with him in that view, nevertheless the government at the time, of which I think my hon. friend opposite was a member, thought it safe to adopt the course of issuing new commissions to all those judges that had before been judges of these three distinct courts to make them judges of this new court. No one for a moment supposed, assuming Judge Cameron's view to be correct, that if the government had done so, and it had been in the interest of the public that those courts should be abolished, that any one of those judges had a claim of any sort upon the Crown that would prevent the legislature pursuing that course if it believed it to be in the public interest. Supposing at any moment of time it is found that the legal business of the country assumed such a form that the whole system of judicial administration is cumbrous and costly and unsuited to the altered circumstances, and you propose to reform the courts and you establish new judicial organizations, and the effect of your establishment would be such that one-half the number of judges would be quite adequate to discharge the judicial duties of the country, does any one suppose that the government would be morally any more than legally bound to continue all those persons in office because they held judical offices during good behaviour? I do not think so. It may be the duty of the government, they may be under moral obligations to make some provision for those whom they would retire; it would be no doubt the duty of the government to take the best men who had before been on the bench to discharge the duties of judges under the new state of things; but I cannot subscribe to the doctrine that the present condition of things is one that must necessarily continue; and that if it is found that a system is not of advantage and that the administration of the law under it is not wholly satsfactory, you are bound to continue it, because the judges whom you have appointed hold office under the commissions in effect during good behaviour. You have not recognized that rule with regard to any other class of officials. You are entitled to retire the ordinary civil servants at the age of sixty, that is sixteen years less than I have fixed for the age of the judges by this bill. You retire from the army, under imperial statute, men who at the time they enlisted were entitled to continue in the service for a much longer period of time, and no British officer is supposed to set up the contention "when I entered the army persons were entitled to hold the office or rank I now hold until a more advanced age." The question of efficiency is the paramount question. The right of the individual is subordinate to the interest of the public, although the individual man may have claims on the government to generous consideration. I am not disputing that. Nearly everyone who has spoken to-night has spoken of the age of 75. Under this bill it is a completion of the 75th year, so that it is only when a man reaches his 76th birthday that he goes out under the provisions of this bill. My hon. friend from Halifax spoke of one of my predecessors fixing the age limit at 70 years; that is six years shorter, and, further than that, that the parties might be continued in office after that period if the government thought proper; that is that there was a power proposed to be taken to retire parties from office. Now the objection to that proposal would be that the judge would stand in the same position as those who hold office during pleasure. He would be dependent on the Crown from the time he arrived at the age at which he could be retired. I think that would have been very objectionable. I thought it was very objectionable when I discussed this subject with certain parties, and I felt that the government, in fixing an age limit, ought to fix an absolute period; that there ought to be no opportunity of any arrangement between the judge and the government that he should be continued for a longer period of time. It does seem to me—although I am happy to say that many judges have lived to a longer period—that 76 years is a ripe old age, and the man who discharges his duties as a judge from the time of his appointment till he arrives at the 76th year of his age has done important service to the state if he has discharged his duty well.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—He ought to have a full pension to retire.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend says he ought to have a full pension to retire. I am not expressing any opinion different from that which he has expressed in the matter, but I am a member of a House where that question as to the retiring allowance is not to be settled.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We can only talk about it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes we can only talk about it—and I am not expressing any dissent from the opinion which my hon. friend from York has expressed. It is said here that the law provides a system by which the judges who are unfit for service can be retired. I say it is not simply a question that it is a disagreeable duty to discharge to inquire into the fitness or unfitness of a judge in order to get rid of him; that is not the only question. If I should invite my hon. friend opposite out here on the hill this evening after sunset and ask him to name the instant of time when day ceased and when night had come, I think he would have found a good deal of difficulty to decide. He can say at eight o'clock "the day is done" and before seven that "the day exists still;" but between those two periods there would be a great difficulty in settling that question, and my hon. friend knows that a judge, from physical infirmities or from a blunting—I will not say a decay—of his intellectual powers may be less fit to discharge his duties than he was at an earlier period, and it may be that it is in the public interest that he should retire; and if you were to appoint a commission to inquire into his fitness, unless it was perfectly clear that he was unfit, the commissioners could not make a report that the judge ought to be retired and that he was unfit for his duties. It seems to me that it is a very much better way to do as we propose by this bill, to say that when a man has completed his 75th year, when he arrived at the border line which separates seventy-five from seventy-six he shall cease to hold the office of county judge. It is true that there are a few men, one here and there, who beyond that period of time might fairly well discharge their duties. But there are a great many men who never reach that age, and there are a great many who are disposed to retire; and so the number of persons who are fit for the discharge of judicial duties who would be disqualified under the provisions of this bill, are very few indeed. I believe the bill on the whole will confer on the public a more substantial service than can be secured by any other method that you can devise. I am of opinion that if we were to fix an earlier period, say at the age of seventy, there would be greater hardships, a greater number of persons who would be put off the bench who would be qualified to continue on. So I felt it my duty to fix this age just as high as it was possible to fix it, with due regard to the public interest. I have nothing further to say in defence of this provision. I would be greatly pleased if those who control the public moneys of this country could have seen their way to allow these men to retire on full pay. This, however, must be borne in mind that many men between seventy-six and eighty under the law, even as it is, will retire the few who reach the line of seventy-six and go on towards eighty will be diminished before the year four score is reached, and it is extremely questionable whether any one ought to remain upon the bench under any circumstances beyond that period of life. I have myself watched gentlemen in court discharging duties who were very aged men and for the first hour or two in the morning their intellects were seemingly as bright as ever, and they discharged their duties fairly well, but before the day was over, long before it was over, they were wearied and worn out and unable to follow closely the arguments addressed to them by counsel; and when you continue that proceeding from day to day, it is perfectly obvious that long before a session is over, if there is much business to perform, the suitors must suffer at the hands of a very old judge, no matter how high his character or how good his intentions. My hon. friend has spoken about the condition of the Superior Court judges of the High Court of Justice; I am expressing no opinion, but I think you may fairly include High Court judges since all judges are appointed by the Dominion—those appointed to the courts of Canada as well as those appointed to the courts of the provinces. But look at a judge of the Superior Court going on circuit. He only holds court at a few large centres of population. He can find comfortable quarters in a well furnished hotel. He is subject to no particular exposure and to no great discomfort. That is not the position of the county judge, who, perhaps, has to go forty or fifty, and I know in some cases one hundred miles, otherwise than by rail, with his horse and carriage, stopping in a little wayside inn with very few of the comforts that he enjoyed at home, driving out in a stormy season. I say he is subject to very much greater hardship than a judge of the superior court, and therefore he requires to possess greater physical vigour than such a judge. In the province of Ontario, if I remember rightly, the county court judges disposed of 60,000 division court suits, and in the disposition of those 60,000 suits they had a great many miles to travel and were subjected to very great exposure, and when I propose by this bill to fix the age at the completion of the seventy-fifth year and to apply that to those who are already upon the bench, I think I am adopting that course that is best in the public interest. To say that you should confine the limit of age to future appointments would be, in a great measure, to defeat the bill. It would delay the application of a principle the general application of which is necessary in order to re-establish, in some cases, the efficiency of the courts. Whether any further rule will be necessary, such as the grouping of several counties into one district and putting county court judges on circuit, or enlarging their civil jurisdiction in order to the attainment of high efficiency, and to keep the legal knowledge of the judge from rusting by the want of use, are questions for the local government to consider under the constitution of the court. What we have to do is to consider the qualification of the persons whom we are called upon to appoint to these positions, and the conditions necessary for the maintenance of the court efficiency so far as the personality of the judge affects that efficiency. That I am endeavouring to do by this bill, first by putting the judges, so far as the salaries of junior judges are concerned, upon a fairer footing than they stood before, and protecting the public interest by fixing the time limit when a judge shall retire.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I am glad to know that, after a long time, this government are coming down to the tender point in their feelings. They are trying to get this parliament to do that which they have been doing the last eighteen or twenty months, only it is with respect to different individuals. They want to establish an Act by which a certain number of gentlemen can be displaced from office, in order to make room for their followers.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The government has, without let or hindrance, kicked out poor men who have been working hard to make a living for their wives and families on salaries of $400 or $500 a year. Their conduct has heen perfectly outrageous and if they had the same courage to turn out men in higher positions they would do it. I say this is a most outrageous arrangement altogether. Since the government have been in power they have turned out poor men, regardless of how they were making a living for themselves and their families—men who had discharged their duties in a competent manner. I suppose the hon. gentleman has a lot of followers for whom he has no positions, and is taking this means to make room for them. With regard to superannuation, the people of this country are not prepared to superannuate judges when they are fit to do their duty. Half of the lawyers of the country are begging and coaxing the government to give them these positions. Why should these judges be superannuated at an age when they are able to do the work? I hold it is wrong, and I am going to vote against it. A lawyer seeks to get a position, and after he has served a while you let him retire on a good superannuation allowance. I say the system is wrong and rotten to the core, particularly when you are willing to displace competent men who can do the work. I have seen men 50 years of age who were not able to discharge the duties of an office. You have the power to appoint a commission and turn these men out. That is rather too fine a thing for the government to do. They simply kick men out. Why did they not kick the judges out? They have the power now to appoint a commission and that is a very proper thing to do. If a man is not fit to fill a position, that is the genteel and delicate way of getting at him. Appoint a commission and inquire into the matter, and if he is not able to discharge the duties of his office, the whole country will uphold you in having him removed, but to undertake to fix an age limit and turn good men out who had received the appointment on the expectation they would hold it as long as they had strength and ability to fill it. I consider that of all the measures brought down this session, this is the one that I could vote against with a clear conscience. At this late hour I do not desire to give all the details of the reasons why I oppose that feature of the bill. I consider it decidedly wrong, and the country will condemn the government for undertaking to pass a bill to turn out good men which they have no right to do.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I entirely concur with the principle of the bill in fixing a time limit during which judges shall hold office. The bill upon the whole is an exceedingly good one, and I should like very much indeed to see it passed. The only difficulty is in respect to the objection raised by the hon. gentleman from Barrie (Mr. Gowan) and it does seem to me a hardship that men who are discharging their duty with ability and advantage to the country, should by an enactment of this kind, be legislated out of office, and obliged to retire, not upon their full pension, but upon the pension prescribed by this Act. I am quite sure it would be very much for the advantage of the country that the time limit should be 75 years of age, because although some men are more active both mentally and bodily at 70 or 75 than others at 60 or 65, yet there can be no question about it, when a man reaches that age —and I may speak from my own experience —although he may enjoy fair vigour of body and mind he is perfectly conscious that he is not able to go through the same amount of work as he could 20 years previously. But the hon. Minister of Justice, as I understood him, said that at present there are likely to be comparatively very few men on the bench who reach this time limit, and there would, therefore, be very few who would be affected injuriously by the enactment of this bill. I venture to make the suggestion to him, if there are so very few of the present incumbents who would be likely to reach this age, is it worth while to pass an enactment of this kind which would be retrospective when, after all, as far as the country is concerned, there would be very little gained by it? Because those affected by it are few, and in that way comparatively very little harm would flow from it, while on the other hand if the 75 year limit is to apply at once, injustice would be done to those who in good faith accepted the commission as one which they could hold as long as they could discharge the duties of their office. I feel very strongly that an enactment of this kind for the future is far preferable to any commission or inquiry into the state of a judge's faculties, either mental or physical. That must always be a very delicate proceeding and one which we should desire to avoid, if possible. Therefore, for that reason, the time limit of seventy-five is far better, but I again venture to suggest whether, in view of there being comparatively few who would reach the age at which by this bill, they would be obliged to leave the bench, would it be worth while to inflict a great hardship upon men who are perfectly able to discharge their duties and compel them, under this legislation, to retire and accept the retiring pension.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I feel very strongly that we should not interfere with vested rights. I contend that these men accepted their positions as judges in the past, although there was no written agreement between them and the government, under an implied understanding that they should continue in office so long as they were capable of performing their duties. If such is the case, it is not fair that they should be displaced by the present bill, especially when we know that they have been underpaid in the past. It has been almost impossible for the county court judges to save anything from the pittance allowed them from time to time during their tenure of office. I am pleased to find that a change has been made in that respect by this bill; but I think, under the circumstances, the government should allow a judge to continue on the bench as long as possible, in order that he may be able to reap some of the advantage in the way of saving something for the future sustenance of his family. As hon. gentlemen all know a county court judge receiving $2,000 a year, having a family and a certain position to maintain, it is utterly impossible for him to save a dollar. I know that there are judges receiving $2,000 a year whose annual expenditure amounts to more than that, and if they had not private means it would be utterly impossible for them to support their families. So that under all the circumstances, they are entitled to every consideration at the hands of the government. As long as a judge performs his duties satifactorily to the country and to the Minister of Justice, I do not think he ought to be deprived of his position; but if there was any cause for his removal I do not care whether it is done by commission or otherwise, I would have no hesitation in telling him "you must retire from that office because you are not fit for it." It is an imperative duty we owe to the country to see that these duties are honestly and properly performed. There should be no sentimental idea to favour this man or that man. Have we heard of any dissatisfaction with the judges of this country? There may be, but I do not know of any and I have never heard of it. I believe the country will sustain the House in showing every disposition to favour faithful servants of the country in every possible way. If this legislation is good for the county court judges, why is it not good for other judges? There may be some legal difficulty in carrying it out, but the principle should apply all through. I have known something about the judicial affairs of the country for years. I know in this county our county court judges do a great deal. In the past they had to travel over rough roads when we had not a railroad. I have been some thirty hours going from Bytown to Prescott when there were no houses of any kind. We had a great deal of difficulty to contend with. It is much better at the present time, but the cost of living has increased very much of late years. When I first came here I could buy a cord of wood for one dollar, and a pound of butter for six pence. Now that the country has prospered and prices have increased, the country must be willing to pay these men provided they discharge their duties satisfactorily. I have never heard a man raise his voice against paying the public men according to their worth, while they are able to discharge their duty, and when they are not able to do that, I would have no compunction in telling them "you are not able to perform your duties and I must put some one else in your place." I believe this time limit is all right, but it should merely apply to the future appointments. If that is agreed to, there will be no further difficulty. We are all in favour of the remainder of the bill, but we desire to render substantial justice to every party concerned, whether it be the high court judges or county court judges. I believe it is the intention of the House to mete out justice to every man who has been doing service to the country.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I wish to point out the fact that if any judge becomes incapacitated before he arrives at the age of seventy-six, and you wish to get rid of him, you must proceed under the statute. I do not see why there should be any delicacy in dealing with a man of seventy-six years of age, as you would be compelled to deal with a man of seventy years of age who was shown to be unfit for the bench; so that the government is only relieving itself of the responsibility of proceeding against a judge who is incapable until he has reached that age.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—It is well that I, as the seconder of this motion, should express my full concurrence in the views expressed by the hon. gentleman from Barrie. We have heard the remarks of the hon. Minister of Justice and the hon. gentleman from Halifax. The larger proportion of all they addressed to us was upon points upon which no difference of opinion exists in the House. The general feeling is that the intention of the bill is good, and that it is a wise thing that a time limit should be established, but very little has been said to meet what is really the essential point in the amendment of my hon. friend from Barrie, and that is, the dealing with the cases of judges now holding offices, who are fully competent, and are discharging their duties satisfactorily to the public generally—cutting them off from their position and larger salary, and proposing to reduce it, when there is really no necessity for it being done, as far as the public is concerned. I can easily appreciate the desire of the minister to hand over to parliament what might be a disagreeable duty, or a duty which one would rather shrink from, of dealing with these cases. But I fail to see the great difference between the delicacy they feel in appointing a commission in any certain case and, without a commission, cutting off from their positions judges who are well qualified to discharge the duties they are performing. I think, perhaps, of the two, that should cause a greater feeling of delicacy, but they do not seem to have any delicacy in that respect. While I am on my feet, I may remark that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, for all he is such an efficient scholar, does not correctly state the age limit. Either he or I must be wrong, because I consider when a child is twelve months old he is one year old, and when a man has reached his seventy-fifth birthday he is seventy-five years old, and the hon. Minister of Justice is contending that he must reach his seventy-sixth birthday before he has completed seventy-five years. According to the ordinary acceptance of the term when a man reaches his seventy-fifth birthday he is seventy-five years old. I merely wish to express my cordial concurrence in the views of hon. gentlemen who consider that legislation such as the government propose under this clause of the bill is doing a gross injustice.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I am quite satisfied that the patience of the committee is pretty well exhausted, and the subject itself is exhausted by the long discussion, but I wish to remark that I regret that the hon. Minister of Justice has not seen his way clear to accept the very reasonable and proper amendment of the hon. gentleman from Barrie. While I agree with what has been said by the hon. minister in reference to the wisdom of fixing a time limit for the occupancy of the bench by the judges, I think that any restriction of that kind should not have a retroactive operation, but that it should only apply to appointments in the future. Now, it cannot be denied that every judge on the bench at the present time accepted his office with the understanding that he was to hold it during good behaviour, and that it was an appointment for life. He had no expectation that the law would step in and limit the period of his tenure, not even the reasonable period mentioned in the bill. He had no reason to anticipate anything of that kind. There are many instances where at the age of 75 men are just as qualified to discharge the duties of a judge as at the age of 50. Within a day or two I myself had the pleasure of coming in contact with a county judge who told me he would come under the operation of this bill, a man whom I took to be 20 years younger than he told me he was. Meeting him in the streets, or in a public building, I should not have thought that he was over 55 or 60 years. He was bright and physically active, and just as competent, I am satisfied, to discharge his duties to-day as he was twenty years ago. It is a great hardship to put a man like that off the bench. I admit with the Minister of Justice that this may be an exceptional case, but a provision to effect the judiciary should not be retroactive; we should only make it applicable to future appointments. It might be different if we had not a law on the statute-book which enables the government to deal with every case where a judge ought to be removed, that comes within their knowledge. They have a complete provision by law to remove a county judge for incapacity, or old age, or any other cause where it would be desirable in the public interest. In reference to the county court judges, they have, I repeat, that power, and, having it, I do not think it is right now to pass a bill which would affect the judges who are at the present time occupying seats upon the bench, who accepted office for life, and to whom the faith of the country is plighted; and I would really look upon it as a breach of contract on the part of the country with the judiciary if this retroactive legislation were put on the statute-book. I do not wish to occupy the time of the House, but I desire to express my views as strongly agreeing with those enunciated here to-night and last night by the hon. member for Barrie, and I am sorry that the hon. Minister of Justice cannot accept the amendment proposed by that hon. member.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I have listened with very great interest and attention to the debate upon this question, because when I first looked at the bill my impressions were unfavourable—I felt it was a bill I could not support. After listening to the arguments which have been addressed to the House, I feel that if the principle of this bill is admitted, as I believe it is admitted by all the hon. gentlemen who have addressed the House, that it is desirable in any case to fix an age limit, the government should be supported in the provision they have made for fixing an age limit in this bill. The fact was pointed out by one hon. gentleman who addressed the House—I think the hon. member for Halifax and I think the Minister of Justice alluded to it—that if the amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for Barrie is adopted, it really renders this bill inoperative for a long time to come. This amendment applies to all the persons at present occupying positions as judges of the county courts throughout the Dominion, and if this bill only applies to future appointments, it will only apply to those appointed to succeed the present judges, and will only come into operation after those judges reach the age of seventy-five years. That would place the operation of this bill twenty or twenty-five years in the future. A good deal has been said with regard to the provisions which the present law contains as to removing judges when they become incompetent to discharge their duties by reason of old age. Well, if those provisions are adequate, if there is no good reason why the government should not avail themselves of the provisions which the present law contains to remove a judge under these circumstances, there is no reason for fixing an age limit at all. If these means of removing the judges can be put in operation, and that mode of dealing with this question is satisfactory, there is no necessity for this clause in the bill at all; and I admit that that was the objection which I first had to the bill. I thought that fixing an age limit was an objectionable mode of proceeding, and it would be better to have some other means of accomplishing this end. But if I was right in that, the objection would stand against the first subsection of the bill and not against the second subsection. The other argument that has been used against this bill is that there is an agreement, or contract, between the judges of the courts who have been appointed, and the government of the day, and that a measure like this is a breach of the contract existing between those who occupy these positions at the present time. If I understand this question right, the admission that it is proper to fix an age limit at all implies a further admission that any gentleman occupying a judicial position, who has reached the age of seventy-five years should, if he regarded the public interest rather than his own interest, resign; otherwise I do not see how we are justified in fixing seventy-five years as an age limit when we call upon the judges to resign whether they wish to or not. The very fact of admitting that it is right to fix an age limit in the case of judges at seventy-five years implies the further supposition, that those judges should at that time in the public interest resign. If we admit that, at the age of seventy-five years, taking the judges all round, they should, in the public interest, resign, they would, under the existing legislation, only be entitled to the two-thirds salary superannuation, and this bill, while it gives them no additional amount, places them in no worse condition than if they resigned and received their superannuation. I speak with a little hesitancy as it is a subject I am not much acquainted with, and I have gathered my ideas only as the discussion went on. Taking the view that I have just mentioned, my vote shall be in favour of the bill as it stands.

The amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Clause three now will have to come out. The intention was that the Act should come into operation on the first of October with regard to the retirement of the judges, and it left them all in possession of their holidays, but that is not now required.

The clause was struck out.

On clause 3.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Does this clause increase the number of judges in the province of Quebec?

Hon. Mr. BAKER—The effect of this clause is to provide a salary for one additional judge for the district of St. Francis, and it has the further effect of doing tardy justice to one of the judges of the Superior Court, who was appointed under the former Liberal administration, who was a member of the House of Commons at the time of his appointment, but who ceased instantly on his appointment to be a politician, and has discharged the duties of his judicial office in the most exemplary manner. I refer to the Hon. Mr. Justice Taschereau. He is assigned to the district of Terrebonne, but he resides in Montreal, and under the existing law his salary has been $1,000 less than his colleagues who reside in the city receive. He has been labouring for years under a disadvantage amounting to a positive injustice, and I am sure the members of the profession in the province of Quebec will commend the government in the highest possible manner in doing this tardy justice to Mr. Justice Taschereau. While I am on my feet I may observe that while the government is to be commended in what it has done in submitting this bill to parliament, it might have gone further and readjusted the salaries of the Superior Court judges. That is a question that every government has hesitation in approaching. There is a popular clamour in the country against the salaries of the judges; and there has been a disposition in times past—and I see that the present government is affected by the same disposition—to withhold justice which is due to the judiciary of the country.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 9.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—This refers to the travelling expenses of judges which has been the subject of discussion before, and I am aware, from communications that I have had with the Department of Justice, that there is a determination now on the part of the Minister of Justice to take the matter in hand and the salutary provision of this section will enable the Department of Justice to see that the law is not infringed on. It is not desirable to discuss in parliament the relations of the judiciary to the department which has control of the payment authorized under the statue, but it is impossible to conceal from ourselves the fact that in times past there has been some little irregularity in connection with it, and I am very proud and happy to know and believe that the Department of Justice is determined now to enforce the provisions of this clause 9, and that if the provisions of this clause are enforced in the future, there will be no complaint on that score. I am very happy to commend the Minister of Justice for the care which has been shown in the preparation of these provisions, and I only hope that they will be vigorously put in operation.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 10.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I just wish to point out in reference to this clause that the words "supreme court" are used. When the Yukon government bill was under consideration these words were changed to "territorial court."

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, we had better change the words to "territorial court."

The clause was amended and adopted.

Hon. Mr. DEVER, from the committee, reported the bill as amended.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—The latter clause of this bill has been rushed through with such haste that I have not had an opportunity to make one or two remarks that I wished to make on one particular paragraph of the bill relating to Prince Edward Island. I see in that paragraph that there has been a change in the salary of the judges in that province. The salary of the judge of one court has been raised, I think, from $2,400. That may be considered a very material increase, but why that increase should take place for the judge of one particular county, and the salaries of the judges of the other counties should remain the same as before, I cannot understand. I believe there is just as much business required to be done, and as many intricate cases to be tried in the other counties, as there are in the county in which the salary of the judge has been raised.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER, from the committee, reported the bill with an amendment, which was concurred in.

The bill was then read a third time and passed.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (160) "An Act respecting the North western and Northern and North-eastern boundaries of the province of Quebec."—(Hon. Mr. Mills).

Bill (99) "An Act to incorporate the Lake Champlain and St. Lawrence Ship Canal."—(Hon. Mr. Clemow).

THE FRANCHISE BILL.

RETURNED FROM THE COMMONS.

The following message was received from the House of Commons :—

HOUSE OF COMMONS,
THURSDAY, 9th June, 1898.

Resolved, That a Message be sent to the Senate, to inform their Honours that this House had agreed to the first, third, sixth and twelfth of their amendments to the Bill No. 16, intituled : "An Act to amend the Electoral Franchise Act, and to further amend the Dominion Elections Act ;" and that they have disagreed to the second, fourth, fifth, seventh, eight, ninth, tenth and eleventh of their amendments for the following reasons :—

Because the amendments made by the Honourable the Senate to the bill, excepting from its operation the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba and providing for a special revision of the voters' lists in those provinces for elections to this House, is inconsistent with and subversive of the general principle of the bill.

That the procedure proposed by the Honourable the Senate for securing the revision of such lists, under the authority of this parliament, is wholly inadequate, and cannot be rendered effective without creating complicated and costly machinery incompatible with the object of the bill.

That the amendments, therefore, in effect provide for the continuation in the provinces named of the present unwieldy and expensive system of creating special voters' lists for Dominion elections.

That the passage of the amendment by the Senate after its rejection by the House of Commons is inconsistent with the undoubted right and privilege of this House to determine the principles of the franchise under which its members are elected, and is the more unwarranted in that the country has emphatically pronounced in favour of the principle of the bill.

Ordered, That the Clerk of the House do carry the said Message to the Senate.

Attest,

JNO. GEO. BOURINOT,
Clerk of the Commons.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the said message be taken into consideration to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would suggest that it be taken up at the second session to-morrow, because there are two committees meeting to-morrow, the Drummond County Railway Committee and the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, and our whole time will be occupied to-morrow morning. We will scarcely have time to consider the reasons given by the House of Commons, which I must confess, are somewhat of an extraordinary character, and therefore we ought to have a least an hour to consider them. I take it for granted, from casually hearing them read, that they lay down a very important constitutional doctrine, to which I think this Senate are not prepared to assent. If the doctrine laid down be correct, then, as the organ of the party opposite advocates, the sooner the Senate is abolished the better.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is discussing the amendments.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am giving a reason why I want a little longer time to consider the reasons given by the House of Commons. If the hon. gentleman had acquiesced at once in the suggestion I made for a little longer time, probably I might have been relieved of the necessity of giving a reason why I made the suggestion. I am not departing from the strict rules of parliamentary procedure, nor am I violating any rule of order in giving a reason for the suggestion which I make, and, therefore, I do not know that I was subject to the indirect chastisement of the hon. minister for having made the remarks I did.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman is very much hurt. I hope we will be through with our work to-morrow night. I do not know, but my impression is that there is very little on the paper to-morrow for three o'clock, and surely this bill can go on the list, and if we do not reach it before six o'clock, it will stand for the evening sitting, but if we have very little business beyond the address to their Excellencies, and the few measures that have come down to-day, it will be hardly worth our while to meet at three o'clock to-morrow for an hour's work and then adjourn till eight. I think my hon. friend is pretty familiar with everything that is contained in those objections. The most of them were pretty well thrashed out during the time the bill was before us for discussion, and I have no doubt he will be as well prepared as my hon. friend beside me and myself will be to consider these reasons for dissenting from the amendments proposed in this House, and I think my hon. friend will not object to have this bill on the paper for to-morrow afternoon, and if we do not reach it till the evening, no harm will be done.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no objection that the hon. gentleman's motion should be on the paper for to-morrow afternoon, with the distinct understanding, if we are not prepared to go on with it, that it will be laid over till the evening session, and I may also inform the hon. gentleman that I do not think the business of the House will be through to-morrow. I have already indicated what course I intend to pursue with reference to the Plebiscite Bill, and I hope to be able to tell him to-morrow what we propose to do. I can assure him that until we have decided upon that question, that the business of this House will not be completed, whether it be Saturday, Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday. I am speaking for myself individually, but if the members of the House agree with me, we intend to place that Plebiscite Bill in such a position, that if the government is determined to resist the amendments which have been made to the Franchise Bill, the Plebiscite Bill should be so amended as to enable the government to submit the prohibition question to the people in any event. The plebiscite, I hold, is not contingent upon the passing of the Franchise Bill, and I am sure my hon. friend—and more particularly the hon. Secretary of State beside him—is extremely anxious, as we all are, that the opinions of the electors of this Dominion shall be ascertained upon a very important question, and it would be a great calamity to have another year's excitement and agitation over a question, which the sooner it is settled the better.

A SATURDAY'S SESSION.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I give notice that to-morrow I shall move that when the House adjourns, it do stand adjourned till Saturday at 11 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice. In view of the prohibition issue being submitted to the people, can the hon. minister tell us if a copy of the very interesting document collected by the prohibition commission appointed by the late government will be distributed to each of the electors before they are called upon to vote on the question? It has cost hundreds of thousands of dollars, and it seems to me we should be well informed on that subject.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I will say to my hon. friend that, if the life of man were as it were before the flood, we might print a cheap edition of that work and circulate it among the electors; but as it would require more than 12 months to read it, and the life of man is now but three score years and ten, I do not think life is long enough to permit the ordinary elector to master that important document.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I put the question because it seems to me it is a good answer to the contention that we should have the vote taken this year. It seems to me that the gentlemen who have collected all that information at such an immense expense should see at all events, that it reaches the people before they vote on this question.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is quite right. It has already been published, and if he promises to read it before he goes to sleep to-night, I will see that he gets a full copy.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Before I vote?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know how the hon. gentleman will vote. He will vote against it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I shall support the plebiscite, but I am against prohibition.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Friday, 10th June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'Clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

DEATHS OF EMPLOYEES ON CROW'S NEST PASS RAILWAY.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate, copies of all letters, telegrams and other communications exchanged between the Minister of Justice, or any officer of his department, and any person or persons with respect to the deaths, on the twenty-third of January last, of two workmen named respectively Macdonald and Fraser, who had been employed on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway.

He said: As the hon. members of this House know, there has been a good deal of discussion with respect to the deaths of the two men, Macdonald and Fraser, who are mentioned in this motion, and reflections have been cast on the Minister of Justice and his deputy, and, to be frank about it, this motion is made for the purpose of giving the minister an opportunity of making the explanations which are necessary to show what was actually done in the matter.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say, hon. gentlemen, that I do not think it will be in the public interests to bring down the papers at the present moment. But I will make a general statement with regard to this matter, because it seems to me that there is a good deal of misapprehension abroad, and there has been a good deal said that was not warranted. As far as I know, the first communication we had in reference to the subject was the telegram that came to the department from a Dr. Meade, a coroner who had undertaken to hold an inquest, and who had been enjoined from holding that inquest by parties who were interested, some officials connected with the contract of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I may say that they said Dr. Meade was not a proper party to hold the inquest, that he had been the physician for these two unfortunate men, and that he had also been an applicant to the Canadian Pacific Railway for a position as medical adviser upon the work, and he was offended because his services had not been retained.

That, at all events, was the ground upon which they applied to Judge Rouleau to prevent him from undertaking to hold an inquest. I may say, in the first place, that the coroners are not officers of our department; in fact they are not officers of the government of Canada in that territory, but they are parties who hold their office. They are not necessarily connected with the administration of justice at all, as they are ministerial officers whose duties are inquisitorial, and who may inquire into any matter that may subsequently call for legal investigation,

Hon. Mr. POWER—They are appointed by the local governments.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, appointed by the local governments; we have no jurisdiction over them; but when we received this statement from Dr. Meade, our instructions to him were that he had better withdraw from the case and let another coroner be appointed in order that the inquiry might proceed. This he declined to do, and there was therefore nothing for it but to permit him to take his own course and be subjected to the delay which the injunction would impose upon him. That injunction was opposed on behalf of Dr. Meade by a partner of the hon. member from Calgary, who I believe is a very competent lawyer, and he perhaps defended Dr. Meade's attempt to hold an inquest with as much success as perhaps any one whose services could have been retained in that section of the country. The judge heard the case but reserved judgment. After some delay we applied to the judge to give judgment in the case but he did not do so. He was at Edmonton at the time, and said he would not deliver judgment till he returned home and when he did deliver judgment—I think the attempt at the inquest was about 8th February—it was about the 15th April. We applied to our local agent in that country with regard to the case, to get such information as he could for us with a view to further action if further action was necessary, and make inquiry as to the obtaining of another coroner against whom no objection could be had. The reply to us by our agent was that the parties had been ill of diphtheria, that it was a highly contagious disease, and that it would be impossible to get any person to exhume the bodies of these two men to hold an inquest upon them, seeing the character of the disease of which they had died, and it would be impossible to get men who would be willing to sit as a jury. I may say, further, that the department in considering the information in their hands, did not see that it was specially important that there should be an inquest, because there was no controversy as to the disease with which these men were afflicted, nor as to the cause of their death. Where they were taken ill upon the road there does not seem to have been any proper hospital accommodation for the employees of the contractors, and in many cases parties who were taken sick were obliged to remain in the same cars at night with those who were in good health; and the party who undertook to remove them seemed to be under the impression that it was desirable to get them away to some point where they could be specially attended to. The instruction given by the physician on the way was that there was to be no removal of parties from the section in which they were taken ill without the consent of the physician. The physician in this instance was not at home, if I remember rightly. He was away. His consent could not at the moment be obtained, and they were carried through the section into a third section before they were taken to the place of their final destination. The season was cold. The appliance for conveying them was not of the best, and how far a disease, that might have been curable if they had been properly housed and properly cared for in the first instance, was made fatal by this conveyance, I cannot at this moment say; however, when we got the report of our agent, he seemed to be of the opinion that they had been very shamefully treated. He did not see that an inquest would be of any special value under the circumstances, or, in fact, that an inquest could be held. But we did suppose that the commissioners that had been appointed to inquire into the grievances of the people in that district would, in all probability, report specially on this case, and that there might be in that report such further information as would enable us to take action against any parties if it was disclosed that those parties were criminally liable.

That commissionner's report came at a considerably later period, later than we anticipated, and at this moment the department has written to the Department of the Interior for a copy of so much of the report as may relate to the illness and death of those two parties. If that report proves to be a full report when we receive it, such as will warrant us in taking further action, if further action ought to be taken, that action will be taken. If the case is one of which there is not sufficient evidence disclosed by the report of the commissioners to enable us to act, it is the intention of the department at once to appoint a party with authority to make an investigation into the circumstances attending the death of these two men, how they came to be removed, what sort of treatment they were subjected to, who is responsible for their removal, and whether there is any criminal liability attaching to any of the parties connected with the death of these men. I might say that Mr. Oliver called at our department for the purpose of bringing the matter under our attention, and we heard what he had to say, and we also had his concurrence in the course we are taking. We are a long way from the district, and it is sometimes difficult to obtain information. Some complaint has been made because the department did not send a lawyer for the purpose of taking charge of the case before the judge upon the motion for an injunction. I may say this, that we have never deemed it anywhere to be a portion of our duty to watch by persons employed professionally, the proceedings before a coroner's inquest, for in the most majority of cases that is purely a ministerial proceeding, which results in nothing more than establishing a fact of prima facie probability or innocence. The party, if the coroner's jury find against any one connected with the accident or offence of any sort, does not even ministerially terminate the question. The party is taken before a magistrate, and there is a fresh examination, and there is seldom a case in Ontario, where counsel appears either before a coroner or before a magistrate.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Very often, I can tell the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is mistaken.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The county crown attorney makes it a point to be present at every inquest where a party is accused of murder or anything leading up to it, I have been a coroner for 28 years.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend speaks of his experience in his own locality. That is not the general practice, because a coroner's verdict is not one on which any judicial proceedings are based. The ministerial proceedings before a magistrate always intervene between the action of the coroner and the commitment of the party for prosecution.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Perhaps they are there for the fee though.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend speaks about the coroners being there for their fees.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—No, I mean the county attorney.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Well, perhaps so. That may be. The county, in most cases, pays some little attention to proceedings of that sort. Let me read a paragraph from a letter written by Mr. Newcombe to Mr. Oliver :

> I received from Mr. Conybare a telegram which reads as follows :
>
> Meade apparently undisposed to retire, judgment on notice for injunction reserved awaiting judges' decision.
> As the application for the injunction seems to have been argued and is now awaiting decision, would it not be better under the circumstances to await the judgment of the court ?

As the application for injunction seems to have been argued and is now waiting for decision, I may say that Dr. Meade had retained the partner of the hon. gentleman from Calgary, and the case was argued by him, and I believe as well argued as it could have been by any party. But I may say that we have no special interest that Dr. Meade should hold the inquest. We thought he should have been a witness in the case, as the party called in to attend these men, and that some other coroner ought to have been asked to hold the inquest. He was unwilling to retire, and we awaited the result of the action.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—He wanted fees too, I presume.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That may be. We have had some coroners who claimed to have held inquests in the North-west before our time, who put in their bills and who were paid for holding those inquests, and who, it was found, had never any inquests to hold. They had drawn money under false pretenses, and I think they were tried by our predecessors in office, and one of them is at the present time serving his term in the penitentiary. I dare say my hon. friend from Wolseley remembers the case. The letter proceeds :—

If Coroner Meade's position is upheld, he would go on and conclude the inquest ; otherwise it would, I presume, be open for another coroner to take up the matter.

And Mr. Oliver, to whom that letter was written, wrote in reply as follows :

Dear Mr. Newcombe,—Your decision to await the decision of the judge is no doubt the best. Kindly let me know as soon as the decision has been rendered.

That was done. He got the information he desired, and he awaited the report of the commission, thinking that that would afford sufficient basis of action. We have applied for that report, and whether it will be of use or not, I cannot say. But if it does not afford sufficient basis for action, it is our purpose to appoint a commissioner to take the evidence and investigate the case, and if there is criminal liability, to institute proceedings. My deputy adopted that course which he thought in the public interest, and after discussion with me, and I see no reason whatever for dissenting from the course which he has taken. It was our interest to see that the lives of men were protected. Of course, parties engaged in a new and wild country in the construction of a railway in the winter season are moving from point to point ; to-day they are one place and in a few days they are off in another place, and it is exceedingly difficult to provide hospital accommodation for them.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend knows that. And they cannot have all the advantages they would have if they were living in a dense settlement, much less such as could be obtained in the city. But they are entitled, no doubt, at the hands of their employers, to all the protection to life that the circumstances will permit, and if upon inquiry it is found that there has been any criminal neglect, any heartlessness and indifference to life exhibited by any of the parties who employed these men or had supervision over them, proper proceedings will be taken. We have not been indifferent to the condition of these people ; we have not treated human life as a cheap thing. We intend to extend whatever protection the law will give, having a due regard to the circumstances both of the parties who have come to their death and of those who are charged with negligence, and I hope when the matter is finally disposed of it will be found that there is no ground whatever to complain of the department.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am pleased to hear the statement made by the hon. Minister of Justice, in view of what has been said and the many charges which have been made, not only against the officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway—as to which I expressed no opinion—but more particularly against the deputy of his own department, a gentleman for whom I have the very highest regard ; and from my knowledge of him, not only as a lawyer but as a man, I could not conceive it possible that he would be even negligent or remiss in his duty when so important a matter as the lives of his fellow-subjects was brought to his notice. The statement made by the Minister of Justice completely exonerates him from the serious charges which have been made against him. I was not a little surprised, when I remembered reading the statement made by the hon. member from Alberta, upon his own responsibility as a member of the House of Commons, in the House of Commons as to the conduct of Mr. Newcombe, to hear the contents of the letter which was read by the minister to-day, in which he (Mr. Oliver) unreservedly accepts the explanation of the deputy minister as to the course which he had pursued and intended to pursue. Mr. Oliver brought this very serious subject under the notice of the department. In that he did quite right. There may have been—and that will be developed hereafter—a good deal of negligence, and perhaps cruelty. Whether that cruelty and negligence resulted in the death of these unfortunate men will have to be decided after the commission has been issued, and a full and thorough investigation made. That is a subject that I do not desire to discuss, or even to touch upon, now. What I desired to do was to express my own gratification at the statement made by the hon. Minister of Justice in reference to his deputy, and I think when that goes forth to the world they will see that he was not so negligent in his duties as has been laid to his charge ; and that, on the contrary, he did all that he could do under the law, power, and authority which he, as Deputy Minister of Justice, had in the premises. No one can for a moment conceive that any Minister of Justice or any deputy would be at all lax in his duty when such a serious charge is brought under his notice as that which affects the lives of fellow-subjects. In view of that which has been said, I think the opinions which have been formed by many in the country, after reading the debate in the House of Commons and what has been said in many of the papers, will at least be changed in so far as the accusations which have been made against the Deputy Minister of Justice are concerned.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN — I am very glad to hear that the department is going to make an investigation of this matter now, but I am very much afraid it is too late. Had the inquest gone on at the time they would at least have ascertained the cause of death. It will be a very difficult matter to bring parties to justice now unless the cause of death is proved, and that could only be established at a coroner's inquest. How are you going to prove what the men died of, whether they died of diphtheria, starvation, cold or anything else, unless you can prove it by the testimony of medical men?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—They could prove it was caused by neglect.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN — No, because a man might have been labouring under an ailment which would have proved fatal without the neglect. You have to prove the cause of death before you can bring parties to justice.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Does the hon. gentleman not think that Dr. Meade would have been the proper party.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—No, certainly not, he would not incriminate himself. The usual practice in Ontario is, when a coroner holds an inquest, that the doctor in attendance will be present at the inquest, and if the jury require other medical testimony, they have another doctor brought before them, and put his evidence before the court. If that had been done there, and if an inquest had been held—I do not find fault with the government at all—they would at least have proved what these men died of, and without that you cannot, at this late period, bring the parties who may have been responsible to justice. It is too late.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—It is no doubt a very deplorable thing that human beings should lose their lives through neglect, but it must be remembered that diphtheria is a disease of which every one has a dread. I have known, in the best portion of New Brunswick, where it was difficult to get any one to look after persons suffering from diphtheria. When a man goes to the Crow's Nest Pass he knows he cannot receive the same attention he would get in a settled part of the country. These men were out there a long way from civilization, where there was no hospital. Their fellow labourers were perhaps earning each a dollar a day, and it would be difficult to get them to properly care for these men. I can quite well understand how hard it would be to get proper treatment for men suffering from diphtheria.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN — Was diphtheria prevalent there?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I do not know; I think not.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Oh, yes, and it is yet.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—It is a very malignant disease. No doubt these men may have suffered from the want of proper care, but their employers could not get proper care for them. It is evident these men tried to give them proper care because they removed the sufferers to another place, and in the removal it is possible they may have suffered. A great deal of blame has been laid on the Canadian Pacific Railway officials which I think is unfair. Unless they took a hospital car along with them, I do not see how they can give the men much better treatment than they did moving from one place to another.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I cannot let this opportunity pass without commenting on the most deplorable case in the history of the country. We have railway contracts all over. In that district there were something like 4,000 men engaged in the construction of a railway. There is no doubt that whoever is responsible for gathering 4,000 men into an isolated region, into districts in which the climatic conditions are most severe, where there are no houses and no settlements within perhaps 100 or 150 miles, as the case may be, in case people lose their way and those things, I say great blame is attached to those who are responsible for bringing those men together, that they did not provide the most ample accommodation for their safety and comfort in case of sickness. The peculiar desire that apparently arose to transfer the blame to the Department of Justice was not a worthy one. The Department of Justice is removed some 3,000 miles from the scene of the operations. It is not the Department of Justice we have to look to in a case of this kind. It is those who employ the men, take them from their homes and agree to employ them for a certain period. Now, hon. gentlemen, we hear of a great many accidents that are happening upon our railways, and we seldom hear of any inquiry as to the causes or the extent of the accident. A year ago we had an accident occur to a pilgrimage where an enormous loss of life took place. I did not hear any inquiry about that. Last spring an accident occurred in bringing emigrants from Halifax to Montreal. There was one poor woman lost her life, and we did not hear of any inquiry. We see accounts every day nearly of engineers and firemen losing their lives. In other countries such accidents as these are never allowed to go without the strictest inquiries, so that whatever brings about these accidents might be found out, and means of prevention taken. That experience can only be obtained by the exposure of those accidents.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—There must be criminal neglect to entitle a coroner to hold an inquest. If a man drops down on the street it is not necessary to hold an inquest.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I am not speaking of a man dropping on the street. I am speaking of the responsibility of the managers of railways to see that their contractors or agents make ample arrangements for the decent comfort and protection of their men. When the travelling public are confined to railways they expect that the supervision of the railway companies is of such a character that the very greatest precautions are taken to prevent loss of life and property. I was reading in the Montreal Gazette where some girl was driven into committing suicide by the worrying of her mistress. The result of that was, in the case of the mistress, that she got seven years in the penitentiary. That is the way they do things in England. Here we can have accidents happening day after day without inquiry being made. There seems to be no public opinion, or it has not the opportunity to express itself for the protection of lives and property. The railways have virtual control of the telegraph wires and they are able to regulate the information that passes to the public. The fact that this report only comes out on the eve of the closing of parliament is a reflection of the influence of the Canadian Pacific Railway and their contractor. I think the case is a most deplorable one, and I look upon those two men as martyrs to a cause that has yet to be dealt with by the country.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Before asking leave to withdraw the motion, I wish to make some remarks as to something which was said by the hon. gentleman from Alexandria. The hon. gentleman said it was too late now to hold an inquiry because an inquest should have been held at the time of the death. As I understand there is no question as to the disease from which the men died. The question is whether the fatal result of the disease was due to the lack of proper treatment, or rather, perhaps, ill-treatment by the contractors. Dr. Meade, who was enjoined from holding an inquest on the ground that he was the attending physician and should have been a witness instead of being a coroner, will be able to give all the information, and his evidence will be the best evidence in the case, so that there is no fear of a failure of justice over the fact that a coroner's inquest was not held. Now, with the permission of the House I beg leave to withdraw the motion.

The motion was withdrawn.

A MORNING SITTING.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that when the Senate adjourns this evening it do stand adjourned until to-morrow at 11 o'clock in the forenoon.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMUNICATION TO THE YUKON DISTRICT.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.) moved the following resolution :—

Resolved,—That it is desirable and necessary that an all-Canadian Railway route from the Pacific coast to the Yukon district should be opened up without delay, in order to secure to the Dominion as much of the trade of that district as possible—Easy and continuous communication which would give cheap and safe transportation to passengers—food and other necessary supplies—the safe and rapid conveyance of mails and bullion.

That altogether such communication is a necessity, and the opinion is generally held that the Yukon district should supply the means to build its own railway—yet it does not follow that large grants of land are necessary for the accomplishment of that purpose.

That the granting or alienating of large acres of land in that district to individuals or companies would retard progress and development, create a monopoly inimical to the freedom of selecting so necessary to successful prospecting, and the discovery of new and profitable mines by locking up such areas at pleasure.

That any monopoly so given would reduce the revenue producing capacity of the Yukon district—whilst the reservation of its mineral lands for mining purposes only may reasonably be expected to yield increased revenues annually.

That the mineral lands of that district are the cause, and source of all revenues produced, as from its exceptionable properties, and position, commodities are imported yielding customs revenue in addition to the direct revenue from the industry of mining.

That keeping in view the economical administration of that district, compatible with every possible encouragement to miners, and the mining industry, there are good reasons, from present indications, for expecting that the revenues of the Yukon district will be sufficient to defray the cost of establishing communication, and other legitimate charges.

That it is, therefore, desirable that the mineral lands of that district should be reserved for the country, the general public, and for revenue purposes, for on wise and judicious administration depends the progress and prosperity of the district.

That the Yukon revenues for this year up to the 22nd May are $67,908, which, capitalized at 3 per cent represents a capital of $21,900,000.

That the alternative blocks of mineral lands reserved under government regulations in the richest known portions of the Yukon district, places at the disposal of the government valuable property which may readily be converted into money and made available in the prosecution and development of necessary public works in that district.

That with such available resources and with such an annual income, the Yukon district can easily meet the cry—let the Yukon build its own railways.

That four hundred miles of a narrow gauge railway from a deep water harbour on the Pacific coast to Lake Teslin, would cost about $15,000 per mile, or a total of $6,000,000, of which British Columbia is willing to contribute $1,600,000, which would leave $4,400,000 chargeable to the Yukon district, representing an annual charge on its revenues at 3 per cent of $132,000.

That the question of communication with the Yukon district can be easily adjusted on business principles without being a charge on the consolidated revenue, proper, of the Dominion, from the revenues of that district, without weakening or lessening its revenue producing capacity, but on the contrary, with railway communication, stimulating and increasing such capacity.

He said: About two months ago we had a long debate on the question to which my motion refers, and it is not my intention now to make any extended remarks. I placed the resolution on the order paper some days ago, and I just want to explain my reasons for doing so. I know the government still cling to the idea of a land grant to build a railway communicating with the Yukon country, and I want to show the government and the House where I think the majority of the members of this House stand on that question. I have attempted to put in condensed form the opinion of a very large majority of this House on the question of the Yukon lands and the necessity of having communication with that country, and have also endeavoured to show that the revenues derived from the Yukon and the lands reserved by the government of the richest part of the country are quite sufficient for all the legitimate expenses of that country and to provide railway communication. The hon. Minister of Justice on more than one occasion has taunted myself and other members of the opposition in this House with the vote we gave on this question, as though we had been guilty of some very great crime, and that we were very sorry for what we had done. He also accused the House of partisanship at that time, and he has thrown out the challenge and told the House that we did not formulate any alternative scheme. In the first place, I wish to tell the hon. gentleman a secret which I am sure he does not know, that there was no concerted action on the part of the Conservative members of the House with regard to the Yukon bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There never was one caucus held, and half the Conservative members of this House did not know how the other half would vote. I had no idea how my hon. friend on my right would vote. I never asked him and he never asked me, and that is the case with all the Conservative members—each acted on his own judgment, and as a rule the majority of this House gave a correct judgment and party did not enter into this matter at all. The question was dealt with on its merits. I can say for myself, and I think nearly every hon. gentleman who voted against the bill can say, that this was the case; and if to-morrow a vote were to be taken, with the increased information we have on that subject, we would give a similar vote—I myself would give it ten times over, whereas I have incurred odium from my own province, because they were under a misapprehension that I was unfavourable to opening up communication with that district, which I was not. My opposition was only to the enormous land grant; and that is where I stand to-day. This resolution is not intended to formulate a new or counter scheme, but rather to show the government where the majority of the Senate stand on the question of the mineral lands of the Yukon, as well as the necessity for early railway communication to that district. In both the House of Commons and in this House, the Conservative members declared that they were in favour of railway communication, and they will vote a liberal sum of money to carry out that purpose. It is not necessary to fall back on the revenues of this country; we have revenue enough and resources enough in the Yukon to build communication and pay all other expenses. With regard to the first resolution that I put on the paper, about the necessity of early communication, I think the government and every member will agree to that. If it was essential that communication should have been had two or three months ago, communication ought to be had at as early a date as possible. I am going to commend the government now on this, that I believe they have officers surveying in that part of the country and doing now what they should have done last October. They knew then of the rush to the Yukon country, and if they had taken steps then they would have been able to act intelligently in this matter, and we probably to-day would have had communication. I know there are many members in this House who are sincerely anxious to have communication by way of Edmonton into that country. I think it would be a great boon to the Yukon country and to the North-west farmers if they could drive their cattle into that country, and if a trail could be built into the Yukon in the meantime, until the country could afford to give them a railway, but whatever is done there, it is very necessary that communication should be had from the coast if Canada is to have the trade into that district, or else it will go to other people; yet it does not follow that large grants of land are necessary for the accomplishment of that purpose.

The granting or alienating of large acres of land in that district to individuals or companies would retard the progress and development, create a monopoly inimical to the freedom of selecting, so necessary to successful prospecting and the discovery of new and profitable mines by locking up such area at pleasure.

I think the House will affirm that resolution.

That any monopoly so given would reduce the revenue producing capacity of the Yukon district—whilst the reservation of its mineral lands for mining purposes only may reasonably be expected to yield increased revenues annually.

I say without hesitation that if 4,000,000 acres were locked up in the hands of any company, they could move as fast or as slowly as they liked, and it would have the effect of blocking up that country for a number of years.

That the mineral lands of that district are the cause, and source of all revenues produced, as from its exceptionable properties, and position, commodities are imported yielding customs revenue in addition to the direct revenue from the industry of mining.

I think that cannot be questioned, because the foreign goods and commodities and the licenses in that country are the sources of revenue, and without the mineral lands there would be no source at all.

Hon. Mr BOULTON—Where did you get this information that the revenue would come to that?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I got it from the Finance Department of the government.

That keeping in view the economical administration of that district, compatible with every possible encouragement to miners, and the mining industry, there are good reasons, from present indications, for expecting that the revenues of the Yukon district will be sufficient to defray the cost of establishing communication, and other legitimate charges.

Everything depends upon the economical administration of the district. I think it will be found that this year the government have gone to unnecessary charges. They have sent in a great number of men that I hope will not be required in the district; and as a matter of precaution, to follow these men up they sent in very large supplies at a heavy cost, and they took the unpatriotic course of going out of the country to find the means of supplying that want for the men up in the Yukon. They should have exhausted first of all the home resources, and if they could not find communication and transportation at home, then they could reasonably and fairly go to a foreign country for it.

That it is, therefore, desirable that the mineral lands of that district should be reserved for the country, the general public, and for revenue purposes, for on wise and judicious administration depends the progress and prosperity of the district.

That the Yukon revenues for this year up to the 22nd May are $657,908, which, capitalized at 3 per cent represents a capital of $21,900,000.

That is the revenue for five months, nearly $700,000. I am informed there is now $100,000 coming down on its way to the government, so that in five months the revenue is nearly $800,000. It may be fairly expected that it will come this year to fully $1,000,000. Then there are the alternate blocks of land reserved by the government. If the government to-morrow should dispose of blocks of land in the Yukon district, say where ten miners take up claims, the government reserve the alternate claims, and these lands, I am sure, would sell for a very large figure to-day. I have an estimate here, which is approximate, of what the cost of 400 miles of railway would be. It is about $6,000,000, and British Columbia is willing to contribute $1,600,000, which would leave an annual charge on the revenues of the Yukon district of only $132,000. That is a very small matter compared with the importance of having the communication necessary for the government and everybody else going in. It is a mere flea bite. The next paragraph of my motion reads :—

That the question of communication with the Yukon district can be easily adjusted on business principles without being a charge on the consolidated revenue, proper, of the Dominion, from the revenues of that district, without weakening or lessening its revenue producing capacity, but on the contrary, with railway communication, stimulating and increasing such capacity.

I have no doubt that, with good communition to that country, the revenues would be doubled. Many more people would go in and pay duty, and the country would be in a prosperous condition. It is prosperous now and would be even more prosperous then. The miners could live more cheaply and would be in a much better condition.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend from British Columbia never rises to make a speech connected with railway communication with the Yukon country without undertaking to vindicate what he has done.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He is always soliloquizing. He has undertaken to answer the objections that in his conscience rise constantly to the course which he has pursued. My hon. friend knows that he has, on this occasion, sacrificed the interests of British Columbia to his devotion to party.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—And saved the whole country.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And so it is a question between devotion to party and devotion to the interests of his province upon which his mind is in conflict, and he never proposes a resolution and never makes a speech in which that conflict is not made manifest. My hon. friend asks what course the government intend to take upon this question. My hon. friend said we acted too much in haste, and perhaps it would be a hasty thing on my part to undertake to answer my hon. friends question at this time.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I did not ask any question.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I understood my hon. friend to ask what course the government intended to adopt.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—No. I asked that question two weeks ago.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And as we will be meeting probably in six months, I think I had better take that length of time to consider that question.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—In the meantime I hope the hon. gentleman will learn something.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend makes a number of statements in which I do not concur; I dissent from the inference which he has drawn, but I am not, at the last hour of the session, going to spend the time which should be devoted to other matters in discussing academic questions which my hon. friend submits now, for he admits he does not expect any action at present, and therefore what he proposes is rather a vindication on account of the mischief he has done than calling for any action on the part of the government. Here the hon. gentleman has made a series of calculations, he has told us of the immense value of those mineral lands in the Yukon country. He has told us that if four million acres of this land were to pass into the hands of the company they might be locked up. Let me say to my hon. friend that if four million acres of land had passed into the hands of the company, I suppose the company would have undertaken to pledge those lands for moneys with which to build this road, and for a larger sum which might serve as immediate profit, if a larger sum could have been obtained. The parties who invest their moneys in these lands would naturally want to get the money out of them again, and get the interest out of the investment and so the lands would have to be worked, and as it takes at least 90 per cent of the value to get the gold out, 90 out of the 100 per cent would have gone in the form of wages to those employed, and of that 90 per cent at least 20 per cent would have been received by the government in customs or excise duties.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—They do not seem to have given that ninety per cent in the case of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If my hon. friend will bear that in mind, he will see in the first place the amount of labour that might have been employed in the country, which is not. He will see the extent thereby to which he has hindered the development of that distant region, and he will see also the serious loss he has inflicted, not only during the present year but as long as that country will continue to be occupied by miners, upon the parties who would have gone there to mine, and he will see also what serious injuries he has inflicted on the province of British Columbia by standing in the way of railway development in that country, and what injury is inflicted on the Dominion by turning the commerce of that country into another channel and assisting in building up a United States seaport town, instead of a seaport town in his own province. I am not going to interfere with my hon. friend's reflections in this matter, because I do not profess to minister to a mind diseased, even though it be ever a worry that arises to my hon. friend from the mischief he has done to British Columbia ; but let me call his attention to another statement. He says that British Columbia proposed to contribute one million six hundred thousand dollars towards the construction of a railway and that we have not met British Columbia in that matter. British Columbia did not propose so to contribute. British Columbia proposed to make certain charges on those advances. Practically, it was a loan rather than a grant on the part of British Columbia, and so it stands and so far as I can ascertain, it was not of a character to enable parties who would have ventured to take the contract to finance successfully upon the contributions so made.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Will the hon. gentleman allow me to tell him what the contractors said on that subject in a letter written by the contractor's agent? It reads as follows :

> VICTORIA, B. C., 30th April, 1898.—I beg to say that my firm are prepared forthwith, upon the granting to them on the said subsidy, to execute a contract on the above terms, so modified, with provision therein for the full and satisfactory equipment and operation of the railways.

Whatever it was, the contractor is willing to take that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend reads the letter of Mr. Lucas. I was informed by his principals that they would not accede to that.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Here is the offer.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It was repudiated.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was not my intention to say anything on this motion, but my hon. friend the Minister of Justice has, in his usual way, launched out upon that which is evidently haunting him like somebody's ghost—that is the question of the trade—

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Cæsar's ghost.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, Hamlet's ghost ; it does not matter which. I should like to understand why the hon. gentleman makes the serious charge against my hon. friend from British Columbia of having sacrificed his province to his party? The hon. gentleman stated in the most distinct and positive terms, that my hon. friend came to the conclusion which led him to give that vote from a belief that the terms of the bargain with Mackenzie & Mann were neither advantageous to British Columbia as a province, nor to the Dominion as a whole. And I venture the assertion that ninety-nine people of every hundred who have taken the trouble to read and study and investigate that question will have come to the same conclusion. When he spoke of conscience I felt inclined to quote from Shakespeare "Conscience makes cowards of us all." Now my hon. friend's conscience must have been seared, seriously seared upon the matter of answering questions. He declined over and over again to answer questions which were put in this house by gentlemen who thought it in the interest of the country they should be answered, the Minister of Justice could not help coming to the conclusion that my hon. friend was trying to extract from him some information, by questions, which he should have put, but which he had not put. Consequently he began in his usual way to answer questions which were not put, and declined to answer questions which were put. I do not propose to enter into the question of a serious loss to British Columbia, or to the Dominion by the rejection of the Yukon bill. But I take exception, as in the past, to the statement as to the diversion of the trade and the building up of United States towns and cities at the expense of Canada. I say more; my hon. friend knows, if he has had any conversation or consultation with men acquainted with that country, that the route that the government laid down, for the building of which they were to give such an immense tract of country, never would become a commercial route into that country. I contend, further, that it was not an all-Canadian route; that it was subject to the same regulations and the same conditions of trade that were imposed upon the entry of goods into that country through any of the other ports to which we have referred in the past. The same concessions, the same rights of trade and the same privileges to all traders throughout the whole Dominion and to the whole world, so far as goods going through Canada is concerned, are given to those who take goods into the Yukon district by Pyramid Harbour or Dyea, or Skagway, as they are by the Stikine; the result of which will be, that, no matter what road my hon. friend or his government would build, the shortest route, the easiest mode of reaching that portion of the Yukon district in which settlement has taken place, will be adopted in the future, irrespective of any road that might be built by the Stikine River route. That is so plain that I cannot understand how it is that gentlemen so conversant with the commerce of the country, and with economics, and with trade generally, knowing that trade always finds its own level, should repeat over and over again this statement of the diversion of trade from the country. If you can get into the Yukon district easier and cheaper by one route than another, that is the route which will be taken, if there are not obstacles put in the way to prevent it. As there are no more obstacles in the way of the entrance of trade into that country, than there are from the United States with goods to England, why should we have the assertion made that we have destroyed the interests of British Columbia, and of the whole Dominion for the sake of party, in order to defeat a measure which the government thought proper to lay before parliament? I venture the statement that I do not believe there is an action taken by the Senate of Canada since it was created under the Confederation Act, that is approved by a greater number of people in the Dominion of Canada than our action in rejecting that bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I dissent from that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman dissents. He dissented before I began. He has told us that we have ruined the country and diverted all the trade of the country into a United States port, and that we are going to build up United States towns and cities, sacrificing the interests of Canada. That is the idea I am combatting, and no man knows better than the hon. gentleman that such results will not flow from the action of the Senate. The contractors themselves knew, and stated publicly, that that route, never would be the commercial route: and that that was the reason why they insisted upon the monopoly clause for five years, notwithstanding the fact that the Minister of Railways and Canals stated in the House of Commons that the government insisted upon that clause being put into the contract. That is a conflict of statement between the two, and I leave it to those gentlemen to settle as to which is correct. I again repudiate in the strongest possible terms the charge which has been made against the members of this Senate who voted with the majority upon this question, that they were actuated wholly and solely by party motives. The best evidence of that is the statement of my hon. friend from Victoria that there was never any conference of the members on this side of the House, except merely casual conversation between the members who voted against the measure. I have had no consultation whatever with them. The proposition of the government was so iniquitous, so far as the interests of that rich portion of our Dominion were concerned, that the common sense of every man led him to cast his vote against it, and I have no doubt a majority of this House would do so again if an opportunity were presented.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I am surprised that the hon. Minister of Justice should not be able to discuss a public question without showing so much ill-feeling, venom and personal animus as he has shown in this matter. He has nothing to do with my conscience and my feelings. I am responsible to myself alone. If I had done what my hon. friend has done to injure the trade of this country and build up United States towns and divert trade from our own ports, I should hide my head and be very much ashamed. He has helped to throw the trade of this country into the hands a foreign country. He has helped to hurt the towns of British Columbia by allowing miners to pass up and get their licenses in other places, where they reaped a big harvest last season. I hope I shall never do that. If I were giving my vote again, I would vote the same way, and I would not be ashamed of it.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDRESS TO LORD ABERDEEN.

MOTION.

The Order of the Day being read:

Consideration of the Address to His Excellency the Governor General on the occasion of the approaching termination of His Excellency's official connection with this country, &c.—(Honourable Mr. Mills.)

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The following is the address which has been sent to us from the House of Commons for our concurrence.

To His Excellency the Right Honourable Sir John Campbell Hamilton Gordon, Earl of Aberdeen; Viscount Formartine, Baron Haddo, Methlic, Tarves and Kellie, in the Peerage of Scotland; Viscount Gordon of Aberdeen, County of Aberdeen, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom; Baronet of Nova Scotia, &c., &c., Governor General of Canada, and Vice-Admiral of the same.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:—

We, Her Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Canada in parliament assembled, on the occasion of the approaching termination of Your Excellency's official connection with this country, hasten to assure you, the representative of Her Most Gracious Majesty, of the unswerving loyalty and devotion of the Canadian people to the Crown and Empire of Great Britain, and to express the hope that you will in person convey these assurances to our beloved Queen.

It is our pleasant duty to assure Your Excellency of the high appreciation by the people of Canada of the unfailing courtesy and assiduous care with which you have presided over the affairs of the Dominion for the last five years, a period which, it must be no small gratification to Your Excellency to know, has been characterized by a marked growth of progress and prosperity; and to testify to the generous and kindly interest which you have displayed in all that pertains to the welfare and advancement of the people irrespective of distinctions of class or creed.

We are also highly sensible of the great degree in which the literature, science and art of the Dominion have benefited from the deep and practical interest which Your Excellency has taken therein.

The important services which Your Excellency has rendered to this country have been heightened by the zealous co-operation of Her Excellency the Countess of Aberdeen, whose untiring efforts to promote the social and moral welfare of our people have endeared her to all classes of the community.

We beg to convey the assurances that Your Excellency and your distinguished consort will bear from our shores our profound respect and esteem, coupled with our warm wishes for your future welfare and happiness, and we indulge the hope that this country may continue to have in Your Excellency a friend and advocate in the councils of the Empire.

He said: I move to agree with the House of Commons by filling up the blank in the address with the words "Senate and." I have pleasure in moving, as I am sure my hon. friend will have in seconding, and this House in approving of the presentation of this address. We have had, since the constitution of our confederation, a number of distinguished men appointed by the Imperial government as the representatives of Her Majesty in this country. All of them, without exception, have been men of marked ability, men well acquainted with the constitutional system which they have been called upon to administer, and who have carried out that system in perfect accordance with the law and the conventions of British parliamentary government. In my opinion the Imperial government have been anxious to consult the best interests of the country in the appointments which they have from time to time made. We have had no one appointed as Governor General in this country without parliamentary experience and without a practical acquaintance with that system of government which he has been called upon to administer. In this regard we have had in His Excellency the Governor General who now has the honour to represent Her Majesty in this country, and that Canada has had the good fortune to have as Governor General no exception to that rule of well qualified statesmen as representatives of Her Majesty here, and I think His Excellency, not less than all those who preceded him in office, in all that he has done, in all that he has agreed to, and all he has failed to concur in, has observed with strictness the principles and the spirit of the constitutional system which he has been called upon to administer. Canada has sometimes made rapid progress, sometimes she has seemed to be stationary. That will always occur in the history of a country. There are times in the affairs of a state which, if taken advantage of, lead on to fortune; and what is important in a country is, when those opportunities arise, that the government for the time being should take advantage of them. There is no period in the history of Canada since the system of federal union was established, in which there has been more marked changes for the advantage of this country than during the regime of His Excellency the present Governor General. I am not claiming any special credit for the present administration in these matters. I have never favoured the notion of presenting to the community the idea that their good fortune is wholly due to the administration, and not due to the self-reliance, the energy, ability, industry and frugality of the people themselves; but there are periods in the history of the country when marked changes take place, when new impulses are given to industry, when greater progress in colonization and settlement and in opening new avenues for trade come into existence and new relations spring up. We have at the present time a prospect of closer and more friendly relations between the people of this country—yes, the people of the whole British empire, and the neighbouring republic, a republic that at one time in its history formed a portion of the British empire, whose people speak our language, read our literature, and administer laws similar to our own; a people upon whom all the impressions that are made by that literature, and by that contact serve to mold them more and more in conformity with that type of man known as the Briton or the Englishman. Now, it is the good fortune that attends us at this moment that there is a prospect of closer and more friendly relations, of friendly relations likely to be more durable between the people of the British empire and the citizens of the neighbouring republic than have hitherto existed. We are likely to have, at no distant date, a conference for settling some of the outstanding differences between the people of Canada and the people on the south side of our border, which have led to some friction and led perhaps to retaliatory, or reciprocal legislation I may call it, upon the one side, and upon the other, and I hope that before His Excellency's rule in this country comes to an end, he will have the gratification of seeing those questions, by a treaty acceptable to us and acceptable to them, all fairly disposed of. A representative of the sovereign, like the sovereign, is said by Lord Brougham to reign rather than to govern. The work of government rests with the responsible ministers of the crown, but the work of ruling in its higher sense belongs to the sovereign herself and the representatives of the sovereign. The sovereign is the dignified head of the country, and I have sometimes heard opinions expressed that we do not require a dignified head—that we do not require a government house—that we do not require the social amenities which appertain to Government House. I dissent from that. If you abolish the social side of royalty you leave but little. It is that social side that gives it its influence, and it is the social influence that is exercised by the head of the state that contributes largely to make social influence a part of the government and enlists that social influence on the side of upholding and maintaining the law. I may say, without any disrespect of the people who live south of us, that one of the great advantages that we have over them in the business of government is that under our constitutional system the social features of the sovereign's rule is exercised on the side of justice and truth and decency and social order, and that no one can rise high in the state without some personal merit, and without some respect and deference to those ethical principles which are essential to the progress and prosperity of the people. Now, under the institutions of our neighbours, the law has to rely for its maintenance more largely upon the officers who administer and the deterring influences that are enlisted by the law itself on the side of order and against crime, than upon any social influence of any kind in the state. Our neighbours' institutions are institutions that may fit them well as a suit of political clothing. Our political institutions are an essential part of our life. They grow with us. They are adjusted to us. They are a part of ourselves. They are incorporated with our political existence, and as long as we possess energy and a love for what is true and just and fair, just so long will the system which we possess be superior to that of any other. This is unquestionably the case, that under His Excellency the Governor General the principles and spirit of the English constitutional system of government has been respected and has been upheld, and every part of the country not merely the capital, has felt the social influence which His Excellency and Her Excellency the Countess of Aberdeen have exerted on the public on behalf of royalty. Let me say one other thing, that Her Excellency has taken a very active and deep interest in the social well-being of the people of this country, and especially of the women of this country, through the Woman's Council, which she has done so much to organize and to perfect. I have been myself surprised to observe with how much good sense, and how much care social questions are investigated, mischiefs are sought to be met, difficulties to be overcome, and in all these regards, although Her Excellency may in a few months leave Canada, the good that she has begun will live after her, and the institution that has been fairly organized and established by her will be carried on after she has gone from Canada. I am sure that we shall remember both His Excellency the Governor General and his esteemed lady, the Countess of Aberdeen, kindly after they are gone. I am sure we all wish them well, a long and happy life after they have left this country and through the long vista of receding years we trust that there will occasionally come to their minds tender recollections of many events that have transpired while His Excellency was the Governor General of Canada. (Applause.)

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is well chat there are occasions upon which all political parties can agree, and it is also well that that sentiment of affection for our sovereign, and of the institutions under which we live, is such, that all men who have a knowledge of either the one or the other, can, upon occasions of this kind, unite in paying that respect which is due to the representatives of our gracious Queen. In the present instance the representative of royalty in this country has, in his many acts of kindness, his devotion to the duties of the office which he holds, and in many other respects, endeared himself to those with whom he has come most in contact; as an integral portion of the great Empire, five or six millions of people though we may be, we join heartily in the esteem which we have for His Excellency the Governor General, not only as a representative of sovereignty but, I will add, as a man. Every one must deeply regret the causes which led to the severance of the Governor General from Canada and the duties pertaining to his office, at the present moment. His term of office has not expired. His departure from Canada is owing to a desire to visit at home an aged parent. When we consider the age of his respected mother, and her affectionate desire to see her son ere she passes away, we can easily not only appreciate her feeling, but recognize in the son himself that kindness and attention which every child should entertain for his parents; which has impelled him to resign the great trust which he holds, and led him to ask the authorities at home to permit him to retire, in order that he may prove that devotion which is due from a son to a parent. I am sure that His Excellency the Governor General will, like his predecessors, when he returns to his home, be to Canada what his predecessors have been in the past. It has been my good fortune to meet some of our former Governors General in England, and upon no occasion that presents itself to them have they ever lost an opportunity of saying a good word for Canada. I might almost say that they have been the very best emigrant agents that Canada has had in the mother country. Their Excellencies will be remembered in the future for the unbounded hospitality which has characterized them in all sections of the Dominion, and to all classes of the community. In addition to that, His Excellency has identified himself with everything that pertains to the welfare of the country. If by his presence he could aid in the development of science, the industries of the country, or in advancing literature, he has been always ready and willing to give his time; and, I might say, sacrifice his comfort in order to attain the great object to which I have referred. His Excellency has, upon all occasions, shown a great interest in the welfare of Canada. He has been from one end of it to the other. He has shown his faith in the future of the Dominion by investing largely in some sections of it, more particularly in the province of British Columbia. These interests will endear him to the country, as well as the good opinion which he knows is entertained of him by those with whom he has come in contact. I shall not attempt to enlarge upon, but merely refer to the sentiments which have been uttered by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice in reference to the status of Canada in the empire, its future prosperity, and the near approach to that time, to which we all look forward, of closer relations to the empire and greater freedom of trade between all sections of it; and also his remarks upon the advantages of the institutions under which we live compared with those of other parts of the world. My hon. friend has dealt so fully with these points, and so truthfully, that I do not think there is a member of the House who is not fully in accord with the sentiments he has uttered. I have simply to say, in reference to Her Excellency, that the indomitable energy and industry which she has displayed in her endeavours to advance the welfare of the country, more particularly of those of her own sex, can never be repaid by the people of this Dominion. I am quite sure that in the future many of her acts of kindness will long be remembered. They will linger in the memory of those who received not only her personal kindness, but for the benefit which she has bestowed upon her sex in Canada. I may say that many of her efforts to ameliorate her own sex and to do good to the country have been misrepresented by those who have not known, or appreciated, the real object that the Countess had in view, in devoting so much time and so much energy to accomplishing her purpose. Though that may be the case, she will always be remembered kindly by those who have received benefits and kindness at her hands. The hospitality of Government House, over which the Countess has so acceptably presided will be difficult to emulate, and long remembered by the people of the Dominion. I shall not venture upon the subject of constitutional government, nor upon the necessity of an adherence either to the principles or the precedents of government, by which we are governed; but I say this, and I say it in all sincerity, that no man who has ever come in contact with His Excellency, personally, but must have come to the conclusion that whatever he did was done from a conscientious conviction of right. Criticism follows every public man, and we know in looking at the past how severely some of our Governors General were criticised by parties in the country. That will continue just so long as human nature is constituted as it is, and just so long as we differ in our views as to the proper course which should be pursued in the government of the country; hence I look upon these criticisms as fair, when conducted in a proper spirit, as incident to a free country and to the free institutions under which we live. I join cordially in the wish that was uttered by the hon. gentleman who moved the adoption of this Address, and also in the wish contained in the Address itself, that when their Excellencies leave Canada for the place of their birth, they may long live to enjoy pleasant recollections, as I am sure they will, of their four or five years sojourn in Canada; and that they may convey to Her Majesty that which has been conveyed to Her over and over again, the sentiment of love and affection which Her Canadian subjects have for Her, and of their continued loyalty to the Crown of Great Britain. (Applause.)

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—It would ill-become me not to add to the words that have just passed from the leader of the government and the leader of the opposition did I not as a representative of the settlers of our great boundless prairies of the west express their regret at the termination of Lord Aberdeen's public office and the departure of Her Excellency necessitated thereby. One of the first things that Lady Aberdeen did was to establish what is known as the Aberdeen Association, by which many homes in our isolated prairies have been cheered by the literature that was distributed by that means. I have also to express their feelings in the efforts that were put forth by Her Excellency in the formation of what is known as The Victorian Order of Nurses, an organization that will be felt of the greatest advantage and benefit to those isolated settlements where the appliances for hospital treatment are not so obtainable as they are down here in this eastern country. It is not the first time that Aberdeen has impressed its character upon this country. Through the University of Aberdeen, Bishop Strachan, Archbishop McRae and other distinguished men have impressed the character of that university on the educational institutions and churches over which they presided, and I am quite sure I am only expressing the feelings of those who reside in our western country when I say that they express extreme regret which we all feel that the termination of their Excellencies' rule is coming. The social efforts their Excellencies have put forth in the organization of the National Council of Women and other similar national movements will leave as a memorial of those efforts and the good they have done will live after them. I see by this evening's paper that the name of Lord Wolseley is suggested as the probable successor of Lord Aberdeen. All I can say with regard to that appointment is that he will be a worthy successor of the many distinguished men who have filled the office of Governor General of Canada, and that he will be warmly welcomed back to Canada should the rumour prove true.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I wish to add my small quota to the esteem which has been expressed on this occasion for Their Excellencies, Lord and Lady Aberdeen, by the hon. leaders on both sides of this House. As the hon. leader of this side said, it is pleasing to find a common ground upon which both sides of the House can take a stand. I think it will be agreed that the administration of His Excellency has been highly successful, although the country has been passing through a time of great depression during the last five years on account of the state of business on the other side of the line. Their Excellencies have taken a deep interest in everything towards the promotion and the welfare of the country. They have tried to inculcate habits of usefulness in every walk of life and have shown a good example in every possible way to the people of the country. They have organized institutions for charity and for nursing and for other useful purposes in this country which will be long remembered after they have left us. The hon. leader of the opposition alluded to the unbounded hospitality of Their Excellencies. I have certainly very great pleasure in confirming that, and without reflecting on any one else who has occupied Government House, none has been so lavish in hospitality. Our wish, and the wish of thousands of the people of this country, is for Their Excellencies' happiness in the years to come.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I am unwilling to give a silent vote on this occasion. and I just wish to say that I join most cordially in the felicitations which the hon. Minister of Justice and hon. leader of the opposition have given expression to in reference to the personal character and the official proceedings of the Governor General in this country. It is saying nothing peculiar when every senator is able to rise and give his testimony to the unbounded and unwearying hospitality and kindness which have been evinced by both His Excellency and Lady Aberdeen during the whole period of their residence here, and I think, so far as my experience goes, that we have never had a Governor General and his amiable lady in this country who have more earnestly desired to fill the duties of their lofty station with a more unsparing hand than those who are about to leave us. I most heartily join in all that has been said with reference to them, and in the good wishes and the most fervent hopes which have been expressed that they may have a long and happy career before them.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I should not like this motion to be adopted without a word being said from a representative of the French section of the province of Quebec. I will not add much to what has been so happily stated before me as to the work done by the Governor General, which praise I completely endorse. I will simply add that we have had in Her Excellency a practical illustration of what is genuine philanthropy. We have seen Her Excellency, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, sowing germs that will develop into great benefits for the people of this country. The women of Canada have been shown how they could do something in their own sphere towards the advancement of humanity. They have been taught that women of wealth, women of leisure could give that leisure and part of that wealth towards the progress and the betterment of the conditions of their sex, and I have no doubt that Canada will, by the exceptional examples set by Her Excellency, morally and materially improve as our gentlewomen will bring their heretofore unknown influence, as a confederate and organized body, to bear towards the progress of the Dominion.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (167) "An Act in further amendment of the Post Office Act."—(Hon. Mr. Mills.)

MANITOBA DEBT ACCOUNT BILL.

FIRST READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the first reading of Bill (169) "An Act respecting the Manitoba Debt Account."

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that the bill be read a second time at the second sitting of the House to-day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is a very important question, involving as I understand some half a million of money. The question is whether the Senate is prepared to consider a question of so much importance on two or three hours' notice. However, if senators have given attention to the debates in the other House, I suppose they will understand it to-night as well as to-morrow, but I must again enter my protest against this mode of bringing bills of such importance before us at this period of the session. I do not know that there will be so much objection to this one, but there is another one coming which I think will occupy the Senate for some little period of time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I may say in reference to this that the amount is not quite so large as my hon. friend mentioned, and he may be somewhat familiar with the claim. It arises from the Manitoba public buildings, the Lieutenant Governor's residence and the parliament buildings, and it is a claim that has been made from time to time for many years. It was charged against them in their debt account and they always claimed it was improperly charged, inasmuch as all the other provinces were presented with their public buildings and it was not fair that Manitoba should be charged with the amount. The buildings, as my hon. friend knows, were erected by the government of Canada about 1884 or 1885, and subsequently were charged against Manitoba as expenditures of a local character. The contention of the Manitoba government has been that they were not of a local character, inasmuch as other provinces had the public buildings given to them, because at the time of confederation the public buildings all over this Dominion were federal properties, and were subsequently transferred without charge to the several provinces, and that all ought to have been treated alike.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that, but the public buildings as they existed at the time of confederation belonged to the provinces and not to Canada, and when Ontario built her new government residence she built it out of her own pocket. The Dominion did not pay for it, and the question may arise as to whether Ontario may not make just as good a claim for compensation for the construction of that building as Manitoba has for hers. I am aware of the fact that they have been applying for this money ever since the buildings were completed. I know during the whole time I was in office there were constant applications, and it is only another illustration of the principle of the importunate widow. If they will only keep importuning sufficiently long. It is evident that while there is a government in power which expects to receive a consideration therefor, or have received it, they will accede to demands which other governments had refused on the ground that they were not entitled to it. However, I do not know that I shall discuss this question now, but I think I shall be able to show that the last settlement covered all claims they had against the Dominion, and that that settlement was ratified by an Act of their own legislature; while I say that, I am aware of the fact that they always demanded more and will keep demanding more. In what is proposed if ratified, is opening a door that will lead to further demands from other provinces, and as my own province has never had much consideration in that way, I should judge that Mr. Hardy should put in a claim of some half a million at least. My hon. friend says that the amount is not so large as I intimated. If I recollect right it is about $280,000, and interest added for fifteen or sixteen years at five per cent, so that when you have done that I do not think it will be much less than half a million. The object of the bill is simply to add to the credit of the indebtedness of Manitoba this amount of $280,000, upon which they will receive five per cent from the time it was credited on their capital account by the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the interest is about $240,000.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, and that together with the $280,000 will come to a little more than half a million.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I think my hon. friend is too hard on the province of Manitoba. The other provinces came in with certain amounts of land. The province of Manitoba had no lands, and I know it was understood at the time that the Government House and some other public building were erected that the Dominion government had a settlement with the province of Manitoba that they would be allowed. I think that was understood at the time, and it is very unfair to charge the province of Manitoba with this amount, for the simple reason that they had no resources whatever, no revenues, nothing except what they derived from the settlers.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is right to a certain extent. They were allowed certain sums in lieu of the land, not very large I admit——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have had four or five settlements with Manitoba since she was formed into a province, and every time further concessions were made.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—On the basis of settlement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—On the basis of settlement—yes, I admit that, and for reasons which were then given. The only point now is whether, at the last settlement, these claims which Manitoba had were included in that settlement, or whether the settlement was altogether irrespective of them. That is the position that has been taken, and that is the position taken now by the government in defence of the policy which they have adopted. I am not going to criticise their reasons for the course they have pursued, but I have my own opinion as to what led to that settlement, and probably we may give utterance to it before we get through the debate.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not think my hon. friend is dealing very generously with Manitoba. You take, for instance, the public buildings of the older provinces; whatever they were worth they became the property of the Dominion under the British North America Act and are included in the schedule. Now there were public buildings at Fredericton and Halifax, there were public buildings at Quebec, and there was a public building that was used for many years as a parliament building with several acres of ground about it in the city of Toronto. All these properties were handed over to the provinces, although they were legally the properties of the Dominion, without charge. Now when certain public buildings in Manitoba, of a kindred character, are built and you undertake to charge that to the capital account of Manitoba, you are doing what is not done in any of the older provinces. As the hon. senator on the other side said, Manitoba has no natural resources the same as the maritime provinces and Quebec and Ontario. We have the public lands of Manitoba, they are Dominion property. There have been several settlements with Manitoba. There was an agreement to pay a certain sum per head of the population, but when the calculations were made it was found in every instance that Manitoba, on account of her peculiar circumstances instead of being more generously dealt with than the other provinces, was less generously dealt with. She has made claims, and I do not understand that the government of which my hon. friend was a member ever repudiated those claims. They did not finally deal with them. They did not acquiesce in them but they did not reject them. So that the claims of Manitoba have been standing ever since. We have in Manitoba a new province, a population going in there mostly of young men from the older provinces, who are seeking to make their fortunes by the cultivation of the soil; and you have foreigners most of whom are in straitened circumstances, depending upon their industry in order to obtain a competence from the land. You have a population which is not the best fitted at the outset, when the province is new, to meet all those charges which, in the other provinces, are made without any tax and burden on the population, but are derived from the natural resources of the country, the sale of its timber, minerals and lands. Manitoba has no timber, it has no land, and has none of those sources of revenue which are found in the other provinces, and I do not think, if all Manitoba asked for is conceded, that she will still be in a position of advantage as compared with the older provinces.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC WORKS GRANTS BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (161) "An Act respecting the payment of grants in aid of the construction of public works."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the bill be read the second time at the second sitting of the House to-day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Auditor General has decided that where a subsidy is granted to any public work, no money can be paid until it is actually completed. This is to authorize advances to be made as ordinarily made on contracts. I think there are two cases excepted. The bill reads as follows:—

Whenever by an Act of parliament a grant in aid of the construction of any work has been made payable on the completion of sections thereof, or otherwise, the Governor in Council may authorize payment on account thereof according to progress estimates to be furnished by the engineers of the Department of Railways and Canals, notwithstanding that the work so aided, or any section thereof, has not been wholly completed, where the non-completion thereof is not due to delay on the part of the contractors, or to pecuniary causes, or to causes within the reasonable control of the contractors, and where the amount proposed to be paid as having been earned by the contractors will not be less than sixty-four thousand dollars, after withholding from the amount which would be earned by the completion, a sum sufficient, in the opinion of the Minister of Railways and Canals, to cover the cost of completing the whole of such work or the section thereof with respect to which payment is being made.

This Act shall only apply to the contracts made with the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada in aid of the construction of the Victoria Bridge, and the Canadian Pacific Railway in aid of the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway.

In these two important works, the ruling of the Auditor General is that no money can be paid until the work is completed and taken off their hands. It enables a certain proportion to be advanced, the government retaining in its hands an amount sufficient to pay for the work even if it were stopped at that time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I will state the case out of which this bill grew. In the construction of the work on the Crow's Nest Pass, under the contract, a payment could be made when ten miles were completed. In some places there was a ravine running across the track. The steel was upon the ground for the erection of the bridge, but it could not be put up at that particular season of the year, and although the work was constructed and the material for the bridges was on hand, nevertheless, as there was no ten miles without some imperfect or uncompleted structure, it was not possible, according to the ruling—and I suppose according to the strict interpretation of the contract—to make any payment for the work that was actually done. This bill, without any departure from the principle that existed in the law before, enables the government, in a case of that sort, to make payments of the subsidy that was promised.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—A progress estimate?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—A progress estimate. It is simply to give the contract a certain degree of flexibility that will render it possible to make payments where the money has been actually earned, although the work may not be absolutely completed in the way that it must be when it is accepted as a completed work.

Hon. Mr. McKINDSEY—What is the object in fixing the sum of $64,000?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I suppose where the subsidy is $6,400 per mile it would be $64,000 for ten miles.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I can understand an exceptional case, but where a man takes a contract on certain conditions I think he should know what those conditions are. At present the rule is that you pay as ten miles are built, and the contractor is not entitled to any money until those ten miles are completed. But under this bill the government can pay for ten miles whether the work is done or not.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No; the work must be done. But with the thermometer down to zero, even though you had the steel and material on the ground, you might not be able to erect the bridges that were required.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Of course there might be an exceptional case.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And while the work was completed under the spirit of the contract, it would not be technically complete.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Take ten sections of ten miles each, making one hundred miles:

supposing each one was finished with the exception of one hundred dollars to be spent on each section, not one dollar could be paid under the ruling of the Auditor General, because the section must be absolutely complete and in working order, and although ten times the amount required to be expended had been spent on the whole hundred miles, in consequence of a section not being absolutely finished and ready for operation, no money could be paid.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the principle on which all these subsidies have been paid in the past.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, yes, it is. I have no doubt about it at all, because many a demand has been made upon the government, and the very reasons advanced which the hon. Secretary of State has advanced. They have completed ten miles of road, or perhaps a hundred miles of road, but there has been some bridge in the centre which rendered the whole road comparatively useless till that was built, yet they would like advances made. I should have great objection to the bill if it was of a general character, but as it is confined to the two enterprises that are being carried on by two companies that we know will complete them, there can be no possible loss. I can understand now why sixty-four thousand dollars is fixed as the maximum sum to be paid. Three thousand two hundred dollars is the amount of subsidy which in the past, has been granted per mile, in aid of the construction of these roads, but the gentlemen who have been opposing these subsidies strongly in all parts of the country, inside the House and outside of the House, increased it to six thousand four hundred per mile, which if multiplied by ten, will give the sum of sixty-four thousand. I suppose that is the basis of it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Under the circumstances, and as it is confined to the Grand Trunk Railway, and to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway to which we are bound by law to give large subsidies, I do not see any objection to the bill.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—It is confined to those two roads?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

The motion was agreed to.

MANITOBA SCHOOL FUND BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (168) "An Act respecting the Manitoba School Fund."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the bill be read the second time at the second sitting of the House to-day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I look upon this bill as one of the most dangerous innovations of the principle of endowments ever proposed since we have had a parliament. If I stand alone in the parliament of Canada I shall vote against it, and I shall give my reasons for it when the second reading comes up. You might as well interfere with a man's will as take the course the government are pursuing in this matter. I look upon it as dangerous in character,—I was going to say iniquitous—and how any government holding the views that I do—perhaps they do not hold my views, or they would not—could have ever made such a proposition to a legislative body, and how it should ever have passed the Lower House, is beyond my comprehension. You might just as well invade the rights of any individual as to invade the rights, as this bill will do, of future generations in that country.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I would like to ask if a similar advance to that has ever been made.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—In 1877 I myself proposed, at the instance of Mr. Norquay, who visited this part of the country, the advance of a certain sum, I forget the amount, but it seems to me it was fifteen thousand dollars a year, to the government of Manitoba in aid of their school system for supporting their schools, which advance was to be charged against the school lands of Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Against the income or capital?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Against the school lands.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The sums were advanced, taken out of the capital, but they have been recouped in interest by the sale of the lands, and the Finance Minister has stated that fact in the House. This is an actual gift to the Manitoba government of $300,000 out of the capital which they have at present of $475,768. That is the difference between the two. This is an actual gift of $300,000 out of about $475,768, and without any regard to the manner in which they may spend it further than to say it is for school purposes. It is depleting the capital to that extent without providing means of being recouped.

The motion was agreed to.

THE NORTH-WEST IRRIGATION BILL.

RESTORED TO THE ORDER PAPER.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I beg to inform the House that I will place the Irrigation Bill on the Orders of the Day. I have seen the Minister of the Interior, and he has not yet decided what course he will take with reference to it; so that we can pass it now and send it down to the Commons. I understood the hon. gentleman from Calgary was willing to withdraw his amendment. There were four or five amendments inserted, but there was only one to which I objected.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. senator from Calgary will be here in the morning. The hon. minister does not propose to take it up to-night?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, and pass it with the amendment. If the hon. member from Calgary chooses to advise the Minister of the Interior in the other House that he will withdraw his amendment, that can be done. He expressed the opinion across the floor of the House that he would not insist on it.

The Senate adjourned.

SECOND SITTING.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eight o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

SUPREME COURT JUDGES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.) inquired of the Minister of Justice:

If it is the intention to appoint a barrister from the bar of the province of British Columbia to the vacant judgeship in the province—also, if the travelling allowances of the Supreme Court judges in British Columbia are equal to those of the judges of Quebec and Ontario? If not—what are the reasons?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say to my hon. friend that I do not think the travelling allowances of the judges of the province of British Columbia are inferior to those of judges in Quebec and Ontario. We have not touched the travelling allowances in respect to any of the Supreme Court judges.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—You have in Quebec.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, we have not dealt with them in the bill. The consideration of the position of the Superior Court judges was allowed to stand over until another session. The hon. member asked if it is the intention to appoint a barrister from the bar of British Columbia to the vacant judgeship in the province. I may say to my hon. friend that that subject will be considered immediately after the close of this session. Up to the present time we have been so much occupied with the business of the session that I have not had any discussion with the Prime Minister or my colleagues on the subject.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—All I have to say is that I hope we will get justice and fair-play, and that a gentleman from the province will be appointed. Sir Oliver Mowat filled the last appointment in British Columbia with a gentleman from that province.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have made an appointment in British Columbia from the bar of the province since I became Minister of Justice.

THIRD READING.

Bill (139) "An Act to incorporate the Northern Commercial Telegraph Company, Limited."—(Hon. Mr. Macdonald, B.C.)

LAKE CHAMPLAIN AND ST. LAWRENCE SHIP CANAL COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (in the absence of Hon. Mr. Clemow) moved the third reading of Bill (99) "An Act to incorporate the Lake Champlain and St. Lawrence Ship Canal Company."

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I intend to oppose the third reading of this bill. The subject of the bill concerns very materially the trade and commerce of the country. It will affect, I think, to a very considerable extent, the trade of the St. Lawrence, and, at all events, it was brought down to us at such a very late period of the session that we had no opportunity of considering fully the provisions of the bill. There was a very small attendance of the Railway Committee. I think there were only fifteen members altogether, and the bill ought at all events to be postponed for another year.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—We had not the advantage of having the opinion of the government in reference to the details of the measure or the measure itself, although as I understand some members of the government in the other House were very strongly opposed to the bill. Under all these circumstances, it is very desirable that this measure should not go through this session, but that it should be postponed until next year. For that reason, I move that the bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read a third time this day six months.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is a little unusual to move in this way against a private bill without giving notice of the intention to do so. The hon. gentleman from Rideau division was out of the House, and I presume had no reason at all to suppose that this unusual course would be taken.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Oh, yes, he had.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is true this bill came down to this House at a very late stage of the session, and I felt that way yesterday when I took the liberty of objecting to the suspension of the rule in favour of this bill. But when I came to examine my file of bills, as introduced in the House of Commons, I found that this bill had been introduced on the 24th March. That is not an unreasonably late period of the session, considering that the session began in the month of February. Then the hon. gentleman from York said he had understood the government had been opposed to this bill, but it appears that one of the reasons why the bill did not reach this House earlier, was that the government, or some of the ministers, took time to examine the bill carefully and to go into the whole subject of the desirability of allowing it to become law. After that they were satisfied that the bill should become law, it having been first amended in certain particulars which the government thought desirable. So that really, if this bill comes to us differently from other bills, it is rather due to the fact that it has had more consideration than the ordinary private bill which comes here. It has been considered, not only by the committee of the other House and by the committee of our own House, but it has been carefully considered by the government also, or by those members of the government who would be interested in the subject of railways and canals. The fact is that this measure does not call for any public money. It simply asks for the right to build a canal which has been strongly recommended by the international commission on waterways which sat about a year ago, and it is a work the construction of which would be of the greatest advantage to the city of Montreal in particular, and to the St. Lawrence region in general, and beneficial also to the western part of the Dominion whose products would be afforded a way of getting into the United States if it were so desired. Hon. gentlemen appear to be under the impression that trade which had reached Montreal on its way to the ocean might be diverted to New York by way of this canal. No hon. gentlemen who stop to reflect for a moment would suppose that trade which was at Montreal, at the head of ocean navigation, would turn and go through some hundreds of miles of canal navigation for the purpose of reaching tide water again at the port of New York unless for consumption in New York. I regret that the hon. gentleman from York should have thought it his duty to move against this bill. I cannot see myself that there is the slightest reason for not passing this bill If the incorporators named in it are able to go on with the work themselves, or if they are able to induce other capitalists to take hold of it and go on with the enterprise, it will be a good thing and of the greatest possible advantage to Canada, and if the other great work which my hon. friend from Rideau division has had charge of, the Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal, be constructed within a reasonable time, the work which is provided for in this bill will be a very important link in the chain of communication between the west and the east, of which the Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal would be itself a link. I trust the House will not, at this stage and without any notice whatever, summarily reject a bill to which I for one can see no reasonable ground of objection.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—It is somewhat surprising that those of us who live in or near Montreal are so obtuse that we cannot see all the advantages in this bill that the hon. member for Halifax does.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman who moved the third reading lives in Montreal.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I was referring to the remarks of the hon. member for Halifax. Now, I do not say that this canal would not be a benefit to both Canada and Montreal, but I do say that it is too vast and too great an undertaking for any one to be able to give judgment upon it, who did not know anything about it until yesterday or the day before, and to be asked to pronounce upon it now. The very reason that the hon. member for Halifax gave that the bill was introduced in the other House on the 24th March and has been there ever since, is good reason for us to suppose there was something that was not just straight about it, or else it would have gone through a great deal quicker. This may be a good thing for the country, but I say that more time is wanted for us to decide upon it. It is very true what the hon. member for Halifax has just said, that they ask for no money, and if they can get capital to build this it may be a very good thing, but we must not forget one thing, that it ties up anybody else from doing anything for three years, and they have seven years to complete the work. I am not a member of the Railway Committee, but I said this morning in the Railway Committee that it would be better to postpone this bill and give us some more time to know what to do with it. Now there are several things that are very indefinite about this bill but there was no use in saying anything more about it—where does this canal start from? They say opposite or below Montreal, but the bill says they are to start anywhere in the parish of Chambly. That is a pretty long range. I think they had better be more definite and state where they are going to run before they come to ask us for this charter. It is a very valuable franchise to give, and I for one would be sorry, if it is going to be such a good thing for Montreal and Canada, to stop it; but until we get more time to look into it, there is no help for us, who do not approve of this hasty legislation, but to vote for the motion of the hon. member for York and I for one shall do so, not that I consider it a good thing to throw this out, but because, if it is a good thing, they should give us more time to discuss the project another year. The last day of the session is no time to bring this bill to us and ask us to pass it, and I doubt very much if it is wise to grant a charter such as this to a private company at all. On that, however, I will not express an opinion, but I do think that, had the promoters of this bill done what I asked them to do this morning, postpone it for a time, it would have been much wiser, and that is what I should like to see done. I feel quite sure that the good sense of this House will lead hon. gentlemen to vote for the motion of the hon. member for York and give us time to consider this bill more carefully at another session.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—This canal is to start at the head of the Chambly Canal, on the Richelieu side, and to end on the line of Chambly County on the St. Lawrence side.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—The bill does not say so.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It does, and it is meant that the canal should end between St. Lambert and Longueuil in order not to pass by Montreal, but to be a feeder for Montreal. As a matter of fact, we know that the lumber starting from here goes down to Montreal, has to go around over one hundred miles to Sorel to ascend the Richelieu River in order to reach the United States, where it is sold. Now all this trade will come to Montreal, and instead of losing forty-eight hours or more to reach the Richelieu River, the head of the Chambly Canal, it would, by this canal, be reached in a very few hours. The same thing would avail for the coal, which comes from the States and from Lake Champlain and Whitehall Canal, which come by this direction, and there would be a considerable saving in the price of the coal on the Montreal market. My hon. friend opposes the bill because it comes before us so late in the session; but that is no fault of the promoters. It has been delayed in the other House. I may state that the government did not want this bill to go ahead before it could be examined thoroughly by the Minister of Railways; it was carefully examined and there was a very long discussion upon it which lasted over two or three sittings of the Railway Committee of the House of Commons, and I speak from my personal knowledge when I say that it was Sir Charles Tupper who succeeded in settling the difficulty which existed in the minds of some of the hon. gentlemen of the committee, as to the advisability of the government taking hold of this project as a public work. Sir Charles Tupper suggested that in order to give full control to the government before this work should go on, the following should be added: "This Act shall come into force on a day to be named by proclamation of the Governor in Council to that effect." By adding that to the bill the government can take hold of the work whenever it feels disposed to do so, and can even prevent the work going on if they think, from a national point of view, it is better that this canal should not be constructed. But all those who have studied the question—people appointed by the two governments—have reported in favour of the construction of this canal. I may say that I have before me letters from the French board of trade recommending the passage of the bill. The Board of Trade of Montreal has not pronounced upon it, because although the question has come up it has been adjourned; but as a matter of fact, as has been stated, there can be no question of the trade of the St. Lawrence being diverted towards Lake Champlain through that canal. The only trade that will go through is the trade that needs to go there to the States via Lake Champlain. So it seems to me that when a company asks to be allowed to construct by private capital, without asking one cent of subsidy, a canal which will save over one hundred miles in the transportation of the necessaries of life, that this bill should be received with favour, and it is no fault of the promoters of this bill that it has come to us at this late hour. It has been stated that more care has been given to this bill by the other House than to bills in general, and that more time should be given us also. I must declare that we examined it this morning in the Committee of Railways and Canals and each clause was carefully considered and it is quite an exceptional case, it seems to me, that a bill with 41 clauses of this importance should have passed after being closely scrutinized without one single amendment.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—May I ask the hon. gentleman if there has been any survey made of this canal, and have plans and specifications been prepared?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I have seen plans. Of course it is provided that they should be submitted to the Governor in Council before being accepted. I know, for instance, that there is a difference, which struck me at the time as most extraordinary, between the level of the Richelieu River and the St. Lawrence at Longueuil of over seventy feet. I quite understand that that would be for the advantage of the company in the water power that would be obtained by this canal. As to the specifications being ready I could not say, but there is an approximate estimate of the cost which has been arrived at by the engineer who has done the work. How far it has been carried I am unable to say.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I sympathize somewhat with the idea that has been expressed by the hon. member from York and my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Ogilvie) that this seems a very hasty way to pass judgment on a matter of this importance. We are accustomed to pass railway bills in some sections of the country, and give considerable latitude to the companies in regard to the location of their lines, and without having before us when we pass the bills any very definite plans of the route, the cost and other particulars; but this appears to me to be a matter of more than ordinary importance. It is opening up a means of communication in one of the most important sections of the whole Dominion, and certainly a means of communication that must in the future affect to a very large extent, the course of trade in this Dominion. I for one feel very much embarrassed to know how I should vote on such a question as that which is presented to the House to-night. We have really no very definite information before the House; I do not know what has been presented to the House of Commons, but until yesterday my attention was not directed to this matter at all. I do not wish to stand in the way of an enterprise of this character, if it is really of the importance claimed for it and is likely to confer the benefits upon the country which the hon. gentleman who has just spoken has referred to. But, on the other hand, it is a matter of such great importance that it does seem to me that this House should be placed in possession of full information with regard to the cost of this work, the exact location of the work, and the prospective trade, which it is expected to develop, before we pass judgment on so important a matter. Perhaps there are other hon. members who are better acquainted with the locality than I am. Living at a distance from it, I certainly feel very much embarrassed, and would hesitate to give my sanction to a measure of this importance without fuller information and fuller time to consider it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Would the hon. gentleman allow me to call his attention to the fact that a bill was passed here two or three days ago to incorporate the Georgian Bay Canal Company, which contemplates a work of as great public importance as this, and no question was raised.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—That bill was before us nearly all session.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have heard of that for the last fifty years.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The bill was not before us.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—But the subject was, and it was discussed here very fully. We had plans posted up in the halls of the Senate, and had ample opportunity to inspect them, and a special committee of this House has been considering its merits. While I was not a member of that committee, I had an opportunity of attending some of its meetings and hearing the evidence which was given, and was in a position to form some opinion with regard to the merits of the work. And more than that, I know my attention has been called to that project, not only this session, but for several sessions. I have read a good deal on the subject and had formed an opinion on it even when it was first introduced this session, and was very glad to have a further opportunity of studying the subject during the sessions of the committee which were held in the adjoining room. But this project is in an entirely different position. I am only speaking for myself; but, so far as I am personally concerned, this matter was not brought to my attention in any way until yesterday.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—In considering the advisability of this canal, we must consider that we ship millions of feet of lumber from Ottawa and this canal saves about 150 miles, and to the extent that it saves mileage the lumber interests are improved. Take our western grain; if it finds its way to the States through this canal, with a saving of 150 miles, the canal is a benefit.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I think when an hon. gentleman gives his testimony he should bear in mind that it is a very essential matter that, in speaking the truth, he should speak the whole truth. While my hon. friend from DeLorimier told us the truth about what was done in committee he did not suggest to this House the actual question before the committee. I do not know what was stated in the other House, but I think it would be only fair when the hon. gentleman said that this bill was thoroughly studied in our committee, that he should have told us that it was carried in committee by a majority of one.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I was speaking as to the opportunity of examining it now or next session. We examined each clause in detail and each clause was carried unanimously. I was not speaking of what took place at the adjournment. I was speaking of the clauses being carried.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—As to the impression made upon the mind of the committee, I venture to make a motion in committee, founded on the sentiments expressed by my hon. friend opposite, that it was a measure that would require to be looked into more carefully to postpone the bill. There was not a word about the reference to committee by my hon. friend from De Lorimier. The impression made on the House was that the committee sanctioned the bill. I say half of the committee was of the mind that it was a bill of such a nature that we required to know more about it. When the vote was taken, it was carried by a majority of one. I do not think it was a fair argument to try and impress the House with the idea that the bill was examined by the committee and met with its approval.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—In the committee this morning I did not raise any opposition to the bill, but I voted for the motion of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken to postpone the bill for one session until we had an opportunity of knowing more about it. I did it exactly for the reasons which have been given by the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland. It is a matter of great importance and deserves very careful consideration. We know how the canals are built and how they are supported. They are government works, and they do not pay for the oil for greasing the gates. They do not even pay running expenses and all the charges put on them absolutely disappear. Now here is a canal, if it is of any value, which will be a most important link in the whole canal system of the country. Its importance cannot be exaggerated. Is this a project which is likely to remunerate legitimately a private company or a joint stock company depending upon the revenue? I say obviously it is not. This canal, if ever built, will be built by the government and run on the same plan as the rest of the canals in the country, or this company which is now trying to get a charter will have to sell out or be bought out, and my own opinion is that the giving of this charter now will not advance the realization of the project, but will rather impede it. The bill is a very intricate one, full of detail, evidently thought out with great care, and the committee had not sufficient means of examining it.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—My hon. friend from Montreal overlooks the fact that we are living in a new legislative age. I have had more bills placed on my desk this last week than during all the previous part of the session. We must get our eyesight sharpened up so that we will be able to look into bills at a moment's notice. We must become educated in that respect. I have noticed in the last two sessions that the most of the legislation has come to us in the last ten days of the session, which I think is a very improper and unjust thing, both to the country and to the senators who are expected to deal in an intelligent manner with the measures placed before them. I was going to say it is a disgrace. I say it is a very improper thing that the most important legislation of the session should come down at so late a period. I sympathize with my hon. friends from Montreal, and I voted with them, and against having the dry docks in Montreal. I see now that they do not want any improvements in Montreal. I am going to vote for the bill because there is no government aid asked for. They say they are going on with the enterprise without government aid, and I do not think it would be right to debar capitalists from going in there and spending money. Therefore, I shall have the pleasure of voting for this bill.

The Senate divided on the amendment, which was lost on the following division :—

NORTH-WEST IRRIGATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of Bill (146) "An Act to amend and consolidate the North-west Irrigation Acts of 1894 and 1895."

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State if any change was made in the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Calgary?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No change was made. The amendment, as moved by the hon. gentlemen from Calgary, is in the bill. It will go to the other House and the hon. gentleman himself will be here to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time and passed.

FISHERIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (166) "An Act in further amendment of the Fisheries Act." He said: This bill consists of but one clause, and that clause is the postponement of the provisions of the Revised Statutes of Canada relating to the discharging of saw-dust into rivers. This question has been frequently before this House, and the object of the bill is to postpone the operation of the law, as it now stands, until the 1st day of May, 1899. I understand that persons interested in the mills in the Ottawa River and elsewhere have the idea that it will give them sufficient time to see if they can make some beneficial use of the saw-dust. They express themselves very confidently, and so the government propose that they shall have an extension of twelve months in which to carry on their experiments. The practice has been one way, and the law another way, for a long series of years, and this is another year of grace to those who have mills upon the streams from which it is desirable that saw-dust should be excluded. Every hon. member thoroughly understands the actual situation and knows what will be the effect of this bill.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Is this positively the last time of asking?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think so. It is the final postponement.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I am really surprised that the government should again call upon us to continue this nuisance. It has been in existence for the last thirty years, and it has always been the same story that we hear to-day—the last time of asking. I have brought this matter before the House every session for the last ten years, and it has always been the last time of calling. This is another subterfuge to get another year's extension. I am surprised at the government, because last year they said positively they would enforce the law—and particularly when these mill-owners have been violating the law openly for the last six weeks. It is monstrous to think that these mill-owners can defy the law. If it were a poor man who was contravening the law he would be hauled up at once. The owner of a small mill, if he permitted saw-dust to drop into a stream would be fined for it, but these men, because they are wealthy, can defy this government and all governments.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Yes, and the hon. Secretary of State knows it. I protest against this bill in the name of the people of this community. We have suffered too long. Our river has been injured in a variety of ways. It is a standing disgrace. If you go to Grenville to-morrow and return by steamer you will come back amazed that such a nuisance has been allowed to continue from year to year. Still the government permits the saw-dust nuisance to continue, and the last government was just as bad.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Worse.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Not because last year the Minister of Justice told me he was determined to enforce the law. The Minister of Fisheries told me the same, but some change has come over the spirit of their dream, and now they ask the parliament to sanction another extension. I protest against having any further extension given to these men. It is unpleasant for me to have to take this stand, living as I do on friendly terms with these people. The Senate can pass this bill, but look at the position we will occupy before the country! We have by unmistakable majorities, decided time and again that this nuisance shall be stopped, but still the government permit it to continue. They would not do it for a poor man. Last year two men were drowned near Montebello by an explosion of saw-dust in the river and I have known instances of narrow escapes from death from these explosions. Still the nuisance is permitted to continue, because this legislation would interfere with some wealthy men. It is very wrong that the government should do such an injustice. The other day when it was necessary to sink a shaft to construct a pier for the Interprovincial bridge opposite this city, the engineers had to sink through sixty feet of saw-dust. It remains for this House to say whether we will permit these mill-owners to perpetuate this great evil on the community. I have performed my duty; I can do no more. In the early part of the season I brought this matter before the notice of the government, and they told me the law was in operation, and that anybody could lay information. I told the government then, as I tell them now, that the people of this country would not be informers—that it was the duty of the government to enforce their laws. I hope this Dominion has not come to such a pass that it cannot enforce its laws. At one time it was understood in the United States that wealthy people could disregard the laws of that country. I hope we have more respect for our laws; I hope we will not destroy our reputation as a law-abiding people by permitting an open and flagrant violation of the law to continue. So far as I am concerned, I cannot vote for this bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Give it a small hoist—say a week.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—You must either stop this nuisance now, or it will continue. If you give them until the 1st of May next, they will come back next session for another extension.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, no.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I say yes, yes, and every one knows it. I speak by the book. The mill-owners say they are going to utilize saw-dust in making calcium carbide for acetylene gas. The quantity of saw-dust that could be used for that purpose is so insignificant that it would not consume the refuse of one of the small mills. It is merely a subterfuge. Why have they not done something in the past? Some of the mill-owners have erected machinery for destroying the saw-dust, but others have not. It is for the government to enforce our laws, and if they say they cannot do so, the sooner they resign and place men in power who will enforce the laws the better for the country. If the Senate think proper to pass this bill they can do so. I am consistent at any rate. I have adhered to my position from the first, and they cannot influence me. I do not know whether others can be influenced. I have simply done my duty to my country, and I leave the responsibility, hon. gentlemen, on your shoulders to say whether you will allow this bill to pass.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I cannot see why they could not make that experiment in three or four months.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—If you are bound to pass the bill, let it be amended so as to have the extension only until the 1st of January. I know the feeling of the great majority of this community is with me, but if you must pass the bill, let the limit be the 1st of January next.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the second time on a division.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the suspension of the 41st rule.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—No, I object.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If you want to amend the bill you can do it in committee.

The SPEAKER—Does the hon. gentleman persist in his objection?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—No, I will move an amendment in committee

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I move to amend the first clause by inserting the word "January" in place of "May."

The committee divided on the amendment which was carried.

Yeas, 16; nays, 12.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL, from the committee, reported the bill with an amendment which was concurred in.

The bill as amended was read the third time and passed.

THIRD READING.

Bill (160) "An Act respecting the north-western, northern and north-eastern boundaries of the province of Quebec."—(Hon. Mr. Mills.)

THE FRANCHISE BILL.

CONSIDERATION OF COMMONS MESSAGE.

The Order of the Day being called,

Consideration of the Message from the House of Commons disagreeing to the amendments made by the Senate to (Bill 16) "An Act to repeal the Electoral Franchise Act, and to further amend the Dominion Elections Act."—(Honourable Mr. Mills.)

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I move that this House do not agree to those amendments. I dare say hon. gentlemen have read the resolution of the House of Commons, and the grounds of their dissent. The reason given for dissenting to the amendments moved by the hon. gentleman from Richmond (Mr. Miller), and the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Ferguson), are stated at page 637 of our Minutes of Proceedings. I need not detain the House with a discussion of the various reasons which have been given in this message. Hon. gentlemen are aware that the two amendments proposed by the hon. gentleman from Richmond are amendments that were proposed in the House of Commons before the bill came here, and while it was under consideration, and were very fully discussed and rejected by the House of Commons. I do not think that this bill stands exactly upon the footing of an ordinary bill. In the first place, it was a question which was put in issue at the elections and a majority was returned of those who were favourable to the principle involved in this bill. In the next place, it specially concerns the constitution of the lower chamber, and it has been introduced there as one specially concerning them. The amendment proposed here by the hon. gentleman from Richmond was, I think, proposed by some member on the front benches in the House of Commons, was very fully discussed and, as I have said, was there rejected; and it was taking rather an unusual course for this House to propose the very same amendment that had been proposed in the House of Commons, fully considered and rejected by the body especially concerned and affected by the measure. Then, with regard to the other amendments objected to, they do not stand exactly upon the same footing. I refer to the amendments proposed by the hon. member for Marshfield. Let me say in regard to those amendments that they are in violation of the principle laid down here as amendments relating to a measure which specially concerns the constitution of the House of Commons. I stated, when my hon. friend proposed these amendments to this House, the objection which I had to them—that the effect will be to take a very large number of persons, if parties are so disposed, out of the list of persons who vote secretly and put them in the list of voters which may be practically known by an inquiry, and in order to accomplish that result it is only necessary that the voters should be sworn, and so the secrecy which the Act is intended to secure will be withdrawn. I say, however, that the hon. gentleman's proposal, which is practically the introduction of the Ontario system with regard to every sworn voter in the province of Prince Edward Island, is not in so high a degree an objectionable amendment, or series of amendments, as that which was proposed by the hon. gentleman from Richmond. I ask in this matter the consideration of the reasons of the House of Commons for disagreement, and I ask that this House do not adhere to these amendments.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think it is necessary for me to say, that I regret very much the action of the House of Commons in connection with this very important question. I regret it the more from the tone which characterized the remarks particularly of the hon. the Solicitor General, when discussing it in that House. I do not know that I am liberty, under the practice that govern the two Houses, to proceed further upon that point. I can, however, compliment the hon. Minister of Justice in not following, in that respect, in the footsteps of his colleagues, and I shall endeavour, in dealing with this question, to be as moderate as he has been in advancing my views as to the right of the Senate to interfere in a question of this kind; and in doing so, I shall confine my remarks at first to the reasons which have been given by the House of Commons for the rejection of these very important amendments. My hon. friend has already read the clauses; I will re-read them and comment upon them, and express the views that I hold upon the question, and in doing so I think I shall be expressing the views of the great majority of this Senate. First, the House of Commons object to the whole of the amendments which we have made, not only that of the hon. gentleman for Richmond, but also those of my hon. friend from Marshfield. The House will remember that when the hon. senator from Marshfield moved his amendments, he pointed out the absolute necessity for amending the law in those particular points to which he referred, in order to make the act workable in his province ; and that they should also be objected to by the House of Commons is incomprehensible, unless it was for the reason which they give in their last paragraph, that this House had no right to interfere with the action of that House upon the question of the Franchise. The first paragraph, containing the first reason for objecting to the amendments is :

Because the amendments made by the Honourable the Senate to the bill, excepting from its operation the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba and providing for a special revision of the voters' list in those provinces for elections to this House, is inconsistent with and subversive of the general principle of the bill.

To that objection I demur, and for this reason : I endeavoured, in discussing this question before, to point out the difference between an interference with the franchise, which is the right to vote, and the election law, which provides the list and which gives directions for the enforcement of it. I need not pursue that question much further : neither do I believe that the amendments which were made can possibly be construed into an infringement, or that they are an infringement of, or subversive of the general principle of the bill, for this reason : we laid down the principle when we commenced this discussion that we would not oppose the principle of adopting the local franchises for a Dominion election. The ground upon which we based that opinion, although individually opposed to it, was the fact that it was one of the questions submitted to the people, and as such we thought it right, however, contrary it might be to the views that we hold upon that subject, to allow the pledge which was made by the government to be carried out and the local franchises adopted. But while we did that, the Senate affirmed the right to change the mode of procedure in the preparing of the lists and passed a resolution for no other reason or purpose, than to secure those rights to the individual elector of which he may have been deprived, either by design or by accident. We thought the best way to do that in the three provinces alluded to in this paragraph, would be by adopting the same principle that prevails in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. That is, giving the right to every subject to appeal to a judicial power in order to right any wrong that may have been committed ; or, in other words, to enable him to enjoy the franchise which is given him under the local laws, of which he may possibly have been deprived. That is the ground that we took, and it is a ground that I think we should adhere to ; more than that, it is to my mind, in the line of some of the amendments which the ministers themselves had proposed and which remain in the law at present, and will be in the statute-book if the bill becomes law. The second objection is :

That the procedure proposed by the Honourable the Senate for securing the revision of such lists, under the authority of this parliament, is wholly inadequate, and cannot be rendered effective without creating complicated and costly machinery incompatible with the object of the bill.

To that objection I also demur, and for this reason : the whole object of the amendments was to enable the elector who might be, by the action of the assessor or those who prepared the list, deprived of his right to go to the courts, and the only machinery necessary to accomplish that, is the simple machinery which would enable him to appeal to the judge in order to have a wrong righted and his name placed upon the list. The objection to that is—and it is the only objection that presents itself to my mind, that has any force that in our amendment we provide for placing him upon the list without saying "for Dominion purposes." That is a difficulty, and consequently if that were passed as it is, it might place a voter upon the voters list of the province, and thereby give a right—that is if their interpretation be correct—to the person who is not on the provincial list, to vote for provincial purposes. That was not the intention or object of the amendment. The intention of the mover was simply to enable the elector to be placed upon the list for Dominion purposes, and if the clause is objectionable in that respect, it can easily be amended by adding the words "for Dominion purposes." The third reason is :

That the passage of the amendment by the Senate after its rejection by the House of Commons is inconsistent with the undoubted right and privilege of this House to determine the principles of the Franchise under which its members are elected, and is the more unwarranted in that the country has emphatically pronounced in favour of the principle of the bill.

I admit the latter clause, that the country has pronounced in favour of the principle of the bill. The principle of the bill we conceded. It was only the details with which we attempted to interfere ; but it will strike as singular, I think, every member of the Senate, and it will strike with still more force every man who knows anything of parliamentary procedure and who has studied this question, and the rights of both Houses of parliament in dealing with different questions; that because, forsooth, the Lower House has supported by a majority any measure, therefore the Senate has no right to interfere. If the majority of the Lower House had not affirmed the principle and the details of every bill that comes from that House, it would not be passed, and consequently would not be sent to this chamber for approval or disapproval. If we were to admit the doctrine that we are not to deal with a measure that comes from the Lower House because a majority of that House has affirmed the principle of it, then we would have nothing whatever to do with any bill, except to be the mere recorders of the acts of the Lower House. They would probably give us the right to make verbal changes, and that would be the sole duty of this second chamber. Then they laid down the principle that because it interferes with the franchise that elects the members to that house, we have no right to interfere with the bill. That is a principle that has been recognized neither in this country in the past, nor in England. So far as this country is concerned, the hon. Secretary of State took the responsibility on himself when the question of the franchise was brought before the Senate by the late government, to move its rejection in toto. That would be a direct and positive interference with the rights of the Lower House according to the doctrine laid down by this resolution, because at that time the government that was led by Sir John Macdonald, had an overpowering majority in the House of Commons in support of that measure. I am speaking of the bill of 1885. This was taking on themselves the same liberty, and a great deal more than we attempt to assume, because the then opposition moved a six months' hoist, What we did, was first to acknowledge the principle involved in the bill, and then to assert our right to change the details of the bill in order to make it workable and reserve and conserve the rights of the electors in the different parts of the province. In looking at English precedent on this question you will find, if you read the debates in the House of Lords, when they rejected the Franchise Bill that had been passed in the House of Commons, the question arose as to the right of the Lords to interfere with the Franchise Bill which had then passed the Commons by a large majority, for extension of the franchise in England. Lord Salisbury took the ground that, as a redistribution bill, which had been promised in connection with the franchise, had not been laid before either House of parliament, and that until the Lords were made acquainted with the scheme of redistribution, they had the right to defer the coming into operation of that measure, or to defeat it altogether, and the Earl of Morley, who was then speaking on behalf of the Gladstone government, used this language in the debate. He said that "he did not for an instant deny the constitutional right of their lordships to reject or amend the bill." Now, I know it is contended by many and with a great deal of force that the powers vested in the Senate are those only which are embodied in a clause of the Confederation Act, and that all their powers are there defined, and therefore we are not governed either by precedent or by the actions of the House of Lords or the Commons of England. That may or may not be technically correct, but whether correct or not, we know that the British constitution is founded on precedent, and we in this country, whenever we discuss questions of a constitutional character, not only consult the Confederation Act which empowers us to legislate on certain subjects, but we always refer to English authorities and the course which has been pursued and the doctrines laid down by both Houses of the British parliament; and we are not departing in any particular from the course usually adopted in this country, and in every other British colony, when we appeal to British precedent in support of any position we may take. Having discussed thus far the objections of the House of Commons to the course taken by the Senate, it would be not only inconsistent with the position we have assumed, but it would be derogatory to the character and standing of this House if we permitted a reason of that kind to be accepted, under any circumstances, to guide us in future. We have, I contend, full power and authority under the constitution and by the precedents of the Imperial parliament to justify the course we have taken. It would be much better, had those in charge of this measure in the lower House merely objected to our amendments, instead of giving such reasons for objecting. It is always unfortunate when a reason is given which is not based on the constitution under which we live, and the precedents of the mother country. I do not know that it is necessary for me to go further than this in laying down what I believe to be the rights of the Senate. Under the circumstances, it will be my duty to oppose, on behalf of the majority of the Senate, at present at least, the motion, or the suggestion of a motion, by the hon. gentleman opposite, that this House will not insist on the amendments which have been made. I am prepared to take the opposite course to that which he has followed, unless my hon. friend expresses a willingness to modify the motion he has made.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My motion was

That the Senate doth not insist on their second, fourth, fifth, seventh, eighth, ninth, tenth and eleventh amendments to the said bill, to which the House of Commons have disagreed.

That was the proposition that I indicated in the address which I gave to the House, that I thought the same objections did not lie against the amendment made by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, that did lie against the amendment made by the hon. gentleman from Richmond; that what the hon. gentleman from Richmond proposed was practically a continuance of a voters' list made up precisely on the same principle that the voters' list is made up under the Dominion law as it now stands; that that was so directly at variance with the principle upon which the government, as it is now constituted, went to the country, or at variance with the principle of the provincial voters' list, because it is a substitution of a Dominion voters' list for a provincial voters' list, that it was impossible the government should accept it; but my hon. friend has addressed himself to the House, and he has not indicated that he is ready to consider anything approaching a compromise on the lines that I have suggested. If my hon. friend is not prepared to act on the lines which I have indicated, then I must insist on the proposal as it came from the House of Commons.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I must apologize to the hon. gentleman. I confess that I did not understand him to make any such suggestion when he addressed the House. I understand now, that the principal objection of the government, is to the amendment made by the hon. gentleman from Richmond, but that he would not object to accept the other amendments affecting Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is my statement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Under the circumstances, I would suggest to the hon. gentleman the withdrawal of his motion, and I will accept on behalf of the Senate his proposition, and make a motion which I think will meet his views, and then it will be on record. I make a motion in this way:

That the Senate do not insist upon the second and fifth amendments made to the said Bill (16) "An Act to repeal the Electoral Franchise Act, and to further amend the Dominion Elections Act."

That will meet the hon. gentleman's views. I make this motion with the understanding that I shall move immediately afterwards that we do insist upon the other amendment to which my hon. friend objects.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Then my hon. friend will move that as an amendment to my proposition?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If you so desire it. I will move it as an amendment.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I would ask my hon. friend to embody in his amendment the fact that we have a right to amend the bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I will provide for that later.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I suppose there is no doubt as to the numbers. I have stated the particular amendments to which we do not object.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no doubt about the numbers. I now beg to move :

That the Senate do insist upon the seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth of the amendments made by them to the bill from the House of Commons (No. 16) intituled : "An Act to repeal the Electoral Franchise Act, and to further amend the Dominion Elections Act," for the following reason :—

Because the said amendments are necessary to adapt the Dominion Elections Act, as modified by the said bill, to the conditions of Prince Edward Island, where there are no voters' lists, and to provide adequate means for recording and determining, in a manner similar to that provided by the provincial law, objections to the votes of any person whose qualification to vote is questioned.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Perhaps my hon. friend will include the fourth amendment with those on which he does not insist.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, I leave that and the eleventh to the hon. gentleman who took the responsibility of proposing those amendments :

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I now move

Resolved, That a message be sent to the House of Commons by one of the Masters in Chancery, to acquaint that House as follows :—

1. That the Senate doth not insist upon the second and fifth of the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 16) intituled : "An Act to repeal the Electoral Franchise Act, and to further amend the Dominion Elections Act."

2. That the Senate doth insist upon the seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth of the said amendments, for the following reason :—

Because these amendments are necessary to adapt The Dominion Elections Act, as modified by the said bill, to the circumstances of Prince Edward Island, where there are no voters' lists, and to provide adequate means for recording and determining, in a manner similar to that provided by the provincial law, objections to the votes of any persons whose qualification to vote is questioned.

3. That the Senate doth insist on its constitutional right to reject or amend the said bill, or any bill of a similar character that may at any time be presented to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Would it not be better to include the fourth and eleventh amendments with those on which the hon. gentleman does not insist ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No ; we are not responsible for these amendments. I confess I am not able to explain to the Senate the amendments to which my hon. friend the Minister of Justice refers, because I am unable to find on record any mention made of them, or the remarks which would give the reasons for proposing them. How that has been left out of the report I do not know. Consequently, I leave it to the hon. gentleman who made the amendments to explain why the government, as represented in the other chamber, reject the amendments made by members of the government in the Senate. This motion will meet the suggestion of the hon. member for Victoria.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the hon. gentleman will excuse me, the message does not dispose of the eleventh amendment at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, neither the 4th nor the 11th amendment. My motion does not interfere or deal with the 4th or the 11th amendment. My reason for that is they were amendments made by the Minister of Justice, or the Secretary of State, I am not sure which ; and, as far as my recollection serves me, at the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax. In looking at the records, as I have already stated, to ascertain what reasons were advanced for the suggestion of those amendments, I could not find any reference to them at all. If my hon. friend desires to retain those, or not to insist upon them, of course he can make a motion.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is not speaking for himself, but speaking for the majority of the House, and the 2nd and 5th amendments he agrees to abandon. Then he is not insisting upon the 4th and 11th amendments. I think the 4th and 11th amendments might be put in along with the 2nd and 5th, because the hon. gentleman is speaking for a majority of the Senate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then that would be that we do not insist upon those.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That can be done.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We had some discussion, I remember, as to the precise meaning of that amendment.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That amendment was suggested by the hon. member from Halifax.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—It was simply a transposition of the clauses to make the meaning clear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a mere question of phraseology.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then the motion is to be that the Senate do not insist on the second, fourth, fifth and eleventh amendments. That includes the two for which my hon. friend is responsible and the others for which we are responsible, and that the Senate does insist on the seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth amendments for the reasons given in my motion. I omitted one thing in moving these resolutions. I should like to have the statement of the Minister of Justice, and I have no doubt he will affirm that made by his chief in the other House: the hon. premier stated, when this question was under discussion—and if my recollection serves me right, the Minister of Finance also, but I will not be positive—that they would bring under the notice of the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Manitoba the opinion which had been expressed in the Commons in reference to a right of appeal to a judge by those who thought they had been deprived of their rights; and that they would urge upon these governments, the passage of a law which would give the right of appeal to a judge in such cases as those to which I have alluded. As we have come to an amicable settlement, in the interest of peace in this matter, I should like the hon. Minister of Justice to say, in order to be of record, that he is in accord with the utterances of his chief on this point. Though we have given way upon this question, most of us have very strong convictions that the right of appeal should exist, and if the prime minister or the Minister of Justice will carry out the suggestions which were made in the Commons, and which I have no doubt he would be prepared to repeat—that is, to sustain the position his chief has taken—it will be an additional reason for not insisting upon all the amendments which we made, and some of which we have now agreed to drop.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say to my hon. friend that of course, one has to communicate with local governments upon a matter wholly within their jurisdiction with some degree of moderation, and I have not seen the words of the prime minister to which my hon. friend has referred, but if the prime minister has spoken as my hon. friend has represented—and I do not at all question that he has done so—I shall be very glad indeed to second his effort.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suppose we have the assurance that this will be accepted by the hon. gentleman's colleagues in the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman gives us that assurance, he can now move the third reading of the Plebiscite bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have no doubt the House of Commons will accept, but I do not think they will acquiesce in the declaration of right which the hon. gentleman has made.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, I do not mind that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But I understand they will acquiesce in the decision of this House in every other respect. A communication will be made at once.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When the House agrees to our amendments, we will accept that as a declaration of our rights.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—They may reluctantly agree.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They may as we sometimes do, when we are obliged to.

The motion was agreed to.

THE PLEBISCITE BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of Bill (121) "An Act respecting the Prohibition of the Importation, Manufacture and Sale of Intoxicating Liquors."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—May I ask whether we can have any assurance that the vote under the Plebiscite bill will be taken before the 1st of January next?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The question as to the time has never been discussed, but it is intended that it shall be submitted within a reasonable period.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We have taken the appropriation for the present year and it must be between the 1st of July, 1898, and the 1st of July, 1899.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That will not do, because the House will meet again before the 1st July, 1899.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will be all over before that time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Those who are interested in this question, the prohibitionists and the liquor dealers, should know the result of the vote before the meeting of parliament, and if my hon. friend can say that it will be submitted before the next meeting of parliament, that will satisfy me.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, I think so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And I think it will satisfy my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Perley), who is the champion of the North-west in regard to prohibition; but whether my hon. friend in front of me (Mr. Vidal) who objects to the cider clause will be satisfied I do not know. There is another reason that I might advance, why the hon. gentleman might submit the question to the people, that is, that they have a penchant for spending money and this will give a good deal of patronage to a large number of their friends, and no doubt they will try and bring them in line by some means or other.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—You have got to consult the public convenience of course.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the third time and passed.

CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC WORKS GRANT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (161) "An Act respecting the payment of grants in aid of the construction of public works." He said: This bill applies only to two great public works: that is the construction of the Victoria bridge by the Grand Trunk Railway and the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. It is to authorize the Governor in Council to make advances on progress estimates on those works, inasmuch as under the wording of the subsidy as it exists it would be absolutely necessary that certain portions should be completed before any money could be paid. In reference to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, it is very well known that there are now upwards of 100 miles built, probably not one ten-mile section is absolutely finished. There may be something needed, either a bridge or culvert or something of that sort, and under the terms of the Subsidy Act the Auditor General considers he shou'd not pay any portion until each section is absolutely completed, and this is to enable the Governor in Council to make payments in the way of progress estimates. The same remark would apply to the Victoria bridge.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What is the amount for the Grand Trunk Railway?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it is $300,000 for Victoria bridge.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 1,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The first clause defines the mode of payment, and no more than $64,000 shall be paid on one section, and a sufficient amount shall be retained to finish the work if the contractors do not finish it.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 2,

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—At an earlier stage of this bill, my hon. friend the Secretary of State explained the mode of operation under it, and explained that this $64,000, which is set as the amount of the value of work done on which a payment can be made, had some reference to the $6,400 per mile.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not I. It was the hon. leader of the opposition.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend asked the question, and my hon. friend the Secretary of State acquiesced. I cannot see that that is why the amount is fixed at $6,000, because this applies only to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway and the Victoria bridge. There is no $6,400 subsidy in the case of the Victoria bridge, and no ten miles of structure. That is not the amount of the subsidy for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, which is $11,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know why the amount is fixed at that figure.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It has no reference to ten miles of railway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (167) "An Act in further amendment of the Post Office Act." He said: I have taken up this bill at this stage of the evening, because there will be very little controversy in regard to it. The bill reads as follows:—

1. Subsection 1 of section 9 of the Post Office Act, chapter 35 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by section 1 chapter 26 of the statutes of 1897 and by section 2 of chapter — of the statutes of 1898, is hereby amended by adding thereto the following paragraph:—

"(t.) Make regulations establishing a system of special delivery of mailable matter, fixing rates of charges for such special delivery, and the method of payment thereof and providing such other details as may be deemed necessary for the carrying out of such system, including payment of messengers, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act."

That last provision is to enable the Postmaster General to secure an efficient performance of the duty, and there are certain classes of persons required that ought not to be required to pass the civil service examinations before they are appointed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suppose it will be necessary for the persons whom the Postmaster General appoints to be able to read and write, or they could not deliver the letters.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then I take it for granted that they will not appoint any one that cannot read or write.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is clear enough.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the second time.

The bill passed through its final stages under a suspension of the rule.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS OF MANITOBA BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (169) "An Act to authorize the payment of certain sums of money to the province of Manitoba." He said: As I briefly explained when introducing this bill, the purport is to credit the province of Manitoba with the amount expended on the public buildings, the Government House and the Lieutenant Governor's residence. At the time that Manitoba came into the confederation, they had no public buildings and it was then distinctly understood that the public buildings should be erected by the federal government. On the 18th April, 1879, an Order in Council was passed in the following language:—

That with reference to the erection of public buildings at Winnipeg, the government of Manitoba be informed that an item will be inserted in the estimates at the next session of the Dominion Parliament for the erection of plain but sufficient buildings for the legislative assembly and for the Government House, but that the Dominion Government will not undertake the furnishing of either.

The item may have been inserted in the following session or not, I do not know; but it was inserted two or three years afterwards, and contracts were given out by the Public Works of Canada, and moneys were voted for the erection of those buildings. They happened to be erected at the time the boom was on in Manitoba, and the party who took the original contract failed, and a new contract had to be entered into at a considerable advance. From time to time the government of Manitoba pressed the government of the Dominion to credit them with the cost of those buildings. In 1885, when the general settlement was made, it was stated that they were to be charged with all local work. The controversy arose as to whether this was a local work. Manitoba maintained that it was not a local work any more than the Asylum, and a sum of $150,000 was put in the estimates for building the Lunatic Asylum. The government of Manitoba have, from time to time been pressing this amount, and it was thought wise and prudent, and only fair to the province, that the controversy on the subject should be closed, and that the sum of $284,- 456.47, which was the amount expended on the buildings, should be changed from the debit to the credit side of the account, and that the province should be paid the interest on that amount as part of its subsidy. The interest is at the rate of 5 per cent on the above mentioned amount for 15 years.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What is the whole amount proposed to be paid to Manitoba now?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The province gets the interest on a certain amount, and that amount, $284,456.47, has been transferred from the debit to the credit side of the account, and then they are to get the interest which ought to have been paid for the last 15 years, on the amount, at 5 per cent.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Then I understand the debt is cancelled and they are paid the interest?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are credited with that amount.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Who paid for the buildings in the first place?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The federal government, and charged it to them.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Then the debt is cancelled, and you pay the interest, and all the money they are to get now is the interest.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, that is all. This was charged against the capital account of the province 15 years ago. They brought it up from time to time, and pointed out that the other provinces had not been charged with such items, but had received their buildings as a free gift, and it was perfectly understood that Manitoba also was to have the buildings erected by the federal government, because it was the federal government that really erected them, and the Order in Council that was passed before the Act was enacted by parliament read as follows:—

That with reference to the erection of public buildings at Winnipeg, the government of Manitoba be informed that an item will be inserted in the estimates at the next session of the Dominion parliament for the erection of plain but sufficient buildings for the legislative assembly and for the Government House.

That was the 18th April, 1879.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—The buildings were not erected for some time after that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; the government may have put an item in the estimates, but they did not go on with the work for three years after that, I think.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Has the Manitoba government got any interest on this money?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; they are now getting the back interest they should have got. If they had not been charged with the cost of those buildings, they would have had that amount to their credit on which they would have been drawing interest. The sum of $284,456.47, they maintain, is the amount they ought to have been credited with in 1883.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They were entitled to the money.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They ought not to have been charged with it; it should have been placed to their credit, and if that had been done, they would have been drawing interest on it.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—If they did not pay interest on it, and you are going to wipe out the debt, why should they get interest on it?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I will explain to the hon. gentleman. The province of Manitoba came in with a credit to the capital account of so much, and these buildings were erected by the government and charged up to the capital account, and, therefore, if it had not been charged up to its capital account they would have been drawing the interest on that amount, and now they are receiving that.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—That is a different thing. My contention was all right, but the hon. gentleman has now given me the explanation.

Hon. Mr. DE BOUCHERVILLE—Those buildings have cost $284,000, and in the province of Quebec they gave us an old building which was worth about $40,000.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—What is the rate of interest allowed?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Five per cent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The statement made by the hon. Secretary of State in reference to the first action of the government of Canada in passing that Order in Council, is correct enough, but he made a further statement for which he had no authority and for which he can find nothing on record, to justify; and that is, that when they passed the Order in Council informing the government of Manitoba that they would place in the estimates a sum for the construction of public buildings, that it would be at the expense of the Dominion. I am very much mistaken if any such record can be found in the Privy Council, or in any statute. It is true the Dominion government erected those buildings; they advanced the money for the reason that Manitoba had no money with which to construct their buildings; but it was with the distinct understanding, at that time, that it should be charged to their capital account, and it was so charged. If there had been any other understanding at the time, the charge never would have been made, because it would have been taken out of the consolidated revenue of the Dominion. The question as to whether Manitoba, under the circumstances, should have had the buildings constructed for her at the expense of the Dominion is another question altogether. But the fact that the government which was in existence from the time of the construction of the building up to within a year or a year and a half ago, having refused to recognize that claim as a bona fide claim against the Dominion, is the best possible evidence that can be given that there was no such promise made; and when you refer to the terms of the settlement which were effected in 1885; the terms of the resolutions of 1875, which will be found on page 2775, it will show that that settlement was distinctly in lieu of all the claims which the Manitoba government had against the Dominion at that time. More than that, it was on condition that the terms of that settlement should be confirmed by an Act of the local legislature, which was passed, and was sanctioned by the Governor General, before the resolutions were passed and the settlement come to. They do contend, I know, that in that settlement it meant everything else except what they are now claiming. If the hon. gentleman had brought down the Order in Council which was passed in reply to an application made by the province of Manitoba for a recognition and a payment which is now proposed to them, he will find that it is stated distinctly and positively that they had no claim; and that it had been settled, if they had any claim, by the settlement of 1895. I was going to ask—but it skipped my mind—two or three days ago, the hon. leader of the government in this House to have copies of these Orders in Council laid upon the table before we were asked to concur in the resolutions.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think there was any such Order in Council. I tried to get a résumé of all that had been done, and I do not find any such Order in Council.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I had a copy of it among my papers, but I have not it with me. I have some little knowledge of the transaction. The hon. gentleman knows that during the absence of my colleague, the Minister of Finance, at that time, I took charge of the resolutions which were moved in the House of Commons, and effected the settlement which then took place. If this is recognized upon the principle that equitably they should be furnished with the public buildings and the government house, I suppose my hon. friend from Quebec will be making an application for a refund of the amount which it cost the province of Quebec for the construction of their new buildings. It is true Spencerwood, the governor's residence, in that province was handed over to the local authorities, as was also the old Government House property in the province of Ontario; and further, in the province of Ontario the property upon which the present building, or Government House is erected, was given to the province of Ontario upon the express condition that it should be retained as a governor's residence. An application was made on behalf of that province, during the premiership of Sir Oliver Mowat, for the surrender of that property to the province, to enable them to sell the property by which they expected to receive a sufficient amount of money to build a new residence. However, that has nothing to do with this question. But going back to the terms of the settlement, as I understood my hon. friend to say the other day when this question was first mooted, the settlement did not include the arrangement then made. The only answer I have to make to that is that the terms of the resolution itself, and the act of the Manitoba legislature, whether they should be equitably entitled to the amount of money they are now claiming is a question for parliament to decide, but I only repeat what I said the other day, that a principle is being laid down that will be seized upon by every other province; and British Columbia, I dare say, will be claiming a million dollars for the parliament buildings which they have already constructed. If it is paid to one, I see no equitable reason, why it should not be paid to the other.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I will take my million now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have had four or five settlements with Manitoba and I should like to know whether my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, could utter the same sentiments as he did a few minutes ago with reference to the saw-dust: is this to be the finally final end of all these claims, or is the Dominion treasury to be thrown open on every occasion when any difficulty arises in any province, in order to appease the appetite of politicians in consideration for something which they give in return, politically, I hesitate not to say? I hesitate not to give utterance to the belief, and the faith that is in me, that this claim never would have been recognized under any other circumstances had it not been for what has transpired within the last three or four years.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And I believe honestly and candidly that it is a return for assistance given, in the political affairs of the two parties. It only confirms the statements which will be found upon record, which I made a year or two ago, in discussing this question, that it would ultimately transpire that there was a valuable consideration given for the concessions which were then supposed to have been made by Manitoba to the party now in power upon the school question. I remember, and the House will remember, that I denounced in very strong terms the alliance which was then being formed for political purposes at the expense of a certain class of people who had been deprived of the constitutional rights to which they were entitled.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I shall certainly not ask the House to divide upon this question. I shall take a much stronger position on the other measure, which to my mind, involves a much more objectionable principle. When Manitoba entered confederation she was allowed a debt of only $472,090, upon which to draw interest at five per cent so long as that arrangement lasted. They received also, for the purpose of paying the expenses of legislation, $30,000 per annum, and an allowance of 80 cents per head, making a total of about $67,204.50. In 1876 an additional sum of $26,746.96 was added to the subsidy, making a total of $90,000. Then we come down to 1879, when an additional sum of $15,000 was added to the $90,000. In 1882 an additional grant of $50,000 was made for 10 years, and 80 cents per head based upon a population of 150,000. It must be borne in mind that there were not 150,000 people in Manitoba at the time that this allowance was made, but it was assumed to be 150,000 in order to give the province more money with which to carry on the affairs of government; at that time it made a total allowance of $120,000. In addition to this, $45,000 was given in lieu of public lands to which my hon. friend referred the other night, when he stated that they had no public lands from which to draw a revenue. The swamp lands were also given—at least one-half of them—upon condition that they should drain these lands and take their pay out of the first proceeds, and the balance was to be divided. In addition to this, 150,000 acres of land were set apart for university purposes, and then in 1882, the same year, another adjustment took place and $100,000 was given to the province upon the basis of the population, and the other additional concession that was made that they should be permitted to readjust the 80 cents per head by having a census every five years. Then at that time there was advanced, also, $150,000 on capital account to pay for local improvements and other indebtedness which they had incurred. I do not know that that can be considered a concession to Manitoba, because it was deducted from the capital account for which they received 5 per cent.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That was deducted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, that was deducted from the capital account, and consequently they could not draw interest from it after. And then, in addition, the approximate debt at the time, on which 5 per cent was paid, amounted in that settlement to about four million dollars.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Three million three hundred and eleven thousand dollars.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Well, say three and a half million; that is not very far out. So far the province's debt has been adjusted over and over again, and the claim that is now made is one which has been standing a long time, but one which has never been recognized as either a legitimate or a proper claim by the late government. I know that an expression of mine was quoted by the Minister of Finance in the discussion of this question in the other House, when the question was asked by Sir Richard Cartwright in reference to this and some other claims at that time, that that was not considered in this arrangement, but that it would be investigated, and if they had any claim it would be recognized; but a full investigation, and reading of the Order in Council, to which I have referred, established the fact that, so far as the government is concerned, they had no claim which they were prepared to recognize.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot find any record. I inquired to-day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I had it, because the present governor of Manitoba, when I was at the head of the government, made a very strong application for the recognition of this claim, and I produced that Order in Council which affected this settlement to prove to him that it had been refused on the ground that there had been a final settlement of all claims against the Dominion. I called attention a few moments ago to the resolutions which I had moved on the 10th June, 1885. The seventh resolution reads as follows:—

That the grants of land and payment authorized by the foregoing resolutions shall be made on the condition that they be accepted by the province, such acceptance being testified by an Act of the legislature thereof during the present session as a full settlement of all claims made by the said province for the reimbursement of costs incurred in the government of the disputed territories or the reference of the boundary questions to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and all other questions and claims discussed between the Dominion and provincial government up to the 10th day of January, 1885.

I do not know that language could be stronger than this, and it was quite evident that the government at the time, the framers of the resolution, had not the most unbounded confidence in the promise that had been made by those who were governing the province, and in order to meet any possible evasion of the terms of the agreement, they provided that the act of the local legislature should be passed before these resolutions were brought into force, and the additional amount given them, the 80 cents a head, and the other concessions which were made. That is the ground upon which I say it was a final settlement of that question. Then there was another concession which was made to them, which escaped my mind at the moment, that was, instead of giving to the province half of the swamp lands, which they themselves were to drain and recoup themselves out of the proceeds, we made this concession, that all the lands which were considered at the time swamp lands, should be given to the province to do what they pleased with, and to reap whatever benefits would accrue to the revenues of the province by the sale of such lands. Whether there has been a final settlement as to that point and a full concession made, I am not prepared to say. Probably my hon. friend will be able to inform the House, but whether or not they were entitled to all what was termed swamp lands——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As lands were known to be swamp lands, on reports of officials, they have been getting them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Perhaps it is fortunate for them that the settlement was made on such a basis, as after the rainy season there is a great deal more of what is termed swamp land, in that country than in the dry season. Some of the very best land on the shore of Lake Manitoba, some of the best lands in the province are so situated, and were settled upon for a number of years, till the raised waters of a wet season, when the settlers were all driven further back into the country; and I suppose, under these circumstances, if the government of Manitoba had seized the opportunity they would have been considered swamp lands and they would have obtained the benefit arising therefrom. I have taken the trouble to make this statement, not because I am opposed in toto even to the settlement with Manitoba on these terms, and for this reason: it is a young and growing country and a country to which we ought, in treating with it, to be liberal, for in proportion to the progress and prosperity of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, will be the yield to the revenue from taxation, direct and indirect. But I cannot help expressing my opinion as to the causes which led to this settlement. I believe it was one of the bargains made in order to accomplish what the government did accomplish, that is, obtain power which they now hold, otherwise it never would have been done. I shall not oppose this bill, speaking for myself individually, for the reasons I have advanced. I shall be willing at all times to be liberal in cases of this kind, and on all occasions I have given my voice and vote in favor of liberal grants for the construction of railways which are the forerunners of settlement throughout the great North-west and Manitoba; but while I think the government of Canada should be liberal in dealing with these questions, the settlement should be based on the broad principle of assisting in developing the resources of the country, and not for the reasons which I have indicated and which I firmly believe—I may be mistaken—are the ones which induced the government to make this settlement with that province. Now, might I ask my hon. friend whether the figures he has quoted as being the amount of the interest represent simple interest or compound interest?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is made up in the Finance Department in the usual way; I cannot say whether it is made up on the basis of compound interest or not.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Were the parliament buildings built at the time of this settlement?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have in my hand here a report of a debate in which it is quite clear that it was then considered an open question—I think Mr. McLelan was the Finance Minister in 1886, was he not?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, I think the hon. gentleman is correct in that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Mr. McLelan admits that it was still open.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The time I was speaking of was the time of the settlement made in 1885, under the resolutions which I proposed and the seventh of which I read to the House. What Mr. McLelan may have said in 1886 I do not know. I have already admitted that there were contentions for other concessions and other claims; but what I did say was that the government never recognized them, and they have never been recognized since until now. In the negotiations that took place between the present Lieutenant Governor and myself, I distinctly refused, on the part of the government, to recognize those claims and sometime afterwards he wrote me and intimated that I had made certain concessions. My answer was that if he could obtain the letter he would see he was labouring under a misapprehension, as I had read to him the Order in Council which declared that the settlement was a final one, and I would not recommend my colleagues to go beyond that. But the hon. gentlemen now in power had an object in view in order to gain certain political advantages, and they have yielded to the pressure at the expense of the country to the extent of over half a million dollars. It is pretty dearly bought, I must confess, but they are reaping the benefit and I suppose they feel they have got it cheap.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—It is particularly unfortunate that bills of this nature, disposing of very large sums of public money, should come down at this period of the session. The province of Manitoba might have rights if this bill came in at an earlier period of the session, when the question could be properly looked into, and there would be an opportunity of canvassing the question thoroughly. If they had any claim it could then be couched and granted them by parliament, but coming in as it does now, and in the face of what we have heard respecting the history of this question, I cannot see how I can give my support to the bill. This bill, as it is now before us, appears to dispose of the sum of $267,026 as the cost of this building which was erected in Manitoba. The interest on that appears to be compounded every six months at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, making now a sum approaching in all half a million dollars.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no. The interest payable to them is stated in the bill, $244,000.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—The principal to be paid under the bill——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They do not get any principal. When they came into the confederation there was a subsidy allowed them, and they were charged with these buildings, and are now getting the interest.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—The effect of the bill is to grant Manitoba the sum of about half a million dollars, principal and interest. That being the case, I have not heard anything to justify me in giving my support to the motion, and I am prepared to vote against it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Did Manitoba pay any interest on this debt for the buildings?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; she was allowed the interest on a certain amount on coming into confederation.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—On this debt that has accumulated, did she pay any interest?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—No, she lost the interest.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—She should have got the interest on that. She was charged with that improperly, contrary to the understanding.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, it was not contrary to the understanding, nor was it improper. It was distinctly understood at the time that that was to be charged to their capital account, and the question arose afterwards as to whether this concession should be made.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I think that more is being made out of this than there should be. It has already been explained that Manitoba was credited the same as every one of the provinces of the Dominion. Ontario was credited with $10,000,000 and Quebec was credited with so much on the capital account and Nova Scotia and every one of the provinces, and Manitoba was created a province out of the bare prairie. The lands and all the other assets that every other province enjoys belongs to them, and furnishes a handsome revenue. But in the case of Manitoba, the lands, the mines, the fisheries, the timber and everything else belongs to the Dominion government. In addition to that, out of the lands of the province of Manitoba we are taking a large block for the purpose of constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway. They were exempt from taxation for twenty years. That exemption continues at the present time, reducing the taxable power and the paying power of the people of that province.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Is not Manitoba getting the C. P. R.?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Yes, but they took large blocks of land and then exempted them for twenty years.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—We built the road.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—They built the road from Callendar Station right up to Rat Portage. The hon. leader of the opposition has urged that that was a final settlement. You cannot have a final settlement in parliament. You cannot bind futurity. It is an utter impossibility. The Dominion government may impose a condition of that kind when they are handing over a sum, but that bargain is not binding on the people 20 or 30 years hence, because they could not give their assent to it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I desire to read from the debate at the time the money was being voted for the building. Sir Hector Langevin was the Minister of Public Works, and he said:

> All the other provinces, when they came in, had parliament buildings and residence for lieutenant governors, but Manitoba, being a new province, was not provided for these buildings. It was understood, when Manitoba entered confederation, that these buildings would be provided in the future. $300,000 would be the probable cost.
>
> Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—There are other provinces in the Dominion that are asking for public buildings. Supposing Nova Scotia makes a similar claim to Manitoba?
>
> Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN—All the other provinces had buildings except Manitoba, and it is only fair that she should be equally treated.

Then Mr. Anglin said:

> It is true under the terms of union all the property belonging to the provinces came for a time under the possession of the Dominion government, who handed it back to the provinces.

Then, Mr. Smith, representing Selkirk, said:

> The case of Manitoba is different from that of the other provinces. Manitoba had no land, and it is only fair the government should come forward to aid her.

Mr. CASGRAIN—How is it they were obliged to build parliament buildings in Manitoba?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN—When the other provinces came into confederation, they had their buildings, and these were allowed by the federal government to be used by the provinces, but as Manitoba was a new province and had no buildings, the Dominion government constructed the buildings.

And so on.

The government of the day did not regard the province as foreclosed by the Act of 1885. When the question came up in 1882, volume 2, page 960, it was said :

A settlement is to be arrived at as to what may be termed strictly local.

Mr. Norquay and the other members of the government said it did not come under the term "strictly local."

There will necessarily have to be a settlement between the two governments as to what will be charged against them as strictly local. They have gone on pressing that and it has never been allowed, and the evidence on record is that they really were entitled to it.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MANITOBA SCHOOL FUND BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (168) "An Act respecting the Manitoba School Fund." He said : This is a short bill and deals with the school fund of Manitoba. Hon. gentlemen will remember that in 1872 the government of Canada set apart sections in each township within the province of Manitoba that were to be dedicated to the support of the public schools of that province. There was no provision made for any sale in that Act, nor was there any provision made for the sale or disposal of the school lands till the Act of 1879. The reason of that was that these lands had at the time very little value. There were lands to be homesteaded everywhere about the school sections in every township ; there were nearly four sections reserved in each township, two for school purposes and nearly two for the Hudson Bay Company, and, apart from this, the lands were open for settlement so that as long as the country was new and there were plenty of lands available for nothing, it was not possible that lands that were reserved for school purposes could command any price. I know when I was Minister of the Interior the government of Manitoba applied to me to have a portion of these lands handed over to them in order that they might be used for the purpose of maintaining their schools. I pointed out to them that the lands had very little value, and that it would require a very large proportion of the lands required for school purposes to support schools from year to year. Their answer was, "we are poor at the present time ; it is a matter of great consequence to us to have aid now, and much more than it will be later. After the country becomes settled the people will be more wealthy and prosperous and we can get on better by direct taxation for the maintenance of our public schools without a school fund for the purpose of adding these institutions than we can at the present time even with the aid that these lands will afford." What the government did to aid them was to advance to the government of Manitoba a certain amount of money for which these lands were to remain a security. It was not intended that the money so advanced should be a gift to the people of Manitoba, but it was intended that the lands that were to be dedicated for school purposes should be held in security till the public treasury was recouped for the money advanced. Now how these lands were to be used, whether they were to form a permanent fund the interest only of which was to be drawn, or a portion of the capital might be used for the erection of superior seats of learning, or the building of school houses and a part placed at interest to form a permanent fund out of which the schools might annually be aided, was left entirely to the future. The parties were not bound by the legislation to reserve these lands for all time to come so that no portion of the value could be applied towards the erection of universities, buildings, colleges or public schools. If you loook at the provision of the law you will see that it was not intended to tie the hands of the future parliaments of Canada or future legislatures of Manitoba. It was assumed that we are a self-governing community, and that the people, or their representatives, would always be competent to decide what was best for themselves in their own time. It was also assumed that they would not undertake to waste the estate that was placed at their disposal. There was no provision made, no intention expressed, that the parliament of Canada should retain control of those lands, or any sum arising from their sale, for all time to come. In fact, it was over and over again suggested, as not only these lands, but other lands in the province became more closely or partly settled after the people became more prosperous, that it might be in the public interest to hand over to the province the school lands or the school fund or the undisposed lands of Canada—I say that was a matter that was left open. Hon. gentlemen will remember there is a vast difference between dedicating property as long as it remains in the possession of the Crown from property that is granted away. Almost everybody in the history of the old province of Canada will remember the contest that arose in respect to the clergy reserves. Those lands were reserved for the use of the Protestant clergy; they were not lands that were granted, and the parliament and the people of the old province of Canada—I except those that were specially favourable to the maintenance of church and state—always held that it was open to the parliament of Canada to divert these lands to other uses and for other purposes as certainly as it was open to the crown, in the first instance, to reserve those lands for the use of the Protestant clergy. That, I say, was adopted, that was maintained by the Liberal party, and by those who favoured the establishment of responsible government down to the time that the clergy reserves were secularized, and the proceeds devoted to secular purposes. Now, the setting apart of these lands does not tie in this regard the hands of anybody. Let us look at the precise words that are employed in the statute of 1872, 25 Vic., chap. 23, and section 22, which reads as follows:—

> And whereas it is expedient to make provision in aid of education in Manitoba and the North-west Territories: Therefore sections 11 and 29 in each and every surveyed township throughout the extent of the Dominion lands shall be and are hereby set apart as an endowment for the purposes of education.

Now that was an Act of the parliament of Canada that expressed its intention, and that intention remains law as long as that provision is allowed to stand on the statute-book. Then further:

> Sections so dedicated shall be thereafter dealt with in such manner as may be prescribed by law, and the same are hereby withdrawn from the operation of the clauses in this Act relating to the purchase by private parties and to homestead rights, and it is hereby declared that no such right of purchase by private entry or homestead right shall be recognized in connection with the said section or any part thereof.

That is the position of the law at that time that expressed the then intention of parliament, but while these lands are dedicated to the purposes of education these are the words used:

> In Manitoba and the North-west Territories where lands, the capital of which may be wholly reserved as parliament thinks proper to so reserve it, may be disposed of, a part of the capital may be employed in the erection of large permanent buildings for superior education which might otherwise be a serious burden on the community, and the residue of the capital may be kept and the interest or income from it may be applied to lighten the burden of taxation in respect to the public schools.

Now there is no pledge or promise to anybody that the title to this property or the control of this fund should for ever remain under the jurisdiction of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Does not the word "endowment" indicate that?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, I do not think so—"as an endowment for the purpose of education." But what has that to do with the question as to who shall control that endowment? My hon. friends will remember this, that we are a self-governing community, that within a certain sphere of government the provinces have jurisdiction over these subjects, and for the Dominion parliament to retain for all time to come the interest or the capital which was to be paid for the purpose of supporting education, which might form a fund sufficient to support the schools without any taxation resting upon the community, might undertake by the control of that fund to control a subject which, by the constitution, is placed entirely under the control of the province. My hon. friend will see, and every hon. gentleman must recognize, the force of this proposition, that if you permit the general government to take its revenues and to apply them towards the maintenance of any local authority, you put it in the power of the general government to frustrate and defeat the object of the local body altogether. Let me take this as an illustration. Hon. gentlemen know right well that it is the power of the House of Commons over the revenues of the country that secures the meeting of parliament once a year.

It is a matter of no consequence what the law says. It is a matter of no consequence if the law says parliament shall meet every year. There is no means of enforcing that provision. You cannot enter a suit against the Crown for the purpose of enforcing that provision or against the representatives of the Crown in any court in the British dominion. The only way you have of enforcing it is by the appropriation of the supplies necessary for the year, and so the officers of the Crown are always compelled to call parliament together in order that further steps may be taken. Look at the condition of things. Supposing you should say to a lieutenant-governor that you need not give any attention to the advice of those who claim to be your ministers. You need not call the parliament together as they advise you. You may force them to resign office. If he can control the necessary supplies for the maintenance of the government, the necessary moneys from any other source than from that of the local legislature, he can set the law and the constitution in that regard at defiance. So that hon. gentlemen will see, in the very nature of things, that if you are to have an appropriation for any purpose under the control of the local government, the moneys which go to sustain that branch of government must be moneys paid into the treasury and under the control of the local government, and can be vested nowhere else. So well is this principle settled, that in 1820, I think it was, when the troops of the King of England were left at Paris for a period of three years, some 24,000, it was agreed that they should be paid for by the French King, and Mr. Pitt, or the minister at the time, came down to parliament and said "we need not ask for public appropriation for this purpose, because under the treaty with the King of France we have the moneys necessary to meet the payment of these 24,000 men." But every parliamentarian in that House on both sides said "it cannot be suffered for a moment. The moneys which the King of France has agreed to pay under the treaty for the maintenance of these 24,000 cannot be put directly in the control of the Crown. It must be paid into the public treasury and must be voted again by parliament, precisely as any other revenues that are under the control and jurisdiction of the House of Commons. Therefore I say that this government could not pay over that money for school purposes to anybody else but the local government, and no man could apply a dollar of that money for the maintenance of education except through the instrumentality of the local government and the local legislature that has control of the affairs of that province. Now, whether the government of the Dominion or the government of Manitoba should have absolute control of the capital sum is a matter to be agreed upon between them. There is nothing in this Act of 1872, from beginning to end, which shows that that money was to remain permanently under the control of the Government of the Dominion. On the contrary, I know the intention was that it should remain under the control of this government until Manitoba became more densely settled, until there was a larger population there, until they were less pressed by immediate necessities and were in a better position to administer, in the spirit and in accordance with the intention of our parliamentary system, the institutions placed under their control. What has been done heretofore? Why, on one occasion $30,000 were agreed by the Dominion government to be paid over to the government of Manitoba for school purposes, and it was to be placed under their control. They drew $20,000 of that and $10,000 is still standing to their credit, and a short time afterwards there was another grant of $30,000.

Hon. Mr. DE BOUCHERVILLE—When?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It was some time in the 80's. There was another $30,000, so that they received $60,000 altogether from the capital sum of the school fund, and the government continued to hold those school lands as a pledge for the payment of that amount to the treasury of Canada. Now that is the position of things, and if the government could hand over $30,000 they could hand over ten times $30,000, or the $300,000. There was no difficulty whatever on that score.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Provided they saw a possibility of its being repaid.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Repaid by the government of Manitoba?

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Repaid by receipts from the school lands.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, precisely so. But the school lands themselves, as long as this policy of retaining them as an endowment for education, are, for the time being, as long as the law remains in that form, under the control of the parliament of Canada, subject to the administration of the government of Canada, but liable at any time to be placed under the contrel of the government of Manitoba. These are the words :

Sections 11 and 29 shall be thereafter dealt with in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

So that if the law prescribes some other manner of dealing with them than they had been dealt with under the statute of 1872, it was open to the parliament of Canada to make that alteration and to make such amendments with regard to the management of these lands as it might see proper. So that the government of Canada, in undertaking to meet the wishes of the government of Manitoba in this regard, are violating no principle, are departing from no understanding, are strictly acting in conformity with the original intention. The intention was that those lands should be for the maintenance of public institutions. At the time that settlement was made, the school system was a denominational system, and as long as it continued denominational, and there were schools receiving aid from the public treasury those schools received the aid. When you amended the system, it went to the schools under that amended system, and if you go back to the system as it was before, the aid would be given to the institutions as they were constituted and recognized as public institutions.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—In the meantime, the minority will lose its share ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, I do not think the minority will lose its share.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Posterity will.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If the hon. gentleman were to defeat the bill, then the result might be very different.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman says "hear, hear." My views on that question are very well known. I recognize the rights of the minority ; I did not recognize their right to a separate administration. The constitution gave nothing of that sort. That was a matter entirely under the control of the local government. In the province of Ontario, when our school system was first established, we had a superintendent of education and a board at which clergymen of different denominations were represented. We, in time, abolished that board. We abolished the office of superintendent. We placed the management of the schools under the control of the Minister of Education. But no one, from first to last, ever for one moment argued that the matter of administration that was in the Crown, legally in the Crown, and administered by the Crown upon the advice of its ministers was in any sense violated by the change that took place in the administration. My hon. friend from Manitoba and many of his friends argued that the whole of this matter was a matter of compact, a matter of administration, of inspection, of examination, everything of that sort. I say that is not so. That would be a very mistaken view of the law. That is not the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. They were entitled to give religious instruction. They were entitled when they had qualified teachers to employ them, and they might have the same qualification or different qualifications as the law stated. But the fact is that the separate schools of Manitoba, like the separate schools of Ontario, are public schools.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They were as much public schools as any others.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—As public schools, the legislature had a right to say what the qualification of the teacher should be. They had a right to say they should be subject to the same examination. They had a right to insist upon the inspection of the schools with respect to all matters relating to the subjects which the statute decided were necessary to the welfare of the community. When the compact was made to give religious instruction, that was a concession made, not to any denomination, but a concession made to the parents of a denomination, and, perhaps, so far as that question is concerned, of the instruction to be given in the schools. I do not differ from my hon. friend's view as to the compact. That I am not discussing. I have no doubt that when the heat of the excitement of the moment passes away, whatever right was conceded originally in that regard will ultimately be restored. In dealing with large political questions and questions upon which there is public excitement, we do not move as rapidly as a court of justice can. A court of justice has nothing to do with public opinion. But we must remember that the constitution of this country placed the decision of this question, not in the hands of a judicial body, but in the hands of the political department of government, and you must recognize what the rule of government is in that regard.

Hon. Mr. DE BOUCHERVILLE—Before we adjourn, I desire to ask the hon. gentleman if he referred to the 25th clause of the Dominion Lands Act.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I referred to the 22nd section.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend is quoting from a law before consolidation. If he will refer to revised statutes of Canada, 1886, 41 Vic. page 823, which I think my hon. friend has in his hand, he will find that it is clause 23 in this Act.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I was discussing the initial steps that were taken and I was pointing out that at that time the question was left open for the parties to decide later as to what course would be adopted. As it is now twelve o'clock, I move the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Saturday, 11th June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'Clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

YUKON SUPPLIES.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I should like to know if the hon. Minister of Justice can give me the information that I asked for as to quantities of goods bought from H. N. Bate & Co., Ottawa, and also where the goods were delivered.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have not had the papers sent over to me. The answer was to have come this morning. If it does not come soon I shall telephone over for it.

DRUMMOND COUNTY RAILWAY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to call the attention of the government to the following facts :—

By its legislation of 1897, the government was binding itself to give to the Drummond Railway Company, for a period of 99 years, an annuity of $64,000, this representing the interest on a capital of $1,600,000 at a rate of 4 per cent. This amount of $1,600,000 was the estimated cost of a railway between Chaudière and Ste. Rosalie.

The government has been able, since several years, to borrow money at a lower rate than 3 per cent.

A capital of $1,600,000 at a rate of 3 per cent would bring $48,000.

If this interest of $48,000 were deducted from the annuity of $64,000 it would leave $16,000 for a sinking fund.

This sinking fund embodied in the annuity of $64,000 would at the end of 47 years and two months, reproduce the original capital of $1,600,000.

By binding itself to pay an annual grant of $64,000 during 99 years, the government, having paid the capital of $1,600,000 at the expiration of 47 years and two months, was undertaking, by this very fact, to pay during a further period of 51 years and ten months $64,000 per annum for a capital already paid back.

This useless annual payment of $64,000 would, at the expiration of 51 years and ten months, form a capital in round numbers of $7,800,000.

And asked :

Was not this amount of $7,800,000 really saved the country by the action of the Senate in throwing out the Drummond deal?

Does the government deny the correctness of these figures? If so, wherein are they wrong, and what are the correct figures?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I would say to the hon. gentleman that his calculation reminds me of nothing so much as a statement made by Mark Twain in reference to shortening the Mississippi between St. Louis and New Orleans. He said that the windings of the river had, during the flood season, been cut off and that the result was, that the distance between New Orleans and St. Louis was some 90 miles shorter than in 1780, and at that rate of shortening, by the year 3000 and something, St. Louis and New Orleans would be brought together. Now, my hon. friend's calculation is very much of the same sort. I dissent from the view which he has expressed. I deny the gain to which he refers, and when a fitting opportunity occurs I shall be prepared to discuss that question with the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is a studied answer, and it is not a real one.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL FUND BILL.

BILL REJECTED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the second reading of the Bill (168) "An Act respecting the Manitoba School Fund."

Hon. Mr. MILLS said : As I have no doubt whatever, from rumours abroad, that the majority of this House have made up their minds as to how they will deal with the question of the proposed advance from the school funds to the government and legislature of Manitoba, I need not detain the House with very much further discussion. My hon. friend opposite (Sir Mackenzie Bowell) has informed us that if he stood alone he would vote against this appropriation, and I am informed that the hon. gentleman does not expect to stand alone.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, I do not.

Hon. McMILLAN—Here is one that will stand up with him.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Where hon. gentlemen have made up their minds as to the course which they are to take, and I do not question their right to do so at all, I feel that any laboured discussion of this question, in advance of the course which the government intended to take, would be time simply wasted. I wish to make one further observation with respect to what I said yesterday, that the parliament of Canada had never undertaken to tie its hands by any legislation upon this subject with the view or intention of putting it out of the power of parliament, in the future, to revise the policy that it had adopted and to take a different course if it thought it in the public interest. Now what the view of parliament was in 1887 is shown by paragraph 3 of section 25 in the revised statutes of 1887. There it says :

All moneys from time to time realized from the sale of school lands shall be invested in securities of Canada to form a school fund, and interest arising therefrom, after deducting the cost of management, shall be paid only to the government of the province or territory within which such lands are situated, towards the support of public schools therein, and the money so paid shall be distributed for the purpose by the government of such province or territory in such manner as it deems expedient.

There is nothing in that at all inconsistent with the course which the government now proposes to take. At that time the intention was to invest the moneys in securities of Canada, and to pay over to the province or the territory as the case might be, the proceeds therefrom, to be used for the maintenance of public schools in such manner as the government of the province, or of the territory, might deem expedient. That was the expression of a present purpose, and that continued as a regulation made in 1872 until parliament determined upon a different policy. There is no pledge to anybody. The control of parliament over the subject was an absolute control, and that property still being vested in the Crown, parliament could deal with it just as a former parliament of old Canada dealt with the subject of the clergy reserves. It is dedicated to school purposes, invested, in the first instance, under a provision of this statute with the proceeds placed at the disposal of the government of the province. Whether that should continue for a long, or for a short period of time, depends upon the action of parliament. There was no intention whatever disclosed in any statute passed upon the subject, or in any speech made in support of any proposition, that one parliament should tie the hands of a future parliament. In fact, it would have no such power, and there can be no doubt whatever that the proposal made to-day is a proper proposal to be judged of in itself, as much so as if we were dealing with these funds for the first time. This was the opinion of parliament in 1887, and the statement I read last night was the opinion of parliament in 1872, as the measure which I now submit to the consideration of this House, if it were to carry, would be the opinion of the parliament of to-day. All legislation of this sort is legislation based upon public policy, considering what is best to do under the existing circumstances. My hon. friend opposite me yesterday, in the discussion of another question, alluded to this and said that if he were to stand alone he would oppose this measure, but the reason he gave for it was, in my opinion, a very insufficient reason. We have twice dealt with this fund before. We on two different occasions took $30,000 from the fund and placed it at the disposal of the government of Manitoba for the payment of ordinary school expenses. Now it is proposed by the measure under the consideration of this House to place $300,000, but not more than $200,000 in any one year, at the disposal of the government of Manitoba from this fund. This $300,000 is to be used for school purposes. That is the purpose for which the government of Canada is paying this money over to the government of Manitoba, and if the government of Manitoba thinks it is better, that it can do more towards promoting the efficiency of the schools by having this considerable sum at its disposal at one time, of that I think it is the best judge. We have parliamentary government in the province and here, and in my opinion the parliament of Canada can trust the province in the matter. I shall not trespass further upon the patience of the House but shall move the second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I should deeply regret that the members of the Senate in approaching a subject of this kind had prejudged it and decided that the measure was not one that they would entertain.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I do not think the hon. senator is warranted in making such a statement.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The statement has gone abroad.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—One hon. gentleman expressed his opinion, that is all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My statement was made on the assumption that all were not of that opinion. I said I should deeply regret if that was the position in this chamber.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Prejudged!

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, prejudged. I think it is a matter of sufficient importance that one's mind should be left open and free to consider the subject from all points.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—At what period are we to arrive at that decision?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Possibly we may all discuss it, and then we should be able to form a better judgment, because I think there are features of it which have not been brought under the notice of the Senate. My hon. friend is too fair minded not to be open to conviction. That is my belief.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—So is my mind open to conviction.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I say there are features of this question which have not been discussed. If this fund were to be seriously impaired, I should object to interference, but we have responsibility to the present generation and not generations to come.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is politics.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The value of this fund is probably larger than any similar fund which has been instituted, not alone in Canada but in the United States. I estimate that the funds arising from the sale of these lands will, if properly administered—and I have every reason to believe it will be, because I think every government will feel that the responsibility in administering funds of this character, is sufficiently great that sales will be made for the highest possible prices—I estimate this fund will in time realize $20,000,000. In view of that fact, I think the proportion taken by the present generation is a very small fragment.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What is the basis of that calculation?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will give the basis. The lands reserved for schools in Manitoba are 2,277,900 acres. There are two sections in each township. That is the area. None of the lands were sold at the time the advances were made by Canada. The sums which my hon. friend has just alluded to were advances before one acre was sold, and they were to be recouped out of the sales when made. The first sales were made in 1888. The sales in that year were comparatively small, only $9,000. It was about the year 1893, only five years ago, that sales began to assume large proportions. At that time the fund was over $200,000. In 1895 it was $373,000; in 1896 it was $426,000; in 1897 it was $448,000, and in the present year, up to the 31st of March, it was $475,000.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Could the hon. gentleman give us the acreage?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The whole acreage sold is 84,000 acres out of the 2,277,900. The price realized per acre has been $7.68. Hon. gentlemen will see that those lands are only sold when settlements have been made, and when increased value has been given by the labour of the people who surround those school sections. There is no doubt whatever that within the next five years the average price to be obtained for those lands will be $10 per acre.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I have very grave doubts about it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—How is it that in times less prosperous, in 1892, 1893, 1894 and 1895, when certainly lands in Manitoba were not equal to the value of lands to-day, they have sold at the price I have named.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—They were the most favourably situated lands in the province.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As settlement goes in, of course, prices go up. It is not proposed that those lands shall be sold practically within the next twenty-five years. They will still be selling as we are selling school lands in Ontario—as for instance the Canadian Company's lands are selling. Those lands cost fifty cents an acre. Some of them have been sold at $15 and $20 an acre. Do hon. gentlemen not think that the land in the North-west will rise in the same proportion as the clergy and other lands have increased in Ontario. Assuming even $7.68 as the average, the price will be $17,000,000, the lands would realize, so that hon. gentlemen would see the fund will be of very considerable magnitude in the future, if properly administered. At the present time the fund is invested at three per cent. It gets the savings bank rate. The amount now accrued to the fund is $475,764.96. That is invested at three per cent, so that hon. gentlemen will see that the only sum payable out of that fund——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman tell us how it is invested?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the savings bank.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The law says it shall be invested in Dominion securities.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has not been changed since the hon. gentleman's regime. The Post Office Savings Banks are considered securities. The number of children in Manitoba attending school is 40,000. That would give the munificent sum towards each child from this fund of thirty-two or thirty-three cents a year. The children now attending the school have thirty-two or thirty-three cents per head out of this fund. Except in Winnipeg, St. Boniface, Portage la Prairie and some other centres, the schools of Manitoba are very poor. They are like the schools in Ontario were half a century ago—small cabins, with low ceilings, small windows and stoves for heating them in winter—rooms not fit to place children in. They are not furnished with the appliances that the schools in the older portions of Ontario and the other provinces have. That is, they are not equipped with maps, blackboards and other appliances which aid education. I refer to the rural schools.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—In Manitoba?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—The hon. gentleman is quite misinformed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My information is that it is so in the poorer sections. We know that the immigration into Manitoba is largely composed of a very poor class—those from abroad. The settlers from Ontario and the other provinces are in a better condition and better circumstances, but the foreigners who go in there in considerable numbers are without means. They are not able to build school-houses, and we have some responsibility to the children who are now attending those schools rather than to the children who are coming after us and the generation that is unborn. I consider our responsibility to children now growing up in Manitoba is very considerable. If we can aid and assist in smoothing the way to their better education, I feel it is a duty that we will all gladly discharge. If that is a fact, there is a very strong reason why we should make a reasonable allotment towards those schools. There is no province in confederation, except British Columbia perhaps, that is giving as freely out of its limited means for educational purposes as the province of Manitoba. I looked at the educational estimate for last year for the public schools. It was for public schools, $180,000; university, $3,500; teachers' association, $600—a total of $184,100. That is a more liberal contribution towards educational purposes than is given by any province in the confederation.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that that is all the schools receive?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is from the government.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—All the lands in the municipalities are taxed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is voted by the Manitoba legislature towards schools.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I am aware of this fact, being a property owner there myself that the lands are taxed three or four cents an acre every year besides.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is the government grant. Of course, in addition to the government grant, in all parts of Manitoba there is a school rate collected, just as in Ontario and other provinces. In Ontario there is a government grant towards the schools, which is distributed in accordance to attendance. In addition to that, every property holder—every man having an income, is assessed just so much as a contribution towards the schools. What I am pointing out is the government grant from the funds that they receive, ninety per cent of it being funds given by the federal power, amounts to $183,600.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Will they remit that this year when they get the $300,000?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; this money is to go to the improvement of the schools out in the poorer sections. No one could disapprove of a proposition of that kind, because it is so manifestly right and proper on the face of it, and it does not impair the fund seriously or affect it in the future.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There is no guarantee as to the application.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No government would be so base, so discreditable, as to divert moneys given for school purposes. I have yet to learn that any government has been guilty of so gross a violation of what is right and proper. I give you evidence of the feeling in Manitoba, in the legislature voting that large sum, which is comparatively much larger than the amount the rich province of Ontario gives to the schools of its province. For that reason I think we should aid the efforts of the legislature of Manitoba, if we reasonably can do it. My point is this: that we are not taking from that province any amount that is going to seriously impair the school fund, and the present generation are certainly more entitled to consideration than those who will come after us. As years go on, the people in Manitoba will be better able to support their schools. They will no doubt be improved in their financial position year by year. Their numbers will be increasing and their ability to support the schools will improve. Therefore, it ought to be rather our anxiety to give to the schools when they are in the condition that I understand they are to-day, impoverished by the want of aid even with the assistance they are getting. It is for that reason that I make this appeal to this House. The subject is one that ought to enlist not only our sympathy, but our desire to aid so laudable a proposition as the improvement of the school system in Manitoba. I am quite aware that, in the opinion of some hon. gentlemen, a degree of feeling necessarily enters into the consideration of this question. I fully appreciate the ground for it, that there is a just cause for it, and I make this statement, that the full share that the minority would be entitled to under the best circumstances will still go to the minority under this bill. At the present time a number of the schools may be called Catholic schools, because they are situated in a district where they have Catholic teachers and trustees, and the clergymen and inspectors are of their faith, and there should be and there is no difficulty in the schools being administered as public schools. The greatest liberality prevails as to the use of text books in the schools. A large number of schools are coming in under that class. I make that statement without fear of contradiction, because I have from time to time reports from the inspector as to the progress that is being made, and that is improving. It is in the interest of all of us to favour that movement, to as far as possible bring about a peaceful condition in Manitoba, and I have myself the most unlimited confidence that it is merely a question of time, a short time, when all those grievances will be remedied. That those grievances did exist, I frankly admit, and I admit the grievances are of a just character.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—And it is this same government who perpetrated the injustice that you are going to entrust with this fund—a government that deprives the minority of their constitutional rights.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The same government. I never did defend that government's injustice. On the contrary, I think I scored them quite as much as any member who has spoken on the subject, but I am one of those who look to the improvement of time. I think it is my duty as far as possible to conciliate the elements which have been fanned into a flame in that country, and if we can all do it surely it is a most praiseworthy course that we can adopt. It is with the utmost confidence that I now say they will get their portion of the benefit of this bill, and the rejection of this measure will leave them less equipped and less able to carry on their schools than they are to-day. The schools in Winnipeg, St. Boniface and Portage la Prairie will yet come under the system. Terms will be made which, without any sacrifice of their principles, will enable them to have their schools administered in accordance with their own conscientious wishes, and it is because I believe that, because I am convinced that the course we are taking to-day in aiding them with this money is the wisest and most prudent, that I appeal to the House to let this bill go through. It will be seen that the sum which is now being paid over to the school fund in Manitoba out of those sales of land is so insignificant that it is scarcely worth offering—33 cents a year per head of the school population. The school population of Manitoba is about 40,000. By the official returns of 1894 it was about 37,000; I estimated it has increased about 3,000 since. What I think we ought all to appreciate is that the children of to-day, the children who are now being educated, are those that we are more responsible for than the children who will come in twenty, thirty or forty years, and it is for that reason that I think they are entitled to some degree of consideration, and when giving that consideration we are not robbing this fund or seriously impairing it. We are, at all events, devoting it to the object for which it was instituted. That is the main thing, the children of to-day need it more than the children who will be educated twenty-five years hence. That is the point, the whole point, that twenty-five years hence the parents will be better off, the population will be more dense, the facilities for educational purposes will be greater than they are to-day, and it is because the schools are in an impoverished condition this appeal is made to the government for an advance in aid of the poor rural schools of Manitoba.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not my intention to enter into any laboured argument upon the question now before the House. I shall confine myself to what I consider to have been the intention of parliament when this magnificent grant of over 2,000,000 acres of land was made to assist in the education of the people of Manitoba and the North-west Territories. I shall not, as my hon. friend the Minister of Justice has done, enter into an elaborate argument to establish the rights and privileges and powers of parliament. I admit all that he has said upon that subject. I admit that parliament might have the power to pass an Act to take off the head of any man who would deliver an hour's thesis upon the constitutional rights and powers of parliament altogether irrelevant to the subject before the House. While I admit that power, I deny the right, or the justice, that would be meted out to the gentleman who so far departed from the subject under discussion. Precisely the same authority exists in reference to the power of parliament, so far as it affects any law which it may have placed upon the statute-book. It has the power to divert the money from its original intention, but I question the right to do so, or the equity of doing so. This question is of a most singular character and has one or two peculiar features, I find, in looking at the speeches of the Minister of Finance, and the letter he read from the treasurer of Manitoba, that the first request made was for an advance of $100,000 from this fund.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Will the hon. gentleman mention the date of that?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The letter can be found in the House of Commons Hansard. The date of the letter is Winnipeg, March 20th, 1897. I will read the paragraph :

> The request for $100,000 this year is therefore, we believe justified and necessary for the following reasons.

Then the reasons are given. Subsequently a request was made for double that amount, $200,000 ; but the charity of the hon. gentlemen opposite was so unbounded, that they, without any request, so far as I can glean from these documents and speeches, actually present a bill to parliament asking us to place $300,000 at their disposal to hand over to the treasurer of the province of Manitoba, $200,000 of which is to be paid at once, and the other $100,000 held in reserve, to be given to the province when, in the wisdom of the Dominion government, they think proper to do so.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not earlier than next year, I think.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—About election time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is what I was about to say.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—What page in Hansard is that letter on?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It commences on column 7640 and ends on 7641 in the Hansard of June 8th, 1898. That is, I think, the first letter that was written by Treasurer McMillan to the Dominion government. So that it will be seen that while the province of Manitoba was anxious to obtain a certain amount of money out of the capital, subsequently asked for double the amount; notwithstanding the fact that there is no demand for more from the province, the government take the power to hand them over another $100,000, making $300,000 in all. The capital to the credit of the school fund at the present moment in the hands of the government is $475,764. They propose to take from that fund $300,000, reducing the capital upon which interest will be paid hereafter in support of the present schools to $175,764. If the interest upon nearly half a million dollars is not sufficient to enable them to carry on the schools of that province, now, what position will they be in with a growing population, as it is at the present day, with only the interest upon $175,764? The next proposition we shall have will be to surrender to the province of Manitoba not only the balance of the fund, but all the lands which were reserved for school purposes, and it is just as well that we should understand what the demands of the province of Manitoba are. They have demanded that all these lands shall be handed over to them, to be managed by them, as they think proper, and to dispose of the proceeds in such a way as they think best. I know that they also claim all the lands belonging to the Dominion within the limits of the province. If we are to be asked every year to cash a draft upon this school fund, we had better get rid of it at once, and let them take the responsibility. The hon. Secretary of State has told us over and over again that we have nothing, as a Dominion, to do with educational matters in the provinces; now, he comes forward and wants to act as parent and guardian over the children in that province—that we must look after their interest. I have no objection to his becoming foster father of the whole of them, if he will only advance his own means, and not take it out of the funds belonging to future generations. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice, I hope, will not consider it presumption if I dare, as a laymen, to take exception to his interpretation of the law on the statute-book. When this land was set apart—and I take objection to his statement on that—he said that the intention at that time was to divert this capital if they thought proper to do so. I have already said that I do not deny the power, but I question the right. Such was not the intention of parliament at that time or of the gentleman who framed the law, or the government which placed it on the statute-book. The intention of the government, and parliament, and people, at that time was to set apart a sufficient quantity of land in that new country about being settled to provide for all time to come a fund, the interest of which should be applied for educational purposes. That was the intention of parliament, and the idea of attempting to divert the capital in the manner in which it is now proposed never was even contemplated. My hon. friend says this has been done over and over again. There is a practice, I am sorry to say, and a policy of telling just half the truth, leaving the balance unstated. The bare statement that upon one or two occasions this fund was drawn upon and advanced to the government of Manitoba for educational purposes, is true, but the hon. gentleman forgot to tell the House that that was taken from the capital advanced for school purposes, with the distinct understanding, that it should be recouped to the capital as the lands were sold.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But there was no capital at that time. That was before any sales were made.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So much the stronger is my argument.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So much the stronger is my defence of the government of that time. The hon. gentleman will, if not careful, get himself into the same position that he did a few days ago, when he expressed an opinion diametrically opposed to that expressed by his colleague in the other House. If he consults the speech of the Finance Minister he will see that the statement I made is justified to the letter. On page 7600 of the Hansard that hon. gentleman said, when discussing the question:

> We have already left to the government of Manitoba the disposition of the interest on this fund from year to year, and on the same principle.

They could not do otherwise, because the law provides they shall pay them the interest, to be disposed of as the province of Manitoba think proper. Then the Finance Minister goes on to say:

> That if they are entitled to receive interest from time to time and free to use it to the best of their judgment for school purposes, I see no reason why we should not give them the apportioning of the principal fund upon the same terms and conditions, allowing them to exercise their own judgment in the application of these moneys, &c.

Then he adds:

> In that respect the money would stand exactly in the same position as the money advanced to them years ago by former governments, and in the same position as the money we have been paying from time to time in the form of interest. They all form part of a trust fund, but the exercise of that trust was left to the government of Manitoba.

Then he points out that the moneys which have been advanced have been repaid to the capital out of the sale of the lands. Now, let us see whether the interpretation put by the hon. gentleman on this clause of the statute can by any possibility be borne out. Section 11 sets apart the lands and what does it say:

> Sections 11 and 29, in every surveyed township throughout the extent of the Dominion lands, are hereby set apart as an endowment for the purposes of education, and shall be designated school lands.

My hon. friend last night, when a question was put to him by the hon. gentleman from Shell River, whether that word "endowment" did not mean a permanency, took exception to that interpretation of the word. I think if he will consult the dictionary he will find that it is laid down that the meaning of that word is permanency, and is more than that. Worcester says it is a permanent investment. I will send the dictionary over to the hon. gentleman if he would like to look at it, because I took exception to his interpretation last night, the word "endowment" is defined as a permanency. I hold further, that in this matter you might just as well, if a man left a certain amount of money to be invested for the support of his wife, the interest of which was to be paid to her annually, confiscate the capital, because it is nothing more or less than the capital which should be invested in her interest, and handed over to the children to whom it would belong only after her death. Then the Act makes this provision:

> All money from time to time realized from time to time shall be invested in securities of Canada to form a school fund——

Which, it will be understood, constitutes the endowment.

> And the interest arising therefrom, after deducting the cost of management, shall be paid annually to the government of the province or territory in which such lands are situated, towards the support of public schools therein, and the moneys so paid shall be distributed for the purpose by the government of such province or such territory, in such manner as is deemed expedient.

Now, the Minister of Finance, in the speech to which I have alluded, stated, and the hon. Minister of Justice also stated here, that the lands belonged to the province of Manitoba. Ergo, they were entitled to receive not only the lands, but that they were entitled to receive the full amount of the capital arising from the sale of those lands. I deny that proposition. The lands belong to the Dominion. They never were handed over to the province of Manitoba. They were set apart to form an endowment for school purposes, the interest of which was to be paid as provided, to the government of Manitoba for public school purposes. The lands never were theirs. They are not theirs now. It is only the interest which accrues on the investments made from the capital received after the lands are sold that belongs to them. So that the statements made, that we are only handing back to them that which is their own, is not based on fact, and is certainly not based on law. I do not pretend to say that you have not the power to divert these funds. The same power that put that law on the statute-book could take it from the statute-book, but I say it is striking at the very principle which actuated the legislature at that time in setting these lands apart. I hope the hon. gentleman is more correct in his predictions as to the results which are to follow in the future from the sale of these lands, than the predictions of some others have proved to be. There is scarcely a prediction that the late government of Sir John Macdonald made — and I refer particularly to the utterances made by Sir Charles Tupper in reference to the anticipated rapid settlement and progress of that country — which has been fulfilled. My hon. friend has toted the value of these lands up to about twenty million dollars. I sincerely hope that parliament will never divert or interfere with one single cent of that capital, and that the time may arrive when Manitoba and the North-west Territories will have twenty million dollars at their credit from which to draw the interest to assist them in carrying on the schools of that vast territory. My own estimates were not so high as that. Taking the statement of the Finance Minister that the net sales in the past have realized $7.68 per acre, and taking the quantity of land which has been set apart, I came to the conclusion, that they might ultimately realize from fifteen to seventeen million dollars; and even with that munificent capital for so worthy a purpose as the education of the future generations, the province and the Dominion, and particularly those who had any part in placing that law on the statute-book, might well feel proud that they created such an endowment. The simple question is, whether it is advisable to deplete the present capital, which amounts to nearly half a million, by three hundred thousand dollars, a third of which has never been asked for by the parties to whom it is to be granted. It is true there may be poor sections which need help. I question if there is a province in Canada in which there are not poor sections, and where there are school-houses very much of the character the hon. Secretary of State has spoken of. Go into the rural sections of Ontario—I will not speak of any other province, as I do not know from personal experience—we have a free grant territory in Ontario, and you find the same difficulty, and the same poverty, if poverty I might term it, when the settlers from the older countries settled upon these very lands, where they are densely wooded and about one-third—certainly not over one-half—of the land is arable, and the rest rocks. I have known and witnessed the privations to which my hon. friend refers, and the province of Ontario in this sense contributes out of the general funds a small amount to assist these schools over and above the amount which legitimately belongs to them, under the division which is made proportionate to the attendance at the schools. Let Manitoba do the same thing. When that country fills up, as I hope it will at a very early period, when we have millions, instead of hundreds of thousands in that country, will they not require a larger sum to support their schools just the same as they require the sum they are now receiving for the small number of children going to school? It is a magnificent endowment. It is an endowment for educational purposes in a new province, and the Dominion, and every one in it who had anything to do with establishing that principle, should not only adhere to it, but be proud of what they had done. To divert it from the purposes for which it was set apart would be a gross violation of the intentions of parliament when the law was made.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If we are to invade what I consider the sacred rights of the people in this way, there is no security for property at all; and no matter what endowment may be made in the future, it may be ruthlessly seized in the same manner in which this government is taking hold of this fund. Perhaps I had better not attribute motives in this House but I have my own doubts on that question. They may just as ruthlessly take hold of any endowment, and destroy the intention of the original endower of the property. Why they might just as well go and divert the money that has been granted to the medical college by Lord Strathcona.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The same principle exactly.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Not at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You have the power and now want to establish a precedent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Let me put it some other way, and perhaps it will meet the critical views of my hon. friend. Mr. Macdonald has bestowed on a university in Montreal an amount of money for a certain purpose. I know that that money has been expended for that purpose—at least we have reason to believe it. We know also that the endowment is not sufficient to carry on the work of that branch of the university. The people of the university might just as well have said: "No, we will not invest it for the purposes for which the donor gave it, or bestowed it; but we will appropriate it for some other purpose." That is precisely the same thing. But they could not do it under the law. That is the only difference. They could come to my hon. friend opposite and say: "We do not want this to teach mechanical science, but we want it to teach physics and law, and to endow a few chairs in the establishment," and of course with the idea that they have of an endowment, they might take hold of it and divert it from the original intention. I do not intend to say any more at this moment upon this question. I hold very strong views upon the question, looking upon it as one of vital interest to a growing province, and that this endowment should not be interfered with under any circumstances. If they were advancing this money with the provision that it should be recouped the same as the other advances, then there might be some reason in the course they are pursuing. But to take it from the capital, to deplete the capital to that extent, without any provision whatever for its being refunded, is a wrong perpetrated on the present generation, and still more a wrong on future generations.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—The question we are discussing is certainly a very important one. We are dealing with what is an endowment for school purposes in Manitoba. My idea of an endowment is a trust for the education of the people of the province of Manitoba not only to-day but for all time to come. For that reason, it would be unfortunate if we were to establish the precedent that is at present sought to be introduced into this House by the measure before us. I do not think there is a necessity for it. The province of Manitoba, at any rate this year, is getting a very handsome supplementary fund, increasing its resources by the grant that has already been made, and the addition of this would, I think from an economic standpoint, probably lead to some extravagance that is not desirable. The very moment one's pockets are filled with money, he does not consider the value of it so much as when his pockets were empty, and for that reason I think, so far as this school fund is concerned, it is desirable always to keep a certain check. The natural consequence of granting this would be that in three years' time another application to the treasury would be made for another three hundred thousand dollars, and gradually, as fast as the lands are sold, the capital will be taken out of the hands of this government, and used for purposes for which it was not designed. There will be a million people in the province of Manitoba in the course of time, and the demand for schools will be just as urgent and the necessity for keeping them up will be just as urgent as it is to-day. The hon. Secretary of State has quoted figures to show that there are twenty million dollars possibly in sight in connection with this fund. The estimate is perhaps a little high, but I believe in all those places where the settlement of the country has gone, in consequence of the excellence of the lands, that these lands will bring an average price in the neighbourhood of ten dollars an acre all round. They are exempt from taxation. There is no doubt the provincial government would like, if possible, to increase the subsidies for school purposes. As has already been stated, they are very liberal. Out of their limited means I think they contribute $135,000 a year, distributed in provincial grants, which is a great assistance. But if we were to dissipate the capital in the way here proposed, and the population and the demands increased still further, then this handsome endowment which will amount at least to ten million dollars would be missed. I think it is not at all improbable that the fund will amount to ten million dollars in the course of the next thirty or forty years. We are not here to consider the immediate interests of Manitoba, but we are here to consider the interests of the province for all time to come, and it is advisable, I think, that we should not too hastily establish a precedent such as we are doing to-day. I have a suggestion to make in regard to this matter. At the present moment the fund amounts to $750,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is an unpaid portion.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Yes; the unpaid portion calls for interest, and therefore the interest at three per cent amounts to about $21,000 a year, which the province of Manitoba is entitled to, and which the Dominion government pays over to them. If the Dominion government wish to supplement the $135,000 for educational purposes, it would not be out of place to make an advance of $50,000 out of that grant, to be repaid out of the accumulation of the fund—that is to say, the capital account shall not be impaired, but the annual income might be anticipated, so that instead of $21,000 a year being paid, over $50,000 a year would be paid, and the fund would be drawn upon to the extent of $150,000 to make up this annual income, and the receipts from capital account would come in and reimburse the treasury. Then there is another mode. The Dominion government deposits this money in the savings bank at three per cent interest. We build school-houses all over that province, and it is done by the issue of school debentures. We are limited to $800 in the rural districts, and the amount we have to raise is from $500 to $800. These debentures are sold and bear six per cent interest, if I am correct, and I think the provincial government guarantees these debentures and advances the money, but at six per cent. I do not know what amount is expended annually in the erection of school-houses, but it must be very large. In the settlement of that country we build school-houses, first of logs, and that will cost two or three hundred dollars. Then in about five years time, when the credit of the district has increased, we put up a frame school-house, which costs six or seven hundred dollars. Eight or nine years after that, when the debentures have all been paid there is an increased demand for school accommodation, because when a population increases in the country there are constant requisitions of that kind, so that the amount expended annually in the province of Manitoba in schools must be considerable, though I have no figures in my hand at the present moment. I do not see why the Dominion government should not advance upon these debentures which are taken up by the public, a portion of this money at three per cent interest and save the province that amount of expenditure. That would be a saving of three per cent on eight hundred dollars of debentures, which is a great saving indeed. There is no reason why the school sections where this grant is asked for should not be assisted in this way without impairing the capital account, which should be kept as an asset. We have no assets like other provinces. We have nothing to depend on. This is the only capital account we have. If it amounts to ten million dollars capital in the next thirty or forty years, there will be an annual revenue of three or four hundred thousand. If it amounts to twenty million, as the hon. Secretary of State has foreshadowed, it will be an annual revenue of six hundred thousand. It is the duty of this parliament to protect that income for the benefit of the province in the future.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That is right.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—That is my idea. I should like to see education assisted in every way. I have pointed out one or two methods by which it might be supplemented, and yet I do not think there is any public opinion at the back of this grant, nothing more than the desire to have the handling of three hundred thousand dollars, and perhaps cause it to be expended for a certain purpose; but I do not think the people of the province thoroughly understand the position this fund stands in. If they understood it in its proper light they would take the view that I am stating. Let them nurse the fund for present purposes and obtain assistance in the way I suggest.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—On a former occasion I foreshadowed my opinion on this matter. I do not concur in the policy of the government, and it is not through any feeling that I take this view, but through a sense of duty. The hon. Minister of Justice, and also the Secretary of State have stated that at no time parliament had indicated its intention upon this matter. I think I can show to the satisfaction of the House that in more than one instance parliament has indicated its views upon this matter. I need not quote the statutes. It is admitted that the word "endownent" is used in this law. What is an endowment? Here is a legal authority, Wharton, Law Lexicon, and the definition it gives is this: An endowment is

> The creation of a perpetual provision out of lands or money for any institution or person.

Then I read from Anderson's dictionary of law. His definition is:

> The endowment of a religious corporation refers to that particular fund or part of the fund, of the institution, bestowed for its permanent use, and usually kept sacred for the purposes intended.

So much for the expression in framing this law, which shows the intention of the legislature. Has parliament indicated its views at some other times? I say that it has. In 1883 there was a consolidation of this Dominion Lands Act. Sir Alexander Campbell, speaking in this Senate, said:

> It is necessary that the school fund should be kept sacred. The proceeds of those lands are intended for the education of the people in the future, and the government of the Dominion are the trustees for the future inhabitants of Manitoba.

In the House of Commons, on the discussion of the same bill, Sir John A. Macdonald said:

> Representations have come from the province of Manitoba, and very naturally from the government of that province, that the school lands of Manitoba should be handed over to them for their management. Hitherto the government have not seen their way to go so far. That province is large and the population small; and the temptation to deal with that magnificent grant for present purposes to meet present exigencies is very great; and the government think—and I may here mention that the course of the government met with apparent approval during the last parliament—they ought not to denude themselves of this sacred trust, handed over to them as trustee for this great fund for the education of the people in the illimitable future; so that the policy of the government hitherto has been, in the province of Manitoba, to dispose of this land, the proceeds of which are funded, as the law provides, in government securities, and the annual interest or increment is handed over from year to year to the province of Manitoba for educational purposes. The fund being intact, the fund continually growing, and the interest annually being handed over to the province for the purpose of education, I think that it is in the interest of Manitoba itself; I think it is in the interest of the great North-west, that this magnificent provision for education should be rightly preserved.

Mr. Sutherland, a representative of Manitoba, then said:

> In reference to school lands, I quite agree with the law as it is at present.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Mr. Royal, who was also a member of parliament and representative of Manitoba, said:

> I do not believe myself, that these lands should be placed under the management of the provincial government. I think that this is a wise provision of the law, and I fully concur in the wisdom of the remarks made by the right honourable the premier on that subject.

Mr. Watson, who was then a member of parliament, and who is at present a member of the Manitoba government, said:

> I heartily agree with the remarks of the honourable the first minister (Sir John A. Macdonald) with regard to those lands.

Mr. Ross, another member from Manitoba, said:

> As far as I am concerned, I believe that the people of the North-west think that the government should preserve these lands intact for school purposes.

And later on he said:

> I agree with the remark made by my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. Royal) with regard to the school fund. I think that fund should not be dealt with by the local government. I believe it is better to leave it in the hands of the Dominion government.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—A question of policy again.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Mr. Scott, who was also a representative of Manitoba in the House of Commons at that time, said:

> I agree with them that the management of these lands should remain entirely in the hands of the Dominion government.

Sir John A. Macdonald again said:

> The government is merely a trustee for these lands, and cannot divest them in any way whatever for the purposes of school endowment.

Sir John A. Macdonald later said also:

> All I can say is that every member of Manitoba has protested against the possibility of the Dominion government giving up these lands.

This will show that on more than one occasion parliament expressed its views as to the permanency of the school fund. The hon. ministers have laid great stress upon the fact that we are governed by parliamentary institutions. But, which are the institutions that in this case could be regarded as expressing the views of the people? It is the local legislature. Now, up to the present, we have before us no request of the legislature of Manitoba asking for these funds. We have not even the request of the local government asking for them. What we have before us is only a request from the treasurer of Manitoba for a part of the funds. I do not know whether I should detain the House any longer. I might perhaps say one word in answer to what the hon. Minister of Justice said yesterday in reference to the school question. I have no intention to go into that controversy now, except to state that nobody can deny that the present circumstances are not the same that were in existence when that school fund was created. A section of the population of that province claims that injustice has been done to them; and their grievances have been upheld by the Privy Council. So that nobody can deny that they are right. If they are right the others are wrong, and consequently I do not think the present circumstances would justify parliament to divest itself of the trust that has been vested in them, when the government to which it is proposed to hand over this large sum of money is, legally speaking, in open rebellion with the direction of the highest tribunal of the empire, and in fact against the highest authority of the empire, against the command of Her Majesty herself. One of the contentions of the hon. Minister of Justice is that the change of circumstances does not affect the case. What the law provides is that the school endowment shall be for the benefit of the public schools, and notwithstanding any change that may occur, the law is properly carried on if the money is given to the public schools for the time being. Parliament has not to concern itself about those changes. So says the hon. gentleman. Well, he may be technically right, but most assuredly he is substantially wrong. Because, if we were to adopt his views on the matter, any sort of injustice might arise therefrom. In this particular case, knowing as we do know, that a large section of the people of Manitoba is deprived of its legitimate share of the school appropriations, the adoption of the policy proposed by the government would surely result in a new injustice to the minority. All through the speeches of the hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches, there is a kind of semi-intimation that this concession would rather lead to the other way. I may say that I do not believe in the proposition that an injustice can be cured by another injustice. I would rather believe in the old maxim: summum jus, summa injuria. You may have strictly the power to hand over that fund to the public schools for the time being, but surely in adhering to that strict power, it would be, under the circumstances referred to, manifestly doing a supreme injustice to a large portion of the people.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I shall only detain hon. gentlemen a few minutes. I must say it seems to me that we have heard very extraordinary doctrines laid down in connection with this question. We are told this is an endowment, and because the moneys are devoted to school purposes that therefore this parliament is absolutely disqualified to deal with the subject at all, in fact, that this provision stands much in the same position as if it were a provision of the British North America Act, and that the parliament is absolutely disqualified from dealing with it.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—It is a question of policy.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend says it is a question of policy and it is as a question of policy we are called upon to consider it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But not as a question of right, and no one has taken that position.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Well, my hon. friend forgets what position he has taken. He contends that the diversion of this fund, not to another purpose but to meet the immediate wants of a population that are somewhat straitened, would be exactly of the same nature as if the Board of McGill University were to confiscate the gift of Lord Strathcona and divert it to some other purpose, and that if we were to legislate in this way that there was no longer any security for property. Now my hon. friend has made very extravagant statements and I do not at all concur in those views. What is the effect of an endowment? It is the application of the money or gift or grant for a particular purpose, and if there are different parties entering into a compact we are called upon to see that there is no breach of faith with those who are parties to that compact in any alteration or change we may make in regard to the matter. But is that the case here? Who are the parties here? This legislation was legislation by a parliament that is no longer in existence, by men who are no longer living.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Some of them are.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, but my hon. friend has no greater right because he was a member of a previous parliament upon this subject, neither have I, than if we were made members yesterday.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is true.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Then there is nothing in the point. Who are the cestui qui trust in this matter, whose rights are being invaded. Does my hon. friend say that the men who are now in their graves have made a compact with men who are not yet born? That is the position that the hon. gentleman has taken, and for which he has seriously argued. I deny that altogether. As an act of public policy, it does not stand, under existing circumstances, in any different position from any other act of public policy that has been adopted by those who legislated for the people of this country in the past period of time. This parliament comes to the consideration of that question with the same freedom and with the same power that was possessed by the parliament that set apart these lands. There is no difference between their authority and ours; there is no difference between their right to judge and ours, unless hon. gentlemen can show that there is some specific right given to private parties who have, under the arrangement, acquired a right which we, by our legislation, are invading. Now, I say that that is not the case. This is not a dedication for certain private parties, but for the whole country. We are just as free to legislate upon this subject as the government of Mr. Gladstone was free to legislate on the subject of church and state in Ireland. What did they do with the properties that belonged to the Irish Church? Did they say, "These are your private properties, we have no right to use them for any purpose whatever?" No; they said, "This was endowed for national purposes; that it is still the interest of the nation that is to be considered, and the purpose to which we apply this property shall be a purpose in which the whole nation is interested, in which those who constitute the majority, but are not members of the Established Church, shall have an opportunity of sharing and benefiting as much as those who are not." If the government were to-morrow, in the public interest, to apply the sale of this same fund to some other purpose, if it was found that some other purpose than that to which it was dedicated would be more in the public interest, does any hon. gentleman say that parliament would not have a right to do so, or that any interest or right of any party would be illegally or unconstitutionally invaded, and that faith would be broken with any persons in the province of Manitoba? I say there is no such doctrine recognized under our constitutional system. Let me say further, we are not doing differently from what was done. This parliament sanctioned before, the advance of $30,000, and on a second occasion, $30,000 more from the public fund of this country to aid in the schools, and we held the lands in pledge for the payment of those loans. Where did that $60,000 come from? From the interest of this fund? No, not at all. It came from the principal, the funds obtained from the sale of those lands to that extent. When was that? Years ago; and to-day we are asking five times as much, but the population of Manitoba is more than five times greater than it was at that time; and so, what is the condition of things to be considered? It is this: you have a large and poor population in Manitoba, a population who need aid at the present time, a population who cannot provide sufficient schools on account of the poverty and sparseness of that population, and then hon. gentlemen say we are not making the truest possible use of that fund when we propose to take a portion of that capital for the education of the present generation, and to build school houses instead of retaining it for the education of men who will not come into the world until those who are now in the schools go out of them. That is the position which hon. gentlemen take. There is more than that. You have in this fund, according to the estimated value, a fund worth over $15,000,000. Is it necessary to starve the schools at the present time and to keep them inefficient, to have the present generation grow up in ignorance, in order that that fund may be conserved to its full amount for the advantage of those who will occupy that province in the future? What is the position of things? Twenty-five years hence, after these lands are all sold, and after you have a fund in all probability of not less than $20,000,000, you will have a population in Manitoba whose wealth, whose density will enable them to maintain efficient schools without any aid at all, far easier than the present generation can maintain the schools with the aid that you propose to give them. Is that a matter of no consequence? Is it not making a proper use of this fund to say that this small moiety of $300,000 shall be devoted to the education of the children at this time, and that the great portion of the fund may be reserved to a later period? No one has proposed that this fund should be destroyed and yet I say if it were in the public interest; if public policy pointed in that direction, there is no pledge, nothing existing which would, in the slightest degree interfere with our freedom in that matter. The hon. gentleman has quoted Sir John Macdonald as to what he said with regard to the fund. What did Sir John Macdonald say? He said that the needs of Manitoba, the poverty of the population, the disposition that there would be in consequence of that poverty and their straitened circumstances to use the fund at the present moment, made it unsafe to transfer it to the government of Manitoba. Did he say there was any sacred pledge or trust that would be violated if we were to make the transfer? That is not the ground upon which he put it. It was on the ground of public policy, the ground that the fund was safer in the hands of the Dominion under existing circumstances than it would be in the hands of the province of Manitoba. But that is all beside the question. We are not proposing to hand over the entire fund created by this reservation of school lands to the government of Manitoba. We are proposing to hand over a small moiety. We have sold a few thousand acres of the two million that lie in Manitoba; and the value of the sale, small as it is, amounts to over $700,000; and the government propose that $300,000 of this money shall be placed in the hands of the government of Manitoba at the present time to meet the exigencies of the situation. I say that is a very small amount of capital to place at the disposal of the government at a period when the province is poor, when the population is scattered far and wide and when it is difficult to maintain schools. Twenty-five years hence you will have a dense population, and the whole province filled up everywhere with prosperous farmers, and they will be able to support the schools without any difficulty and without any aid from the state, by their own direct means. The time for a government to give aid is when it is most needed, and the period when it is most needed is the present time. I say to hon. gentlemen that I do not subscribe to the wild statements that were made by the leader of the opposition with regard to the measure being a threat as to the security of property or interference with any private rights. There is nothing of the sort involved in the question. It is purely a question of public policy, where you have a most magnificent endowment for school purposes which is entirely under your control, upon which no one has any special claim, whether you will, to meet present requirement of the population, take a small percentage of that endowment for the purpose of maintaining the schools in efficiency at the present moment when they most require it. I say that the course taken by the government in this matter in meeting the wishes of the government of Manitoba is a most proper course to pursue. It is wise and statesman-like, because you will have a better educated and better informed population after this measure is carried out, and men will be better qualified to discharge their duties to the children of twenty-five years hence, than if you withhold from them the aid which they need and compel them to grow up.

DRUMMOND COUNTY RAILWAY COMMISSION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I beg leave to move the adoption of the report of the select committee appointed to inquire into the affairs of the Drummond County Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I must deprecate very much the adoption of the report by this House until we have had an opportunity of reading and considering it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have had two or three days. The hon. gentleman has had a much longer time to read this report, and form his opinion on it, than we have had in dealing with some millions of dollars.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I may say the course adopted in the other branch of the legislature was to postpone the discussion of the report until next session, and I thought that the hon. leader of the opposition was going to suggest that course here, if there was no objection to it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no objection. If we had been requested to let this stand over, I was going to suggest adopting the same policy that was pursued by the premier in the other House, but no request was made for it. I have no objections to adopting that course. If the hon. gentleman would like to have it deferred I think the chairman would acquiesce.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I certainly do desire that it should be deferred. I am not prepared to enter into a discussion of the subject.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Then, at the request of the hon. leader of the House, I move that the discussion of this report stand over till next session.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I move that the third report of the select committee appointed to inquire into the affairs of the Drummond County Railway be adopted. This report refers simply to the charge by the counsel who was employed to conduct the proceedings before the committee. The charge is very reasonable.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to make just one or two observations on this report. The committee might have gone on with the inquiry and examined witnesses themselves, or they might have done, as they have decided to do, refrained from examining any witnesses or going into the inquiry at all. But the hon. gentlemen should have decided that question for themselves, and to send for an eminent counsel in Toronto to enable the committee to make up their minds as to whether they should proceed or not, and then to pay that learned gentleman $575 for telling them they should not proceed, is not, to my mind, the best way of transacting the business of the Senate. We are very fond of talking of the extravagance of the government, but in our own little way this report, which we are asked to adopt, illustrates the fact that we can be extravagant too. I must repeat that I think the committee—I am now referring to the general action of the committee—should have decided whether or not they should go into the inquiry without the assistance of Mr. Walter Barwick; and, further, it does strike me that $575 is a large amount to pay for the service which this gentleman performed, that of advising the committee that they should not go on.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Is the committee going to adopt this report without dividing? I simply want to have my name recorded against the payment of this sum for such a purpose.

The motion was carried on a division.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (173) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the rules be suspended with regard to this bill and that it be read the second time presently.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I understand this is a permanent bill. I give notice that I shall ask the government to make an amendment to the bill in this direction—that the fifteen days shall not apply to the last fifteen days of the session. I think it is in the public interest that we should make some provision of that kind. Unless the hon. members of the House of Commons will undertake to amend it, we cannot amend it here. It is a delicate question to speak upon, but I think that the bill should be amended by providing that the fifteen days' exemption shall not apply to the last fifteen days of the session hereafter. I think it is absolutely necessary. I do not want to go into particulars, but the measures brought before the Senate during the last fifteen days of the session are more important than all the business done during the three months previously. The most important business of the House is crowded into a few days, and I am sorry to say too many members go home near the end of the session.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Cannot we amend it?

Hon. Mr. MILLER—No.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In order that this matter may not be out of our hands in a future session, I do not see why we should be altogether doing wrong in striking out the words which refer to future sessions.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I agree to it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The effect of the measure is to pay gentlemen, who prefer to attend to their own business, for the time expended in attending to their own affairs. I think it is an unjust bill.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—The hon. member for Halifax is wrong. He says it is to pay people to attend to their own business. I could give him four or five cases in which that is absolutely untrue, where people have been kept at home ill and where they have been detained from here and could not possibly help it. He should be a little more careful in making general assertions of that kind.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—There is one thing which I have noticed in my short experience: it is that we are supposed to be here during the first two months of the session to hear the prayers and the petitions, and then have the adjournment about ten minutes after. Then why should people who live far from the capital be called away from homes to do what is called public business? I do not think that during the first two months of this session we did more than five days' work.

Hon. Mr. MASSON—Does the hon. gentleman apply that to the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If it pleases the House of Commons to while away the time in idle talk, that is their own affair, but it seems to me that we attend here to mark time for the first two months.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The hon. gentleman's remarks are just as applicable to the House of Commons as they are to this House. In the first two months of the session nothing was done by the House of Commons.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman was wrong entirely. This fifteen days does not apply to the adjournment. Nothing is deducted for the adjournment. It only applies to the days the Senate sits and transacts business.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—During the first two months we are supposed to be here four or five days in the week to attend to the business of the Senate, when nothing comes from the House of Commons and the time is lost in idle speeches, made simply to fill the Débats with speeches for the electorate, and we have to remain here doing nothing, waiting for the pleasure of the Commons. We have to sit here five or ten minutes each day for the first two months of the session doing nothing, and I wonder why we do not adjourn every two weeks.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I hope the government will take this reprimand to heart on account of the way they are managing business.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I may say it is generally the opposition that does the talking.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The House will see the importance of having the members here during the last fifteen days of the session, and it is for that reason I desire that a provision should be made in the law that this exemption shall not apply to the last fifteen days of the session. I think it will commend itself to every member of the House. There may be some excuse for allowing fifteen days exemption during a long session of four months. I should not object to members going home and attending to private business where the public business might not be imperative, and the private business might be very urgent, but during the last fifteen days of the session, it is very important that every member of parliament of both Houses, should be in his place, because we know the great bulk of the work is done then and the most important bills come before us, and it is most desirable that we should not do anything to encourage a thin House in the Senate or the House of Commons during the session.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I have been seventeen years in this House, and it does not say much for the generosity of the members who live at a distance, and cannot go home, when I say that nine out of ten of the men who have found fault with the adjournments have been gentlemen who cannot go home. It is like the dog in the manger, "because I cannot do it I will not let you do it." It has been so for seventeen years back. A great many members find fault with adjournments because they cannot go home themselves.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I have never assumed any dog in the manger attitude on this question. I have generally allowed people to go home, far and near. I have never voted against an adjournment for years.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—You are doing it now.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I am not doing it now. The hon. gentleman should be more particular in his statements when he makes them with such force. Loud talk will not make a statement any more correct.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I am one of those who cannot take advantage of the fifteen days' allowance, but I do not object that those who are able to go home and attend to their own private business during the session should do so. It cannot be said that because a member has lost ten or fifteen days he has neglected his duty. It is but fair, and any hon. gentleman having pressing and urgent business, even if it be private business, should have the opportunity of attending to it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I will not persist in my motion at the present moment. When we meet again at three o'clock I will move the second reading.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I give notice that I will move that the words "and each session of parliament hereafter held" be striken out.

The Senate adjourned.

SECOND SITTING.

Ottawa, Saturday, 11th June, 1898.

The speaker took the chair at Three o'Clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (173) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting the Senate and the House of Commons."

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not know whether, strictly speaking, the Senate has a right to amend a bill of this kind, but I think if we have the right we ought to exercise it. I take, first, the constitutional ground that, as I am informed and as I believe is the case, the measure when it was submitted to the House of Commons with His Excellency's approval, dealt only with the present year. Under an undoubted rule of parliament, the House of Commons had no right to add to what was set forth in the message from His Excellency, and the House of Commons had no right to legislate beyond the present year, so that I think this House, particularly as it is a matter in which the Senate is concerned as much as the House of Commons, has a perfect right to so amend the bill as to bring it back practically to the condition in which it should have been. That is as a matter of practice. I think we have a right, under the circumstances, to deal with this bill although it is in some sense a money bill. Then there are one or two other reasons why I think we should deal with it. Several hon. gentlemen have spoken of the great inconvenience of allowing this fifteen days, spoken of to be counted at the end of the session when most of the important work is to be done. There is a great deal of force in that. For that reason it would be wiser that the measure should pass now only for this year, and that the government and the House of Commons should have an opportunity, during the recess, of thinking over the latter and submitting a more carefully thought out measure than this is at the next meeting of parliament. Then, there is another result of the measure in itself which perhaps has not occurred to the government or to some members of parliament, and that is, that when members of both Houses feel that they can be absent for fifteen days during the session without any loss to themselves, they are very likely to absent themselves, and that causes a feeling amongst the members of both Houses that it is not necessary to hurry prorogation. They can go home and lose nothing by going home, and the consequence is that those members who come from a distance, and who cannot conveniently go home, are obliged to remain here for a longer period than they otherwise would. If there were no adjournments, and if every member from far and near had to remain in Ottawa from the beginning to the end of the session, the session would be very considerably shorter than it is now. This giving of fifteen additional days and making it a permanent thing, is going to increase that absenteeism very much, and tend to prolong the session. The hon. gentleman from Alma division (Mr. Ogilvie) made some reference to members who come from remote places acting rather like the dog in the manger. The hon. gentleman's observations did not apply to me. I have not for years made any opposition to those adjournments, but hon. gentlemen who live near at hand might be a little generous with us ; and in the interest of the whole House, in the interest of the country and of the government, it is better that the sessions should be shorter, and the tendency of this measure, if it becomes permanent, will be to lengthen the sessions. So, on the grounds that the House of Commons have no right to pass this bill in its present shape ; that we have as much right to restore it to its original shape as they had to change it ; that it does not represent the deliberate and well-thought-out opinion of the government and of parliament ; that it needs to be amended so as not to apply to the closing days of the session, and also because it is not a good thing in itself, I move that the words in this bill which apply to future sessions be stricken out, "and for each session of parliament hereafter held."

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I live 1,600 miles from here. It is utterly impossible for me to go home through the session unless we make long adjournments. A week or ten days would not enable me to visit my home, therefore, of necessity, I have to remain here. However, I am fortunate in having others at home to carry on my business and I can remain here. But I hesitate not to say that the principle of the bill is a wrong one. If they had included a condition in the bill that it is not to apply to the last days of the session there might be some force in it. During the last ten days we have done more business than in the previous forty days. More money has been voted and more important legislation passed during the past ten days than in the previous forty days. This does not apply to this government merely ; it applies to the last as well. A man is obliged to spend four months of each year attending to his duties here, and very many, when the session nears its close, make a bee line for home without any proper regard for the legislation that is to come before us. It would not be so wrong to vote this exemption session by session but it is wrong to undertake to make it a fixed rule that we get paid for fifteen days that we do not attend. It is better to increase the indemnity. If you want to get men of business capacity who can afford to devote their time to the affairs of the country you must either pay them for it or get a class of men who can afford it. A wealthy man can afford it. I cannot, and if I was not a member of the Senate having two boys to look after my business, I would retire from politics altogether, as I could not attend to politics and to my business, and would have to let one or the other go. Establishing the principle and making it permanent that a man should be paid for fifteen days that he is not here, would suit me to a dot, because in the middle of the session I would take my fifteen days in connection with adjournment. There is generally an adjournment about seed time when I require to get home, but if everybody else acted on the same principle there would be no parliament at all. While I do not propose to vote against the allowing of fifteen days this year I shall vote against making it a permanent rule.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I suppose the principle of the bill, if there is any principle in it at all, is this, that in such a session as is just coming to an end now, when members have been kept away from home for nearly four and a half months, if such hon. members find it absolutely necessary to go home for a certain number of days during the session they shall not lose a portion of their indemnity. I presume the idea is that if the session is a comparatively short one, there is no occasion for making any allowance on that score at all; but if the session is an abnormally long one, it is only just and fair, if this principle of paying members is to be continued, to make an allowance of that kind. My idea is that senators should not be paid at all for their attendance, though I have no hope of seeing that brought about. I prefer the bill as it is, for this reason: there is something not very pleasant, as if it were a little charity thrown into the end of the session, to make this small concession of fifteen days' allowance. I would much rather, I confess, see the exemption made permanent, if the principle is to be admitted at all, than to have a bill like this brought up in the last days of every session. If the exemption is to be given, I very much prefer the view taken by the hon. gentleman from Richmond, as, there is no question about it, any one who has watched the working of it for the last few years when these bonuses have been granted, knows perfectly well, though it is a disagreeable thing to have to say, that there is an exodus of members of both Houses just about the close of the session; and this is almost an inducement to make them feel that they can do that. Therefore, I would rather see this arrangement made permanent, unless it is done away with altogether.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I think I can speak from experience on this subject about as well as most members as I have been here a long time. I cannot find fault with one government more than an other. I have always found, during the last thirty years that the great rush of business generally comes in near the close of the session. What I am finding fault with at the present time, and what I have found fault with at other times, is that needlessly the opposition keep us here entirely too long. That is the trouble. During this session the Yukon Bill occupied the other House a long time, and then it came to this House and we all know the result—that all the heavy labour bestowed on that measure and all the benefits which would have accrued to the country from the legislation had been smashed like a glass house by this Senate, and the whole time of the House up to that period was simply wasted. I do not find fault with this. It is done and cannot be helped now, but I had a notion for a long time that both the Senate and the House of Commons might well be reformed.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—It is my opinion that the membership of this Senate is entirely too numerous and that we are too poorly paid. I am free and open-handed, because I know what the feelings of the country are. I believe the House of Commons is also too large.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—There is safety in numbers.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I will not occupy the time of the House very long, and hon. gentlemen may thank me for expressing thoughts which they have themselves but are too cowardly to express. It is my opinion, hon. gentlemen—and I speak of both Houses—that if the membership were reduced one-half and the pay doubled, we would be sure of getting a better class of men. It would cost the country no more than at present and would improve the representation of the people.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Who would retire first?

Hon. Mr. DEVER—The hon. gentleman from Victoria would not retire any way if he could help it. These are the views I hold, and I believe they are held very extensively by other gentlemen, too. I do not hope that such a reformation will take place, but I only wish it could, because I think if the Senate were composed of half the number and if they attended to their duty day by day, without interruptions and adjournments, or giving to one party or another a number of days to enable him to go here and there, it would be better, because the legislation of the country could be done at most in ten weeks instead of four or five months. I throw out these views to the House and lay them before the government, hoping it may be possible that they may be considered, perhaps when I am no longer here but in another world. These are my views and I think if they could be adopted and a change made in the direction I point out—because a change will have to take place in the Senate before long—it would be very acceptable to the country and I believe we would get a better class of legislators.

Hon. Mr. DE BOUCHERVILLE—There is another important point to be considered. Have we a right to amend this bill? This is an appropriation bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DE BOUCHERVILLE—And if we amend it we shall probably have the pleasure of receiving from the House of Commons notice that they will not agree to the amendments, and then we will say that we do not insist on the amendments. I think one message of that kind in the session is enough.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have no doubt whatever that this is an appropriation bill, and that this House has no power to amend it. I do not know that members take their fifteen days at the end of the session. There are a good many legal gentlemen in the other House, and during the period the courts are in session they go away to attend to their cases. There are others who leave for the purpose of attending to their business as bankers and merchants. So that if we look at the time that members are away, we will find that it is pretty evenly distributed over the session, almost from the very beginning. There may be a few who have no special business to call them away, who feel that they are entitled to the fifteen days, and will take them at the end of the session. I believe the experience of the House of Commons is, that after that the House progresses more rapidly with the public business, and I am not at all sure, if we were to carry the amendments suggested by the hon. gentleman from Richmond, and provide that these fifteen days should not be taken at any time during the last month of the session, that we would have a shorter session than we have now. I think the House will find on the whole that it is better to accept the bill from the Commons in its present form, and if any hon. gentleman desires next session to amend this bill in the direction mentioned by the hon. gentleman from Richmond, the amendment could be proposed by a member of the House of Commons. I do not for a moment admit that the principle contended for by my hon. friend—I think erroneously—in another bill is applicable to this, that if the House passes it, we are bound, by some sort of mysterious compact, not to make any alteration in it afterwards.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—I do not agree with the leader of the House when he says he hopes the sessions will become shorter. We have a very large country to deal with, and this year more than half the legislation has come from the western country, which is certainly not going to decrease. It is going to increase. At the present moment a very large number of members come a long distance, and are forced to neglect their private affairs, but people living in the east are not obliged to do that, and it is a greater hardship on those who have to make these sacrifices.

Hon. Mr. DE BOUCHERVILLE—I should like to hear the opinion of the Speaker as to whether it is an appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER—It seems to me that this is clearly a bill providing for the appropriation of money, and consequently I do not think the amendment is in order.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I bow to the decision of the chair.

The amendment was withdrawn.

The bill was then read the second and third times and passed.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

RETURNED FROM THE COMMONS.

A message was received from the House of Commons returning Bill (71) "An Act further to amend the Weights and Measures Act," and stating that they had agreed to the amendments made by the Senate with an amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How will it read?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is some doubt as to whether the bushel capacity was Winchester or Imperial, and the Commons struck out the word "Winchester" and left the word "bushel."

Hon. Mr. POWER—To leave room for litigation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not know that there is any opportunity for litigation, because I think there is a statute abolishing the Winchester bushel which was passed some years ago. I met some of the officers here yesterday, who came over with Mr. Paterson to discuss the subject, and they maintained that the bushel of capacity now in use was an Imperial bushel. An Imperial bushel is $2,212\frac{192}{1000}$. The Winchester bushel is $2,215\frac{42}{1000}$. I am quite satisfied that the sixty pounds of wheat average quality is the weight of a Winchester bushel. At all events, the Department of Inland Revenue will decide that by actual experiment and act accordingly.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think now we have just got back to the point where we started from.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend the leader of the opposition, stated that instead of the smaller tests, as formerly used, it should be less than sixty pounds. The leader of the House suggested that it shall be no smaller quantity than the Winchester bushel. Now the House of Commons strikes out the word "Winchester," and we get back to the bushel which, under the law, is sixty pounds.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that there is a bushel by weight and a bushel by capacity. You want to test the quality of a bushel by weight as well as by capacity, and the objection to sixty pounds was that you could not test the bushel at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Commons have gone beyond that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If the amendment will now provide that it shall be a bushel of capacity I can then understand it, but I think it will be a bushel of weight, and accordingly where there is no expressed understanding to the contrary, a bushel is sixty pounds. Unless it expressly says it shall be a bushel in capacity we shall have sixty pounds.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The amendment of the Commons leaves out the whole of the amendment made by the Senate. It places the bill in precisely where it was before we made any amendment. The word "Winchester" is not the only word left out. It says "leave out from capacity" and it leaves out all from this word "capacity" to "Winchester measure," leaving it exactly as the bill was before we amended it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, I see now that they have struck out that whole amendment. The hon. gentleman from London has had his way.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, it is the gentleman who voted for a measure of a sixteenth part of a bushel. The government have undertaken to fix a measure by which the farmer is wronged in the weights of every bushel of grain he sells, let them take the responsibility.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the Senate do not insist upon its amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (172) "An Act further to amend the Inland Revenue Act."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. DE BOUCHERVILLE—What is the effect of that?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will have to give me time, I will require to look at two or three of these chapters before I could tell. I cannot say that I admire this method of amending the law.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It means, I think, that the weight is to be computed on the tobacco dry.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Quite so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman had better give notice that he will move the second reading at the next sitting, and in the meantime he can find out what the bill implies. It is a matter of great importance, interfering with the revenue, and we should have time to get information about it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I will move the second reading now and move the House into committee upon it at the next sitting.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. VILLENEUVE—I think the amendments have been asked by the manufacturers of tobacco. They thought it was very unjust to pay the duty. There was a duty on the leaf when it came in, and then an excise duty. In passing this bill, as presented to the House just now, I think you will render justice to the manufacturers, as I believe they have paid on more pounds than there were really in the packages. The tobacco is moist and they had to pay on the moisture. By this bill they will only have to pay the amount of duty that the government means to exact. They will not have to pay it on the moisture, but on the actual weight.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What do they allow for moisture?

Hon. Mr. VILLENEUVE—Nothing now, I suppose they will after this, I have been told by some manufacturers of tobacco that they have come several times before the government with a request for legislation in this direction and at last they have succeeded.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a very good thing to have some members of the Senate who are able to explain government bills when they are brought before us; otherwise we would have to ask for a great deal of time to consider them.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am glad that my hon. friend agrees with me; it is not often that he does. He has had the advantage of a practical man to tell him what the bill means and what its effect will be. I know there are constant applications made on the part of manufacturers for changes in the duty. Some require the whole system changed and an imposition on the raw leaf and no excise at all; the same I think as they do in some other countries. This is one of those peculiar bills brought before us amending certain clauses and repealing other clauses affecting the revenue of the country, and we are asked to accept it at a moment's warning without knowing anything at all about it. I am glad my hon. friend has given us some little inkling or idea of what the bill contains.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend asked that the second reading should stand till the next sitting, that is after eight o'clock, and I do not object.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In the meantime, I should like to have a copy of the bill so that I can have it before me to compare it with the law now upon the statute-book. It must be printed before we can consider it.

Hon. Mr. VILLENEUVE—I hope my hon. friend will not put anything in the way of carrying this bill, as he will find that it is in the interests of the manufacturers. I do not think the government should exact any duty they are not entitled to. They levy on the excise as well as on the customs.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do they impose customs and excise besides.

Hon. Mr. VILLENEUVE—They begin by imposing customs duty and then they impose an excise duty. They levy the duty on the weight, and consequently we pay an excise duty on the water.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Is this a removal of the customs or the excise?

Hon. Mr. VILLENEUVE—I think the removal would be on the customs.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I move that this bill be read the second time at the next sitting of this House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is some question as to the next sitting of the House. We decided there should be two sittings each day, and it was decided yesterday that the first sitting to-day should be at eleven, and I think this present sitting is the last one.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The next sitting would be the third sitting to-day. I would like to ask my hon. friend from Halifax, who has more knowledge of the rules of the House than I have, whether, in adopting the motion made by the Minister of Justice that we should sit at eleven o'clock, and three, and eight o'clock in the same day, that repeals the rule that one full day must elapse between any two stages.

Hon. Mr. POWER—What happened was this: the Minister of Justice moved that there should be, after the day he made the motion, two sittings of the House and then it was decided that, inasmuch as committees were still sitting in the morning, the sittings should be at three o'clock and eight o'clock in the afternoon, instead of one sitting in the forenoon, as was the usual practice, and it was further understood that when the committees had ceased to sit, then the session was to be at eleven. That was in substitution for the meeting at eight o'clock in the evening, and as I take it now, we have met this afternoon, and as there are only two meetings in the day, there is no further meeting to-day beyond the one at three o'clock.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—A motion can be made now for the House to meet at eight o'clock.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Oh, yes. The hon. leader of the opposition is anxious to get information, and I presume the Secretary of State has all the information that is necessary to enable us to grapple with this measure now, and perhaps the hon. gentleman will withdraw his objection and let it go through.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What surprises me is that the hon. member for Halifax, who is so well up in the rules of the House, should not have answered the question I put to him, whether the motion to meet twice in the same day repeals that rule of the House which declares that one full day shall pass between the two stages of a bill; otherwise no bill can be proceeded with until one day has elapsed between the time———

Hon. Mr. POWER—Of course it repeals it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not so sure that it does repeal it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If after eight o'clock there is another session there is no object in delay.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Decide that point first. You are not going to take that for granted, that there is no other session. I contend that it is another session. The hon. gentleman made a motion that the House should meet at three and adjourn at six, and meet again at eight. He subsequently made another motion that we should meet at eleven to-day, so that really we have three days in one day.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is quite wrong; there has never been any motion that there should be three meetings the same day. There is a motion that there should be two sessions a day, one at three and the other at eight, until the committees have ceased sitting, after which time it was stated that we would sit in the morning, and the hon. Minister of Justice yesterday moved that we sit to-day at eleven o'clock, and it does not follow that we meet three times a day.

The motion was agreed to.

NORTH-WEST IRRIGATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

CONSIDERATION OF COMMONS AMENDMENTS.

A message was received from the House of Commons returning Bill (146) "An Act to amend and consolidate the North-west Irrigation Act of 1894-95," stating that the Commons had agreed to the amendments made by the Senate, with the exception of the amendment on the second page, line 36, "insert the maximum rates which were charged by the licensee," to which the Commons disagreed for the reason that it is impracticable to fix a maximum rate before the conclusion of the work and before it is ascertained what the cost of constructing and maintaining the same would be.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When this amendment was carried I understood the hon. member from Calgary to say that if it was going to seriously affect the bill he would not insist upon it. I do not think the hon. gentleman is here, so that I think it would be as well for the House not to insist upon this amendment.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—He is here; he was in the House a little while ago.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then I will let it stand.

TARIFF ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the first reading of Bill (171) "An Act to amend the Customs Tariff Act of 1897." He said: The Act makes provision for substituting another clause for clause six of the Customs Tariff Act of 1897. The only new words in it are the following, "or otherwise dealt with as the Minister of Customs directs." This is with reference to certain contraband goods. It was found, I suppose, that there were some goods that ought not to be destroyed and the minister ought to have some discretionary powers to know what to do with them. Then the bill extends, as hon. gentlemen are aware who have read the debates, that preferential tariff to certain British colonies which are named, and to any other British colony or possession the customs tariff of which is on the whole as favourable to Canada as the British preferential tariff herein referred to. Hon. gentlemen will probably recollect that an appeal has been made to the British parliament for some relief to the British West Indians in consequence of the bounties paid on sugar by France and Germany, and that the sugar industry of the West India Islands, which was the main industry, as hon. gentlemen know, has fallen so far away that they are suffering. The values of property have gone down so much that the British government, as probably hon. gentlemen who have followed the debates there know, have intimated the probability of their doing something to aid them; and we thought it would be a graceful thing on our part to say that we are also prepared to do something. Our trade with them, it is true, is not very large, but we propose to cultivate it, and we propose to extend the preferential tariff to the West India Islands, and subsequently to other British colonies but I do not know that it takes in any other but New South Wales. There is a proviso, however, to the following effect:

Provided, however, that manufactured articles to be admitted under such preferential tariff shall be bona fide the manufactures of a country or countries entitled to the benefits of such tariff, and that such benefits shall not extend to the importation of articles into the production of which there has not entered a substantial portion of the labour of such countries. Any question arising as to any article being entitled to such benefits shall be decided by the Minister of Customs, whose decision shall be final.

The article with reference to raw sugar is:

2. Raw sugar, including all sugar described in item 436 of schedule A, may, when imported direct from any British colony or possession, be entered for duty or taken out of warehouse for consumption in Canada at the reduced rate of duty provided in the British preferential tariff.

At first the intention was to extend it only to the West India Islands, but there are one or two islands on the Pacific that are producing sugar. I do not know that we are doing any trade with them, but we thought it as well to extend it to them—Fiji, for instance, and some other islands. Then, in the tariff of last year there was a mistake in item 221 which reads as follows:

India rubber boots and shoes, and all manufactures of India rubber and gutta percha, n.o.p., twenty-five per cent ad valorem.

It was intended at that time that rubber belting should be included and it was a clerical error that it was omitted. The change will make the item read:

221. India rubber boots and shoes; rubber belting, rubber cement and all manufactures of India rubber and gutta percha, n.o.p., twenty-five per cent ad valorem.

The statement made by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs shows that it was intended that rubber belting should be included in that item. In 435 of the customs tariff of last year, under the heading of sugar, syrup and molasses, it reads that the duty on all sugar above No. 16 Dutch standard in colour, and all refined sugar of whatever kind, grades or standards shall be one cent per pound, and 436 is as follows:—

Sugar, n.e.s., above No. 16 Dutch standard in colour, sugar drainings or pumpkins drained in transit melado or concentrated melado, tank bottoms and sugar concrete, one-half cent per pound.

The polariscope test has been introduced in lieu of the specific. Instead of taking 16 Dutch standard and charging, as the tariff now charges, at so much per pound, the polariscope test is made to apply. It reads now:

435. All sugar above No. 16 Dutch standard in colour, and all refined sugars of whatever kinds, grades or standards, testing not more than eighty-eight degrees by the polariscope, one dollar and eight cents per one hundred pounds, and for each additional degree one and one-half cent per one hundred pounds. Fractions of five-tenths of a degree or less not to be subject to duty, and fractions of more than five-tenths to be dutiable as a degree.

436. Sugar n.e.s. not above number sixteen Dutch standard in colour, sugar drainings or pumpings drained in transit, melado or concentrated melado, tank bottoms and sugar concrete, testing not more than seventy-five degrees by the polariscope, forty cents per one hundred pounds, and for each additional degree one and one-half cent per one hundred pounds. Fractions of five-tenths of a degree or less not to be subject to duty, and fractions of more than five-tenths to be dutiable as a degree. The usual package in which imported to be free.

Hon. gentlemen will probably recollect the Minister of Finance made the statement in his budget speech, and those changes are simply in conformity with the changes he announced. Items 445 and 446 are repealed. Those items related to tobacco. The puzzle that we had before us a few moments ago is explained. These are transferred for the collection of duty, from the customs to the excise. It is not done in a very clear way, but this bill repeals the authority of the customs collection, and that part of the bill which we have been endeavouring to unravel gives authority to the Excise Department to collect the revenue at the same figures, ten cents per pound for the unstemmed and fourteen cents for the stemmed.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Do I understand this customs duty is on the raw leaf, or on the manufactured article as well?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—On the raw leaf. There was an object in transferring it. In the customs they do not allow for evaporation of the moisture: in the excise they do, so that the manufacturer gets an advantage in that way by the diminution in the weight.

Hon. Mr. POWER—He does not pay duty on the water?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, he does not pay duty on the water.

Hon. Mr. VILLENEUVE—There will be only one to collect instead of two.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then on and after the 1st June, 1897, tobacco manufactured for excise purposes under conditions of the Inland Revenue Act——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Leaving out the limit?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. The Excise Act we had just now is explained by this bill, because the repealed sections are re-enacted for the Inland Revenue. In the British preferential tariff, articles entitled to the benefit of this preferential tariff come under the duties mentioned in section 17 schedule (A).

On articles entitled to the benefits of this preferential tariff under section seventeen, the duties mentioned in schedule A shall be reduced as follows: The reduction shall be one-fourth of the duty mentioned in schedule A, and the duty to be levied, collected and paid shall be three-fourths of the duty mentioned in schedule A.

Provided, however, that this reduction shall not apply to any of the following articles and that such articles shall in all cases be subject to the duties mentioned in schedule A, viz.: wines, malt liquors, spirits, spirituous liquors, liquid medicines and articles containing alcohol, tobacco, cigars and cigarettes.

It takes out sugar, as far as the British colonies are concerned, from the former schedule. As my hon. friend will remember, sugar was not originally in the perferential column. The concluding clause of the bill is:

Except has herein otherwise provided, this Act shall be held to have come into force on the sixth day of April, in the present year, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight.

That is the day the minister made the announcement of those changes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the bill is read the second time, I wish to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to this fact: here is a bill which perhaps it is useless for us to discuss, for the simple reason that we have no power to change, alter or amend it; but I ask any one whether, from the explanation given by the hon. Secretary of State, he can understand the effect which these changes will have upon the trade of the country, unless he is very familiar with the subject. We are asked to adopt this, which we must do or reject it, without really knowing what we are doing. There is this much about it, however, which presses itself very forcibly on my mind after hearing the statement made by the hon. gentleman, and the reading of the clauses of the bill. It is a matter of congratulation to the country, and certainly to those who hold the views that I do on trade questions, and which was one of the fundamental principles that guided the last government in their tariff policy, and that is, that the hon. gentlemen are advancing as rapidly as they possibly can, towards protection. I congratulate them and the country upon that fact. Notwithstanding all their declarations in favour of free trade, every step that they are taking is in the direction of protection. There is one fault, however, in their policy which characterized it in the past, and which they appear to be determined to continue. We are told that there is a clerical error. It is not the first Finance Minister I have heard say, when he had made a mistake that it was a clerical error. I remember hearing a great deal of condemnation of a Finance Minister for using that expression when he wanted to change the rate of duty imposed upon any one article, and now we have a clerical error on the part of this perfect administration and its Finance Minister, and that clerical error is in the right direction—rather the correction of the clerical error is in the right direction, and I congratulate my hon. friend the Minister of Justice upon the fact that the part of a government that is improving in that particular, and that he is foregoing in practice, if not in thought and sentiment, the Cobden theory which has characterized his whole political life, since I had the pleasure of knowing him. I should like to know very much, for my own satisfaction, who the manufacturer of this kind of rubber belting is, so that I could be able to come to a conclusion whether the increased duty of five per cent on his belting is the result of political influence, or a desire to encourage and protect that particular industry. If they can help their political friends by increasing the duty on his manufactured articles, I have no objection ; but I would much rather, in all such cases have the increase based upon principle rather than favouritism.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think it is a friend of the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So much the better. If such be the case, then I again congratulate the hon. gentlemen that they are actuated by political principle and not by a desire to confer a favour. So long as they do that, and go on increasing the protection to home industries, they will receive the congratulation and the support of members of the Senate who think as I do on this question. There is another wonderful change in this bill. I had the honour of changing the mode of testing sugars, molasses and other articles of that character which are imported into the country, and upon which test the duty was levied. I pointed out last year—I do not know that I spoke of it in the House but I did to the gentlemen who were to carry out the law—that their having gone back to the colour test of sugar, what is known as the Dutch standard, would open the door to fraud which it was impossible to prevent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But the law had been changed before last year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What law ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Fixing the duty.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Certainly the late government adopted the polariscope test.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Did you not change it back again ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, you changed it from the polariscope test, to the Dutch standard, and now you are harking back. If the change in testing the strength of sugar by the polariscope had not been made, and the Dutch standard had not been adopted in its place, it would not now be necessary to go back to the polariscope test.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman can correct me if I am wrong. I thought the polariscope test was not in force in 1896.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The polariscope test was adopted before Sir John Macdonald's death. I established a laboratory in Ottawa to which samples of all the sugar imported into every section of the country had to be sent, in order to be tested. I met the condemnation and disapproval of every sugar importer in Halifax, St. Johns, Vancouver and Victoria. In reply to all the opposition that was given to the policy then adopted by the government, they were told that the government would not recede from the stand they had taken until one year's trial of the new system was had ; and it was very gratifying to the government, and more particularly so to myself when a gentleman like Mr. Jones, of Halifax, whose political opinions and predilections were well known, and who had taken strong grounds, not so much against the polariscope test, as against the establishment of a laboratory in Ottawa—six months after it had been in operation, when he visited Ottawa, after examining the laboratory, he said he would not on any consideration go back to the old system; for the simple reason that when a cargo of sugar came in, all he had to do was to say to the owners, "I will give you so much per 100 lbs. based upon the government test, as to strength." One of the great advantages that the trade enjoyed by the adoption of one system, and one of the great advantages that accrued to the revenue of the country, was the fact that there was but one establishment in which the test of the sacharine strength of the sugar was made; while on the other hand, if you had a laboratory in each of the importing ports, you would have just so many more officers, who might be said to be tampered with, and great loss to the revenue might accrue. You can easily understand that a 16th or a 32nd part of a degree in strength on a cargo of sugar makes a great difference. The government has taken a wise course on going back to the old system, and still further on having adopted a system by which cheating and fraud, which could be perpetrated under the Dutch standard, is not so likely to occur. Under the polariscope test, if it is properly carried out, the frauds which were perpetrated in the past cannot occur. As an illustration, I have known, when I was Minister of Customs, Java sugar to be put on my table that with the colour test, would be admitted at the lowest possible rate of duty—under nine—and yet by the simple process of putting water upon it, shaking it up and letting it settle, you could pour off the water as black as ink, and in doing that twice, the residue would come up to 12 or 14 Dutch standard, but when you tested it by the polariscope it actually proved to have a strength of 95 per cent, and 100 is the highest. That is one reason which led the government to adopt the policy to which my hon. friend has returned. But what is the most important point in this, as I understand it, is that they have increased the duty upon refined sugars over 16, and have reduced the duties upon the raw material, so that they give those "bloated monopolists," of whom we have heard so much—these "robbers" of the poor people—actually greater protection than the protectionist government gave them.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—Is that in this bill?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Certainly, it is the effect of this bill. If the bill which the hon. gentleman has placed in our hands, and the interpretation he has put upon it, is correct, and the figures which he has given is right, there is no doubt about it that the sugar refiners have a much greater protection than they had under the law as it existed before these changes. I do not say that they have a greater protection than they had under the tariff which was placed on the statute-book by the Conservative party; but I do say that they have ample protection under this bill to carry on their work without any fear of successful competition from foreigners, and I am very glad that such is the fact.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Do we repeal item 534 and 536?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, they are repealed. I am also in favour of the extension of the preferential clauses of the tariff, as far as they are extended to the British Colonies. But in this, as in other instances affecting the tariff, I think they have committed the same blunder that they did in placing the preferential tariff upon the statute-book. The reason given by the government for extending these privileges to the West Indies is to help them out of their difficulties.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is, we are to join the mother country in extending trade to one of her colonies in order to help them, when she cannot help them. I am pleased to know that we occupy that important position. It is gratifying to every Canadian to learn that they can help a sister colony, but there is no reason why there should not be a concession asked from the West Indian Islands in return for the benefit which we give them—had you instead of imposing a duty upon the raw material, said to them: "We will allow your raw material to come into Canada free, or at a very nominal rate, to cover cost, if you like, if you will give us in return a reduction upon those agricultural products, food which we have to export and which you now receive not from Canada or from the British colonies, but from the United States."

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—They might make a better bargain with the United States, if you went on that principle.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, they tried that; there was a concession made by the late government of the United States in favour of these colonies. But when that which was supposed to be a concession was tested, proved not to be a concession.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They are negotiating with the United States.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is one reason why we should have negotiated with them. The moment the United States saw you were giving them an advantage, and that it was probable the trade of Canada would flow in that direction, they at once took steps in the direction of securing trade. I would have gone further and said "reduce your tariff upon flour and bacon and upon all articles where there is a high duty and we will give you raw sugar free." Then we would have a tolerably good market for the products of the soil of Canada in return for giving concessions in the matter of the products of their islands. That is the view I hold, and I believe it is a correct view upon which to carry on negotiations of this kind. In reference to the question of tobacco, I begin to understand really what the two bills mean, when you take them together. There had been a constant demand on the government by a certain manufacturer in Montreal—my hon. friend I dare say knows him very well—to change the mode of collecting duty upon raw material. He has been urging the government for the last six or seven years to change from the excise to the customs duty. I am speaking of the former government, and I suppose he continued it with this government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—From customs to excise I think the hon. gentleman means.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, excise to customs. Last session the present minister met that demand to the extent that appears upon the statute-book, to-day, of changing it from the excise to customs. Now the hon. gentlemen are going back again from the customs to the excise. We distinctly refused to accede to his request. That gentleman had the coolness to say to me, "if you will do this I shall make a hundred thousand dollars by it." I replied "do you suppose for a moment that if the government made the change they would permit you to keep, without paying duty on the immense quantity of raw material you now have in bond? That is contrary to the principles of the whole tariff, and if you have any such idea as that, you had better banish it from your mind at once; for the moment a customs duty was imposed the full amount of duty would be collected for every ounce of tobacco you have in bond to day." When he ascertained that, he was not so anxious to have the change made. I offer no opinion now, but no doubt the department have seen the error into which they had fallen and have now gone back to the old method. I am gratified, in the interest of the trade of this country, that the government have extended preferential trade to the different colonies. The principal colony that it will affect in the Pacific, is not New South Wales, as indicated by the Secretary of State, but Queensland, which is the sugar producing colony of the antipodes. It will also affect Fiji, because Fiji produces an admirable quality of sugar, better than Queensland produces; and as our present line of steamers, what we call the Canadian-Australian line, have changed their route, and instead of having a direct route from Vancouver to Sydney, New South Wales, had asked permission before I left office to stop at Fiji and also at New Zealand, and with the concessions which have been made, I hope it will enable the steamship lines which we are subsidizing, to secure a large trade in sugar from the Australasian colonies, which include Fiji. The great trouble in the past has been that while they have full cargoes outward from Vancouver, as much freight as they can possibly carry, and more, they have never had any return freight, hence the trade has not been as profitable to the ship-owners as it otherwise would have been. This concession, I hope, will stimulate the growth of a greater quantity of sugar in Australasia, by which our steamship lines can be made profitable. That is another step in the right direction, and it is a step in the direction of the policy of the late government, and as long as they continue in a policy which they tried to uproot, and said they would uproot, the better it will be for the prosperity of Canada. I saw in the newspapers—I did not see it in the bill—a proposition that was made in the Customs Department to change the customs law in reference to a deduction which is to be made upon liquors which are in bond. I do not know whether we are to have that law this session or not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not seen any reference to it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I saw it stated in the newspapers, and heard of a discussion in the other House upon the subject. It is done in the interests of the temperance people, particularly the prohibition people. Under the law as it exists, the quantity of spirits that go into bond is the quantity upon which the duty has to be paid when it is taken out of bond. So that if you put in a cask of spirits of any kind, and it evaporates five or ten per cent during the time it is in bond, that is not taken into consideration when the duty is paid. There are many reasons which have justified that system in the past. It has been the law ever since I have known anything about the Customs Act. The proposition now is, that if the merchant places spirits of any kind in bond, he is to be allowed so much reduction in the duty he pays, in proportion to the evaporation, which takes place and is guaged by the length of time the liquor is in bond. So that if anybody goes and taps it and takes a gallon out, and the evaporation does not take place, of course the merchant at once will say: "Oh that is the percentage of evaporation." Those who are judges of liquors say that liquor is improved by age and evaporation, because it is the deleterious properties of the liquor that evaporate. I am pointing this out particularly to my hon. friend from Sarnia, because I know he is interested in having "cheap liquor" in the country; and the result will be the merchant will pay less duty upon the spirit which he imports and the consumer will be enabled to get a better quality of liquor at a cheaper rate. I suppose when we take the health of a person into consideration, it is commendable. I have now made remarks which I intended to make when the budget came down, based upon the tariff and its changes, and I shall not take the opportunity of repeating them. Though I have but a cursory knowledge of the contents of the bill as it has been introduced and explained by the Secretary of State, I have again to compliment the government on the fact that they are reaching that point which I think every lover of his country ought to attain, that is the protection of every industry in the country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is gratifying to know that the hon. gentleman's criticisms are nearly all in favour of the changes which the government are making. In reference to this polariscope test there is a point I would draw attention to. The Act of 1894 is only applicable to the lower grades of sugar. We have improved the good example set by my hon. friend, and we are applying the polariscope to the higher grade.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think that is an improvement, but it is not so necessary in the interest of the revenue as the other.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON—While, as the hon. leader of the opposition says we have no power to amend this bill, I cannot take the same view he takes on the principle of preferable trade. I desire to take the opportunity of expressing my views upon the tariff policy of the government as so far developed. While I have opposed the government on account of their not having carried out their pledges of reform in the administration of the public lands, in the granting of subsidies which they used to charge against the late government were corrupt in their intention, in not having initiated the abolition of protection from the tariff, in not instituting measures of economy in the government of the country, in not having upheld principle as the guiding force of our national life. I support them in the principle of preferential trade which secured the denouncement of the German and Belgian treaties and paved the way for an inter-imperial commerce upon the basis of free trade. The preferential clause in our tariff, with which Sir Wilfrid Laurier was armed when he attended the Jubilee celebration of Her Majesty's long reign and which was made an occasion for the meeting of the premiers of the colonies of the British Empire with the Colonial Secretary to deliberate upon inter-imperial relations, was a loyal and patriotic move on the lines that commend themselves to my judgment. Being in London at the time of the Jubilee, which I attended as part of the Canadian contingent representing Canada on that auspicious occasion, I supported those views by a letter to the London Times of the 2nd July last, which, with the permission of hon. gentlemen, I will read, in order that it may go on our Hansard as one of the forces that helped to bring about an advanced step in our imperial relations at a critical period of the deliberations of our premier and his imperial colleagues:

To the Editor of the Times:

SIR,—As a representative of the Canadian Senate, I desire to take the opportunity of expressing my views upon the question that is uppermost in the minds of public men at the present moment as to what is to follow upon the footsteps of the magnificent escort that accompanied Her Gracious Majesty to St. Paul's Cathedral upon the day of Her Diamond Jubilee—an escort in which every corner of the world was represented and the physical power of the British Empire was displayed. It may fairly be said that the 60th year of Her Majesty's accession to the throne marked the completion of the foundation of the imperial structure which has been slowly but surely building during the Victorian era. The form of architecture which will shape the superstructure that has yet to be raised upon this foundation will, in all probability, take as long to develop itself and to complete, but we have to be building all the time. Canada has been well received through her contribution to the colonial forces and through her premier. These are two or three reasons that make us feel that her reception has been especially warm. One is that during the Victorian era she has evolved out of a few small provinces a national life which governs half of the North American continent under the British constitution, the best rule of political life yet known in the principles of government. She has emphasized the loyalty of her French-Canadian population through Sir Wilfrid Laurier, a representative of the race, who have been sons of Canadian soil for several hundred years. Last but not least, Canada has taken the first step to place British workmen on the same plane as Canadian workmen in Canadian markets, which may also be said to be the first practical step towards imperial unity. That step has not been taken for the purpose of developing imperial protection, which finds its advocates, but imperial free trade. Canadians have come to realize that protection in any form is a corrupt influence and restrictive to trade, and that a change is desirable; and as England admits our products free, we desire to expand our trade in that direction by the removal of the restrictive taxation which we now impose upon British goods. It is free trade that gives England her enormous purchasing power for the surplus of the world's products, and by the removal of all taxation from the necessaries of life enables her labouring population to maintain a constant expansion of her trade, at the same time constantly adding to their own comforts. The adoption of the same policy by Canadians will contribute further to the expansion of her own trade in the world's markets. While Canadians feel they cannot yet take down their barriers along the boundary of the United States while excluded from their markets, they can with advantage remove the barriers to British trade, because their exchange of commodities will be on even terms, and when the manufacturing power of Canada has been strengthened by this limited application of free trade principles, she will then be in a better position to ignore hostile tariffs, and, united with England upon a free trade basis, a valuable and ever increasing purchasing market will be established which must strengthen the forces and increase the wealth of the British Empire.

One of the obstacles to the carrying of this policy is the clause in the two treaties with Germany and Belgium which, while it does not forbid the British government discriminating in favour of her colonies, forbids the colonies discriminating in favour of Great Britain without extending the same policy to all those nations with whom we have most-favoured nation treaties in conjunction with the British government. It is this anomaly that Canada acting within her rights has set about abolishing. Since those two treaties were negotiated, Canada has enlarged her boundaries, and her self-governing powers have been constantly added to, even, when she so desired, to the negotiation of her own treaties. Canadians cannot see that there should be any obstacle to entering into closer trade relations with the mother country or the British Empire at large without reference to the trade of other nations. The tariff bill now passed is in force giving a discrimination of 12½ per cent this year, to be increased to 25 per cent next year, in favour of British trade. This action cannot very well be brought under the purview of international law, because it is a family matter and there is a remedy. Either the British government or the German or Belgian government have the power to give a year's notice to denounce the treaty that interfered with inter-imperial trade, or recognize the justice of our claim, and although the Canadian government have loyally embodied in the preferential clause of their tariff a practical submission to imperial interests in the question of these treaties, yet the fact that the new tariff is now operating is sufficient evidence of their anxiety to have a free hand in dealing with their free trade interests between England and Canada. When the economic force of free trade comes to be applied to the British Empire at large, and which one colony after another can fall into when they are prepared, it will serve as a greater object lesson to the nations of the earth, and cause their people to struggle to throw off the sinister influences of protection. Canada is in advance of the other parts of the British Empire in her political life. For thirty years she has been a nation of confederated provinces, each part of the national autonomy thus created working within their own limits under the British constitution with the most perfect freedom of action and without friction. In the promotion of free trade principles she is able to act as a unit and should the people of the United States continue to maintain their hostile tariff, she will become, under a new economic force the field from which the foreign trade of the American continent will be promoted upon the largest scale. These are questions which are now engaging the attention of the British statesmen. I may therefore, be pardoned for occupying so much of your space in advancing a Canadian view. The Canadian contingent returns home on Saturday, and both officers and men will carry with them the liveliest recollection of the kindness and attention they have received on all hands, and the unbounded hospitality that has been extended to them, and the friendship they have formed in Chelsea Barracks while acting together at the first imperial unit of British forces gathered in from all parts of the world as representatives of the physical power of the various countries they come from. Apologizing for occupying so much of your space.

I remain, &c.,

C. A. BOULTON.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier is accused of not having accepted an offer from the British government to apply the principle of protection to their customs tariff in favour of Canada. No such offer was ever made, no such offer was ever contemplated by the British government, so far as there were any evidences of such a policy being acceptable to the great body of the people represented by their enlightened press. Such an abandonment of the principles of free trade their country is not likely to sustain. It is a policy to tax their food and raw materials and in consequence tax their manufacturing power and their labour. It did not require any deep discernment to realize that the people of the United Kingdom were not going to tax the $500,000,000 worth of food products supplied by the United States with whom there has always been a desire to cultivate the most friendly relations, both commercial and political in the interests of the peace and good government of the world. Sir Wilfrid Laurier took the first step towards bringing the policy of the Canadian people into line with the commercial policy of the people of Great Britain which may be called the most enlightened policy of nations. In doing so he has written his name indelibly not only in the history of Canada but in the history of the British empire. For that he will always be honoured. If he had enforced upon his party the honest carrying out of principles which they had courted the confidence of the people upon he would have commended himself to every right thinking man in Canada. His party has courted the support of the manufacturers whom they denounced in opposition as leeches upon the body politic, when they sought not only by the taxation of labour and its requirements to maintain and swell their profits but to reduce the industrial power of our skilled labour by closing down factories and limit the manufacturing power of the people. If they are to have their way, they will remove the preferential clause and force the government to close its doors again on British trade. This policy will show itself in its economic force because all nations will have to compete on the terms, but until it eliminates the principle of protection as between Canada and the mother country our sister colonies it will, in my opinion, fail in its object. In order to try and present more clearly the favourable aspects of the trade with Great Britain and Ireland, I gave expression to my views last month, in an article I contributed to a magazine, entitled the "Dominion Review" which perhaps presents more clearly those views than I can at this late hour of the session give expression to. The question that is discussed in this paper is an important one. Great Britain has fostered the growth of our Canadian provinces, and given to them a national constitution within the British empire. The Imperial government handed over to Canada that vast extent of prairie, formerly under the charter to the Hudson's Bay Company, so that to-day Canada is one of the great continental countries of the world. We now exclude those self-same people of Great Britain from taking a share in the development of this large field for enterprise under a heavy tax on their trade. The question we may fairly ask ourselves is: Are we going to continue to maintain a ring-fence and exclude British trade, or open our doors and expand our trade in the direction of British unity? It is acknowledged by all, after twenty years' experience, the protection limits our power of production, in those articles for which protection is now imposed, to the demand or purchasing power of the five million people in Canada; consequently, there is a restrictive influence to the increase of population. The proof of that assertion lies in the formation of trusts and combines to limit production, and the consequent closing down of mills either temporarily or permanently. The purchasing power of the people of Canada is derived from the products of the soil, the forests, mines and fisheries. The return of the labour engaged in those industries supports the whole population. There is no outside source from which wealth is drawn; we must acknowledge that fact as a premise, to argument. Protective legislation undertakes to manipulate and distribute that earning power, which has the effect of throwing it into favoured channels, where it is accumulated and where it becomes largely unproductive. Our accumulated wealth is represented by our $60,000,000 of banking capital, while our currency, varying from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000 so far as it is in the hands of the people, represents our distributed wealth. Deposits are only capital when actively employed in the industrial life of the country, they rank with our forest and other sources of wealth, which is dormant capital until labour is applied to give it an earning power, when its profits then become accumulated capital, and as our industrial power is checked by protective legislation this commercial capital, accumulated through the earnings of the people, is largely used for the purposes of speculation and the manipulation of stocks. In other words, while it is difficult to borrow for industrial purposes in consequence of restrictive influences, money can always be borrowed for speculative purposes, through the deposit of securities. Speculative or joint stocks are thus appreciated, while real estate securities are depreciated. There are no figures at hand to show the amount of securities issued by joint stock companies, but the proportion that are not engaged in production from the soil or from other natural resources, are taxable agents on the earning power of the people, in proportion to the securities issued and which claim dividends. It is easy to show that the whole burden of national taxation falls upon our exports, the largest part of which is the product of the soil. This is apparent in the stagnation of that part of the people's wealth represented by real estate which should be the backbone of prosperity. We know that the value of our real estate is about $1,500,000,000. We also know that during the last twenty years it has fallen in value at least forty per cent during that period. If those figures are correct we can form some idea of the loss or depreciation of that great national asset and the earning power it represents. The depreciation in real estate is an evidence of a reduction in the earning power of our farms not so much through a loss in their producing power, as through the burden of taxation which reduces the purchasing power of the farmers product and thus restricts the power to add to the countries annual wealth. The evidence of registry offices in land sales will show that under a low tariff farm values are constantly on the rise, while under a high tariff parcels are constantly falling with each successive sale. The opponents of low tariffs must show that such is not the case to prove that protection does not wipe such a large proportion of our greatest national asset the depreciation in value of farm lands being so self evident under it. If our natural or raw products are the foundation of the wealth of Canada, it stands to reason that by releasing from taxation the labour engaged in producing them or from the burden of customs revenue on their necessaries, they will be in a position to produce more wealth for the country to the extent that they are released from that taxation. It should not be forgotten that taxation imposed on imports, returned to the country in payment for exports, is money withdrawn from the use of industrial labour before the money to purchase it with is produced. The principle of British taxation for national revenue is to release the necessaries of industrial labour and place the burden on the profits. All will admit that during the fifty years that principle has been in force in the United Kingdom it has proved to be the strongest known national force in the world, financial or physical. Now, to all yourselves with that broad imperial policy should be the aim of Canadian legislation. First, because the expansion of our trade will be on the lines of least resistance; secondly, because it is unnatural to tax British trade; thirdly, because our national and commercial strength will rapidly increase under such a policy. It must be admitted, as an axiom of international trade, that you cannot export advantageously unless you consent to import. International trade is not conducted on a basis of currency, as our internal trade is conducted, but upon a basis of barter, the payment of national indebtedness being the regulator, and the taxation on imports being the restrictor. Great Britain is the largest purchaser of our commodities, the totals being seventy millions to the United Kingdom, forty millions to the United States, and ten million dollars to all other countries, of Canadian products. In 1897, the year just closed, the imports from the United Kingdom were $29,400,000, including free and dutiable, and the imports from the United States were $30,482,000 dutiable and $31,100,000 free, a total of $61,649,000. In the aggregate, for the year 1897, the excess of exports over imports is $12,000,000, taking Canadian products and consumption as the basis. It is this excess that it becomes necessary to deal with in order to have a proper understanding of cause and effect. Since the blue books for the last financial year have come to hand, showing us the details of the government trade returns for the eight months ending February 28th, we see that they show a greatly increased excess of exports, amounting to $37,000,000. That is, $37,000,000 worth of our raw products, largely agricultural, have gone out of the country more than have been returned to it; or, eliminating foreign produce going and coming through Canada, the total excess is about $27,000,000 for the eight months. If the same rate should be maintained to the end of the financial year, we shall have parted with something like $30 or $40,000,000 worth of the industry of Canada for which there is no visible return. These exports are absorbed by our remittances abroad. There are three large items which absorb the returns of those industries which export, namely, the interest account of the Dominion debt, the net revenue of our two large railway corporations and the taxation on foreign products returned to pay for our exports. If British labour which admits our products free is taxed 30 per cent at our ocean ports for the commodities they desire to send back in payment, they can only return 70 per cent of the value exported to them; to that extent are the industries which produce those exports in Canada mulct of their profits, and by that 30 per cent of taxation are a portion of our exports also absorbed. We have, however, to look further then these three items to account for such a large excess of exports as $27,000,000 in the past eight months ending February It may be found in the speculative purchase of Canadian Pacific Railway stock, which rose from 50 last May to 89 in December, an appreciation of 39 per cent to the extent that this stock was purchased in Canada upon the deposit of a margin for a rise, the original price of 50 would have to be remitted by a loan from the banks to the seller of that stock abroad, or resold which would tend to make the stock fall again. To the extent that that remittance had to be made, to that extent our exports were absorbed. With these facts before us, it is evident that by the forced distribution of the profits of industry through its exporting power, legislation transfers those profits from localities which produce, to channels wholly apart from their point of origin. Did legislation permit the same freedom to British imports that are given to Canadian imports into the United Kingdom, the wealth that is now absorbed through the influence of monopoly, would be distributed through the natural channels uninfluenced by legislation. It should not be forgotten that commodities or products are wealth. Money or national currency is only useful for the purchase of these commodities whether they consist of iron, cotton, wool, a horse or a dog, or anything else. Now, the difference between our exports to the United Kingdom and our imports from the same is equal to $47,000,000, excess of exports. To appreciate the argument, it must be understood that exports is wealth going out of the country, and imports is wealth coming into a country. To the extent that our gross exports exceed our gross imports, some one else is getting the wealth contained in that excess other than those who produce it; and it should be understood that that excess is the profits of national industry. Now, if those who produce the wealth which is the support of the country are prevented by legislation from utilizing that wealth in the promotion of their own industrial life and the improvement of their own localities, the nation as a whole suffers. The fact that wealth is allowed to accumulate in a few hands by class legislation is no guarantee that the country is more prosperous than if the wealth were more equitably distributed, though it may be more in evidence. In fact, the country is likely to suffer by the desire of large capitalists to use their wealth in broader fields outside the country than can be found in a community of 5,000,000 people, with a restricted influence upon their individual enterprise through a non-expansive policy; and thus alienating the power of internal improvements by the absorption of our accumulated capital abroad. We cannot expand in the direction of our neighbours because they will not purchase the product of our labour untaxed; but we can expand it in the direction of British trade, because there is no restrictive influence, except our own taxation upon their return cargoes, which is under our control to remedy. All that we have to do is to remove that restrictive influence, and we at once attract British imports, which is returning wealth, and we secure a more extended investment of British capital, and a more extended interest on the part of our commercial friends in the development of our country. Ah, but some one will say, what about our manufactories? They will be ruined. Not at all; they will expand in their operations as well as every other industry. There is an economic force in the removal of taxation upon the product of industrial labour that will cause the nation that adopts it to forge ahead. It is irresistible. That is self-evident in the case of New South Wales which is concentrating under its free trade policy the trade of the Australian continent. It should first be realized that the manufacture of our raw products requires no protection from our ocean trade, and our forest wealth is accumlated capital, dormant. Our total exports are $119,000,000 for 1896-1897, of which manufacturers contribute $9,500,000. Out of this export of $9,500,000 of manufactured goods, the seven following industries make a total of nearly seven million dollars, namely: Agricultural implements (including bicycles), $1,000,000; cottons, $1,000,000; leather, $1,500,000; spirits, $500,000; musical instruments, $400,000; manufactures of woodenware, doors and sashes, including pulp, etc., $1,648,000; iron and steel, $500,000. That exporting power is an evidence that those articles can hold their own abroad, and if stimulated by free imports from Great Britain, they would be strengthened in their power to contribute to the national wealth, represented by their exports. Free iron would undoubtedly stimulate the iron and implement trade, and the extent our manufacturers are able to hold their own abroad, to that extent they can hold their own in our own markets, so long as they are protected from slaughtering by our neighbours. It stands to reason that if our manufacturers can compete abroad with ocean freights against them, they can compete successfully at home with power of distribution in their favour. Placing everything within their reach that they require to manufacture with on the most favourable terms, that power to compete must be immensely strengthened. The scope of Canadian manufacturing energy is limited within a ring-fence and for a small population; it must have room to expand. That expansion cannot be secured by waiting for other countries to open their markets, but it can be secured by showing an energy and independence that will force its way through barriers, not aided by legislation, which is guided by a silent influence of monopoly, but through the absence of any legislation of a restrictive character. Our present system is creating an autocracy for our future population that will submerge that manly independence that was undoubtedly the characteristic of our Canadian forefathers. Public opinion to-day does not count to the extent it should in the government of the country. It is the power of monopoly exerted by silent influences which do not come to the surface. To be forewarned is to be forearmed. The popular cry of "Canada for Canadians" is often made to do duty for patriotism by fostering the idea that opening our doors for the trade of Great Britain to pass freely through our borders, is going to rob Canadians of their patrimony, and banish employment. Opening our door for the trade of Great Britain will multiply employment. By doing that we merely exchange a restricted market for an enlarged and practically unlimited one, which our magnificent coast-line brings to our doors, and which we at present close out by legislation. That faith in a policy that advocates the opening of our doors to nations that will not open theirs to us, especially when they are neighbours, has not yet reached Canadian hearts, and in their dealings with those nations Canadians act on the defensive. The question of the effect, consequent upon our increased exports and imports with Great Britain, upon freedom of exchange both ways, is another matter; and Canadians can more easily realize the benefit in that case of an even exchange as of mutual advantage. The fact that other nations do not realize the benefit has nothing to do with us; we have to exert our intelligence and liberty of action to understand its advantages. We are a large country with a sparse population; we are a prolific race, but we cannot absorb our growing manhood, and they sell their labour in the country to the south, where careful training and a vigorous frame tell in every walk. The restrictive force of monopoly in all its phases engendered by legislation limits our power of expansion, and impoverishes those industries engaged in the production of our raw materials and food products, which require no protective legislation for themselves, but which have to bear the cost of the protective legislation imposed upon their daily necessaries. The admission of British trade in exchange for Canadian trade upon the same basis, on the principle of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, will remove the restrictive force, expand our trade, develop our power to produce our raw materials, which is Canadian wealth, and strengthen our manufacturing power.

In referring to our imports into the country, the editor of the Canadian Manufacturer calls them the importer's tax, but they are certainly not a tax upon the production of raw materials, when we admit the purchaser of those raw materials to our markets upon the same terms that he admits us. When the trade in our natural products totals up $110,000,000, as against $9,500,000 in manufactured products, a large portion of which, are the manufacture of our own raw material, it is easy to see that our material development is being taxed in such a manner that the profits of our raw materials are being diverted from their natural channels, and that their expansion on sound economic lines is being checked. To forecast the probabilities in the event of establishing free trade with Great Britain on an even keel, is not out of place. The economic force that applies to British trade will make Canada a cheap country to live in and a cheap country to manufacture in—two things that will tend to multiply employment, increase our population, make that population self-reliant, and enable it to enter the markets of the world with force. We have only to admit competition between Great Britain, which produces twelve million tons of iron, and the United States, which produces fifteen million tons, to increase our iron manufactures. Our annual production of only 36,000 tons is not in the race. Under our present system, the rebate of duty on foreign iron imported for manufacture, when it is re-exported, is a direct bonus to foreign iron against which Canadian iron cannot compete, because it has no rebate for export, consequently home consumption is charged with a tax that foreign consumption is released from. The establishment of free trade with Great Britain will be an incentive to our neighbours and British capitalists to establish branch factories in Canada, utilize our water powers and facilities for transportation, and make Canada the exporting country of this continent in manufactured goods, which protection in the United States checks from that country. This would result in an increased demand for agricultural products in our own centres. It does not appear that there would be any phase of our industrial life that would be seriously affected by the adoption of a broad policy in our commercial relations with the great industrial life of the United Kingdom. There is one incontrovertible fact, that the greater the distribution of the necessaries and comforts of life, the more employment there will be in producing them, and the more humane will be the principles which foster it. On the other hand, monopoly of a small market by restrictive legislation drives out the best of our Canadian manhood, checks individual effort, and produces stagnation when production in our stimulated manufactures is absorbed. There is the parting of the ways. One finger-post points to monopoly, the other to unrestricted effort in building up a strong and progressive nationality in the broad expanse of Canadian territory. Our neighbours are exclusive in their seventy-million market. As long as their policy leads them to pursue an exclusive policy, we must look farther afield for an enlarged market, and meet their legislation with protective enactments, always holding ourselves in readiness to reach out the hand of commercial friendship when they realize that it is mutually beneficial, in the meantime utilizing their raw materials for the promotion of our industrial life. With the United Kingdom we have everything in common with which to enlarge our trade, and such an enlargement can only be followed by beneficial results Our ocean ports, our sea-borne activity, and our inland communication will be stimulated. The eyes of the world are directed to our mineral developments in the Rocky Mountains and elsewhere. The British government regards our prairie region as the best and nearest source of food supply ; our timber resources must be stimulated by admitting our return cargoes free. The farmers of our western country have to bear the full brunt of protective taxation ; all the goods that go west of the lakes are dutiable or protected goods; none are free ; while their exported produce, wheat and cattle, goes direct to Great Britain. To compel them to sell in one market and buy in another is an injustice that will bear fruit injurious to the best interests of Canada the longer that it is continued. The success of our western country is the success of Canada ; and it is far better to act under the influence of a broad policy, which recognizes that the freedom of our markets for our best customer and senior partner in our national life is the surest way to realize profits that will flow to the treasury under a more enlightened system of taxation for revenue. The idea that somebody else than the industrial life of Canada pays our customs revenue is exploded. Our $119,000,000 of exports, which should go out to purchase imports, bear the whole charge of revenue, and are further absorbed to meet our national indebtedness and our corporate liabilities incurred abroad. An unnatural burden is thus placed upon the labour of the country, which is the mainspring of its prosperity. Canadians have a responsible trust entailed upon them in governing this large country well. The weight of power is in the eastern provinces, and wisdom is necessary to guide the destinies of the country in such a manner that individual effort may have the freest play to add to the resources of the country, and to increase its wealth in any of our provinces. That individual effort will be increased in its power by the removal of any legislative restriction in our commerce with Great Britain; that returning commerce entering our ocean ports will scatter itself along the lines of our great railways; and that the influx of wealth generated by it will increase the prosperity of our financial and manufacturing centres, and bring our natural resources more into contact with both the outside world and our hardy population, as the certain collateral results, must be made apparent to all. If this paper should induce any of its readers to sum up the economic results that will follow upon taking our bars down to allow British trade to flow freely through Canadian channels, it will not have been written in vain. It is the logical sequence of the denouncement of the favoured-nation treaties with Germany and Belgium—treaties denounced at the instance of both parties in Canada for the sole purpose of allowing Canada to act with freedom in removing the barriers to the free access of British trade without being open to the charge of discriminating against foreign countries. The freedom of British trade will, in the opinion of the writer, stimulate every industrial centre, increase our rural population, and add to our natural strength in all avenues of commerce. The purpose is to show that there is a greater economic force for material strength and national prosperity in the principle of free trade, than in our so-called commercial protection. It must be admitted, however, that circumstances alter cases, and that while we can with national advantage admit British goods upon a mutual free-trade basis, the exclusion of our products, which is our purchasing power, from American markets by high tariffs changes the conditions in so far as they affect the Canadian people. Not so with Great Britain, where our products are admitted free. I notice that the Finance Minister spoke in his budget speech of "my friends the sugar refiners." I recollect when Sir John Macdonald referred to Mr. Stairs, the rope manufacturer in Nova Scotia, and the Liberal party accused him of helping the twine manufacturers, Sir John said, "Mr. Stairs helps me, and why should I not help him" and I suppose the Finance Minister is acting on that principle," but with this difference, Sir John by a readjustment of the tariff built up Mr. Stairs, while the Finance Minister of the Liberal party always condemned it as corruption, which now by his own confession he is adopting as his principle by increasing the protection of the sugar refiners. He speaks of his friends the sugar refiners helping him, and why should not he help them. The only thing is that the sugar refiners who yesterday were ready to cut the throats of the present government, are to-day the friends of that government, which shows as far as the manufacturers are concerned, that they have no politics at all, they are the friends of whichever government happens to be in power, and intend to keep them as long as they act as their friends. That is what I call expediency. That is what I call a corrupt motive. That is not acting on the high principle which should influence the government of this country. We have a country extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific and there is only one way we can govern and develop it successfully, and that is to act upon principle, and also to have our trade based upon freedom. It is utterly impossible for us to say we are going to tax the province of British Columbia with its ocean trade on the Pacific, and we are going to tax the farmers because they have nobody to represent them, and we are going to reduce the power of the miners to produce wealth in the country by taxation. Every hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that it is the raw material, the raw products of the country that produce the wealth of the country, and that the manufacturers have been legislated for until they have become a monopoly in Canada, unwilling to compete for the trade of the world, because they have for a limited number, which they keep limited, a better living. The very best evidence in all that, is seen in the depreciation of our real estate the product of which is taxed to keep them limited. I will not detain the House any longer, but I could not let this opportunity pass without putting my views upon this question on record. I quite agree with the principle of extending the preference on sugar to all the component parts of the British Empire, but the people of the British Isles who purchase seventy million dollars worth of our raw products freed from customs imposts, should receive the same treatment at our hands.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—After the exhausting labours we have had for several days and the long speeches we have had to listen to and suffer, it is perhaps out of place for me to attempt to say a word or two at this late hour, but after the critical speech delivered by the hon. leader of the opposition, who was for many years Minister of Customs and a member of the cabinet that carried on legislation for Canada nearly since confederation commenced, I feel that I would be neglecting my duty if I did not take the liberty of making a few remarks on some of those propositions that he has placed before the House. His first proposition, as I heard it, was with reference to the fact that the government should promote trade with the West Indies. Well we all are most anxious to promote trade with any country, and especially with the West Indies. But, may I ask him, did he or his government at any time ever arrange a tariff so as to enable us to trade with the West Indies? We all know, hon. gentlemen, that the great exports, the great natural products of the West Indies, are sugar, molasses and the products of molasses. The first act of a former government of Canada was to introduce an extreme measure of protection to exclude at least one-third of the staple goods of the West Indies from Canada, and instead of holding out inducements to the West Indies to trade with us for our flour, cheese, butter and other commodities, the government substituted for what we could get from the West Indies, and manufactured 4,000,000 gallons of proof spirit per annum. Well, hon. gentlemen, I dare say those engaged in the manufacture of this spirit would hold up both hands and exclaim that every man was unpatriotic if he criticised or wished to prevent them from manufacturing the native spirit. But I simply ask this House and the country of what advantage is the manufacture of 2,000,000 gallons of alcohol in this country, principally from foreign grain, compared with a third at least of the trade with the West Indies which we can secure if we offer inducements. The people of the West Indies, largely, properly and naturally manufacture spirit, and at a very low rate, and it is good spirit, because it is manufactured out of the native sugar cane juice; and if we could hold out the inducement that we would take their sugar as one-third of their cargo, their molasses as another third of their cargo, and their rum as another third, we might say very properly to them: "gentlemen, we place before you a very fair proposition, one that will suit us, and we do not see why it should not suit you also." Therefore, on that basis I think we could induce the people of the West Indies to trade with us extensively. There is no reason why they should not. They want our goods, but they say we do not take their goods, and consequently it would be a one-sided trade; and therefore they refuse it. I wish this point to be thoroughly understood, because whether this government will pursue the same scale of tariff or not, I am not prepared to say; but whilst they do, I presume to state that it is an utter impossibility to develop trade with the West Indies. We must tell them we will take their products if we expect trade with them, just as we should tell France we will take their wines and their brandy if we expect them to trade with us. Now I want to make a few remarks as to the item of shrinkage which was referred to by the hon. gentleman who was at one time Minister of Customs and who ought to be an authority on these matters. I wish to point out—and I do not know whose fault it is, I do not wish to impute fault to anybody if I can help it—in Canada according to the present system of bonding liquors they are placed in private warehouses. In other countries, especially in Britain, they have Queen's warehouses, and we formerly had Queen's warehouses in New Brunswick before we came into confederation, all spirit had to be bonded in the Queen's warehouse, and under circumstances that precluded the possibility of suspicion that any tampering could take place; consequently if an outage were found when the package of liquors was being taken out of the custom-house, the treasurer was perfectly justified in allowing for the outage, because he was sure that there was no tampering with the packages. They were in the public, or Queen's warehouse under a trustworthy officer, at a distance from all possibility of access to those packages of goods. But now the case is very different. There are private warehouses, and although I believe the officers are very accurate, and perhaps anxious to perform their functions honestly and rightly, nevertheless it is a perfect impossibility that these officials should ascertain what is going on in those warehouses in their absence, and consequently there may be very wrong things done. We have known instances where casks of liquor had been wholly taken out and substituted with water. We have known other cases where casks had been totally empty. Now, I ask this House would it be fair to expect the Customs Department to make an allowance for those outages where they occurred under very suspicious circumstances? Until we go back to having a Queen's warehouse or something of the kind, for wines and spirits, I hold we will never be sure of the qualities of liquor nor will we be sure that the quantities of liquors that duty should be paid on are there when entries are being made out.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—We will soon have prohibition.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—All right. I am in favour of prohibition, perhaps. There is another point, hon. gentlemen, and it is this: the question of the manufacture and bonding of tobacco was brought up. That is a branch of trade that I think I know something about. I know that certain parties commenced to manufacture tobacco in Canada about the time of confederation. We know pretty nearly what they were worth then. Subsequently they could make beautiful presents of half millions of dollars for charitable institutions. I should like to know where these half millions came from. I should like to know whether these half millions were not taken out of the people by extreme protection. That was it. They had a monopoly of the manufacture, and the consequence is these men made millions, and the country lost millions per annum. They lost it because if the tobacco had to come from abroad, duty would have been paid on every pound of tobacco and paid at the regular customs duty, whereas the manufactured tobacco came under the excise laws, and the excise laws and the customs laws were at variance; one was high, and the other was low, one protected the manufacturer, and the other bled the consumer, and the consequence was that the manufacturers got rich, and from that day to this they have not become numerous, because it is a monopoly. You see no small manufacturers because the present manufacturers have a monopoly and made extensive capital, which shuts small capitalists out. Now, the next point I wish to bring before the House is the evaporation of liquors. The hon. gentleman, who was formerly Minister of Customs, no doubt, a man of experience, but still theoretical experience. He did not know that there are two or three kinds of spirit, two of which are improved by age.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes I did.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Another spirit is not improved by age; it simply evaporates without improving the liquor, but, on the contrary, the evaporation weakens it, because it is the fluid, or alcohol, or gas which evaporates, leaving the water behind. Alcohol is lighter than water, and rises to the top, and consequently evaporates and the water stays behind in the cask. Now it is known to gentlemen of experience, in the importation of French spirit that it improves by age because it is a weak spirit. In the first instance when it goes into bond. It is only about half water and half spirit; consequently it does not evaporate extensively, but becomes neutralized and mellow and in that way it is called good. Therefore, on brandy I hold there is no necessity for allowing for evaporation, but on liquor made from grain, and especially from raw grain, it is entitled to some consideration, if it is any length of time in bond, because it will evaporate. Now these are the distinctions I wish to draw. I do not know that it will do any good to mention them; but it is right at all events that they should be announced by somebody, and if they are taken into consideration at any future time, when the tariff is being reformed, so much the better. The importance of the West India trade, especially, I should like to keep before the public. We cannot have it under our present tariff, because we cannot hold out inducements to the West Indies to trade with us. I do not know that there is any use of saying much more, because what I say will not go into practice, but before I sit down I will point out again most earnestly that the government should take consideration at some period, not in the remote future, of the fact, that instead of having private warehouses for liquors especially, that we should have Queen's warehouses in every city. I believe they are just as important for the purpose of the protection of the revenue and reducing even the cost of collecting revenues, because almost every private warehouse now has a special officer, whereas three officers could attend to the Queen's largest warehouse where at the present we have so many. That alone would be a very great saving to the country, and it would also be such a protection that instead of the liquor trade to-day being looked upon as a trade to be shunned from the very fact that I do not know where, and I don't know anybody who does know where you can get a house that you can depend on to get pure liquor as it is branded. I do not find any fault with the liquor dealers, because the tariff for the last twenty years has been compelling those men to infuse alcohol into their liquors.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN — Water, you mean.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Alcohol; the duty on alcohol is so arranged that by infusing it into other liquors they make a profit. They are compelled to do it, and the consequence is, instead of drinking good wholesome liquors, the temperance people tell us, and very properly, that we are drinking liquors made from alcohol. There is some truth in it, but it is not the people's fault; it is the fault of the tariff and the temperance people, who urged it on.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—What kind of spirituous liquor would it be that would not contain alcohol?

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Commercial alcohol —spirit of wine—is made from raw grain, or from potatoes and other substances of that kind. Other spirit, such as brandy, is distilled from the wines of France. That is the difference. Then, again, there are the Scotch whiskies which are good liquors, liquors that the Prince of Wales might drink, and very properly: that liquor is made from pure picked malt, barley, manufactured into almost crystallized sugar before it is put into the still and liquor made of it. The temperance people think that the consumption of liquor will be reduced. I think it would be very wrong, for if we take liquor out of the commerce of the world, commerce will become very much impaired. Instead of the production of liquor being reduced, as some hon. gentleman said the other night, it is not reduced but simply changed. The hon. gentleman will see that in 1893 alone, the world's production of ale, or wine produced from barley malt, was four billions five hundred million gallons, manufactured from 7,270,000 tons of malt, and 82,000 tons of hops.

An hon. MEMBER—No.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—You may call it beer if you like. It contains the same quantity of proof spirit as the light wines of Germany and France. I say in consequence of the enormous duty put on spirit, people who would use these articles are driven from them, and are compelled to drink it—and the supply is increasing—under the name and form of barley wine, or ale. Now I do not wonder at that, because alcohol is only worth forty cents a gallon and has to pay in the neighbourhood of four dollars a gallon duty. If a man finds that out, he is not going to drink an inferior spirit that has to pay a duty of four dollars when he can get beer containing all the alcohol he wishes to drink at a very low rate, and consequently in the schedules the quantity of spirit is being reduced apparently, but it is being supplied by the extra quantity of ale manufactured and used. In 1893—I have the return in my office—there was manufactured four billions five hundred million gallons of ale, and I believe this year's manufacture will be much more; consequently the temperance people are not doing so much as they think. They are simply displacing one liquor and substituting for it another, that is all.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

Under suspension of the rules the bill then passed through its final stages.

NORTH-WEST IRRIGATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

AMENDMENT ABANDONED.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In reference to Bill (146) "An Act to amend and consolidate the North-west Irrigation Acts of 1894 and 1895," I have seen the hon. senator from Calgary and told him that the Commons would not accept that amendment as to the rates, and he told me that he would not press his amendments. Therefore, I move that this House does not insist on the second amendment made to this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I can now explain this bill to the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, that is all right, we understand what it is now.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Very well then, I move that the forty-first rule of this House be suspended and the bill be now read a second time.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The bill then passed through its final stages under a suspension of the rules.

THE EVENING SITTING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say to my hon friend that there are only two bills to come up from the House of Commons, the bill relating to the judges, which was here and which was amended by us and sent back to them, and which has yet to come to this House, and the Supply Bill. I think the House of Commons expect to get through with the concurrence in the supplies by six o'clock, but of course the Supply Bill will not be in a condition to be sent up to us until Monday morning, and as we have so very little time left now, I would suggest that when the House adjourns it stands adjourned until Monday at eleven o'clock, and we can put those two bills through and prorogue at three o'clock.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not suppose the hon. minister wishes us to infer that the government will object to the amendment made to the County Court Judges Bill, or that they will suggest any new amendment?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think they do propose to amend the amendment by dropping the whole of that section relating to the limitation to the age of judges. Of course I cannot say, but my impression is that the bill will come to us in that form, and therefore there will be no limitation upon the age of the judges at the present time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Or in the future?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Or in the future. My impression is, from all I can gather, that there is a general feeling in this House that if the judges were allowed their full salary as a retiring allowance, there would be no objection to apply the age limit to those who are already county judges, and if that rule is accepted, perhaps that part of the bill had better stand over until another session.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There could be no objection to that, but I think it would be highly improper for the Commons to insist at this stage, and with the limited number of senators here, upon their original bill. Of course I am only speaking for myself, but I do not think there would be any objection to an amendment of the character to which my hon. friend refers, and then I suppose the government would consider the propriety of introducing a bill next year providing for the full retiring allowance to all judges. If they do, I hope my hon. friend will consider well the question I put to him the other day, as to whether the Supreme Court Judges do not stand in precisely the same position as the County Court Judges to the government? I do not want to say much about it, but it is just as well, and I think the country would not object, to have the principle apply in the direction of the higher as well as the lower courts, if it is to be applied at all.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I should not like the Senate to adjourn under the idea that a proposition of that kind would receive anything like unanimous consent. I think a proposition of that kind is far more objectionable than the bill in the other form.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not committing myself to anything.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The hon. minister said that that was the opinion of the Senate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was the opinion of a good many, but not of all.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, it was the opinion of many, but it was not unanimous. The changes I have suggested, which may possibly be made in the Commons, are to some extent the necessary outcome of the amendment made here, because the first part of that clause which was struck out is a part that exists, except with regard to the limitation of age, in the law as it now stands, so that it is not necessary to repeat it. The only words left that were new were those limiting the age, and that part we did not wish to have stand unless under the condition of which I spoke.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The Supply Bill will not be in shape perhaps till we meet on Monday.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman must have a quorum on Monday.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. leader of the opposition has a majority behind him in this House, and if I had all the friends of the government that are present in Ottawa, I am not sure that we would have a quorum; therefore we are dependent upon my hon. friend discharging his constitutional duties.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am afraid the position of the government is very bad if they are not sufficiently strong to raise a quorum.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am speaking of the maximum number.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—We will have a quorum.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We will do what we can to help the government to get out of their troubles.

The Senate then adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Monday, 13th June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'Clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THE FRANCHISE BILL.

EXPLANATION.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—As I was not present on Friday when the compromise on the Franchise Bill was arrived at in this House, I desire to make an explanation regarding it. I was not in favour of the compromise agreed to by the majority of the Opposition. I was in the minority, but I was in very good company and would likely, under similar circumstances, be there again. I was informed that the hon. Solicitor General in another place was very discourteous to me personally in moving the rejection of the Senate amendments to the bill. I told my informant that I did not believe it, as in any little intercourse I had ever had with that official I had always found him a courteous gentleman. I read his remarks in the Commons Hansard yesterday, and learned that I was right, that the Solicitor General had said nothing of which I or anybody else could complain. But the Solicitor General said, referring to me, that the man who drew up the Senate amendments had no conception of the Franchise Act, and, safe in a haven of rest, does not know what an election means. While I regret the hon. gentleman's opinion, I cannot say I feel it very crushing, but, at the same time, I think it very disingenuous. He knew that the amendments were not drafted by me, but by some of the best lawyers in the House of Commons where it was first moved—any one of whom is at least his professional equal. I stated this fact in my observations in moving the amendments in the Senate, which evidently the hon. gentleman has not taken the trouble to read. When I decided to move the amendments to the bill, I requested the law clerk of this House to put himself in communication with the professional gentlemen in the Commons who were interested in the subject, and to get me such amendments as would, to their minds, meet the object in view, and he did so. The law clerk told me that the amendments had been drawn up by three of the ablest lawyers in the Commons, after much deliberation, who were satisfied that they would meet the end in view. I have had no communication whatever with the hon. leader of the opposition, or any of its members, in the Commons on this or any other question during this session.

I wish to say further, that when the Franchise Bill was first before the Commons, a month ago, and long before it had got to the committee stage in that House, I approached the Minister of Justice, the leader of the government in the Senate, and said to him that I did not desire to see any collision between the two Houses on the Franchise Bill, and that I thought a conflict could easily be avoided if Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba were placed on the same footing in regard to an appeal to the judiciary as Ontario and Quebec. The hon. Minister of Justice urged the usual government objections to amending the bill in that direction in this House or this parliament. I then said to the leader of the House, "Your government is on good terms with the local governments in each of these provinces, and they would go far to help or please you; if you will get a pledge from the local premiers of these provinces that they will amend the franchise laws so as to give an appeal to the judiciary, it will be satisfactory to me and I think to all concerned." I pressed the hon. gentleman more than once on this point, but to no purpose. Yet it seems the compromise arrived at is in the direction of what I suggested, although not identical with it. I think it must be evident, from these facts, that I was not actuated by partisan motives or with a desire to embarrass the government by any action I took in relation to that bill before this House.

As to the bill itself, it is admitted on all sides that a more crude and ill-digested piece of legislation was never submitted to the parliament of Canada than this same Franchise Bill as introduced in the Commons by the hon. Solicitor General, and that it would have been unworkable, if it were not for the numerous amendments made to it in committee of that House, from beginning to end, and chiefly by the members of the opposition. The draftsman of the original bill had evidently no conception of the work he had undertaken to perform, which necessitated all the amendments made to it.

TAX ON COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON — Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to a bill that has become law in the province of Prince Edward Island, containing the following provisions:—

A creditor shall not obtain a verdict judgment or decision thereon unless it is proved at the trial of such action that at the time of such sale the said creditor, or the person who acted and sold for him such goods or merchandise had duly taken out a license according to the provisions of "An Act to impose a direct Tax on certain classes of Traders," and which license was in force at the time the sale of said goods, wares or merchandise was negotiated.

The legislature of Prince Edward Island some three or four years ago passed a law, imposing a tax on commercial travellers requiring them to take out a license before they could make sales or do business in Prince Edward Island. It has been found that the provisions of this law have been evaded, and in order to prevent such evasion the legislature of the province has this session passed an Act containing the provision that I have just read. I think the provision is an extraordinary one, and that it is a very bad one, indeed, and I may say that there is no second chamber in Prince Edward Island, and that this bill was brought in at a very late stage of the session, and was passed through without that criticism that would, under other circumstances have taken place in regard to its contents. I deprecate this bill, and consider it a very bad one, and agree in every word that has been said about it by the Montreal Journal of Commerce, which uses these words:—

(Montreal Journal of Commerce.)

Legislation of this class is highly objectionable for many reasons but mainly because of its iniquity and the serious injury it is calculated to reflect upon the credit of the province and its individual merchants where it is in force. We can hardly believe such a result to have been intended, but the above act is perilously near, one to enable Prince Edward Island merchants to repudiate their debts. Now they are well known to us to be as honourable a body of traders as in Canada.

This is the view taken of it by the Montreal Journal of Commerce and I have no hesitation in endorsing it. I do not object, however, to the construction put upon this bill, and the comment which appeared in the Montreal Witness on Saturday last, which contains an unjust reflection on the province of Prince Edward Island, and it is very unfair that the Montreal Witness or any other leading journals of Canada should take hold of an occurrence of this kind, and couple the people of the province in its entirety as being a party to a fraud. The Witness says:

The commercial relations of Prince Edward Island with the rest of the Dominion are in the opinion of the people of that province altogether too close and friendly. The merchants and manufacturers of the Canadian mainland have been, it seems, altogether too anxious to do business with the people of the Island, and certain Prince Edward Islanders have been foolish enough to encourage them by buying and selling with them.

Now the people of Prince Edward Island, as far at all events as the upper provinces are concerned, have not shown any disposition in the past, as the Journal of Commerce admits, to act otherwise than honestly, and they have shown every desire to cultivate business relations with the people of the upper provinces. To show that the people of Prince Edward Island are not to be held responsible for this extraordinary measure passed by its legislature, I quote from the Charlottetown Examiner:

> The disgrace inflicted from our legislature upon our merchants serves our merchants right, for they should long ago have risen in protest against the contemptible tax payment of which the legislation that has brought a cloud upon their fair fame is intended to secure. We cannot believe that the Minister of Justice will allow the act to pass. For the credit of this province we sincerely hope that he will see his way to put his foot on this measure passed by our Liberal statesmen.

This is one of the leading papers in Prince Edward Island, a Conservative paper, speaking of the bill after it was passed by the local legislature. I make these remarks in order to place on record that the people of Prince Edward Island are not oblivious of the fact that this measure is one that is calculated to injure their fair fame, and to show that there is in the province itself just as strong a feeling against it as there is in the other provinces of Canada. My object in calling attention to this was also to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, whether his attention had been called to this Act, and also I wish to ask, is it his intention to permit this act to remain in force?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have not considered the Act, and I could not communicate any opinion to the House that I have not yet communicated to His Excellency on the subject.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—In respect to the matter which was brought forward by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, that this was a case of one province passing a law to tax the people of another province, I think it is contrary to the intention of the British North America Act.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

RETURNED FROM THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

A message was received from the House of Commons returning Bill (150) "An Act to amend the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts," with an amendment.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—What is the effect of the amendment?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The effect of the amendment is that the clause fixing an age limit is dropped out for the present, as it was a consequential amendment to the amendment made in this House, and then the following section becoming the introductory section, two or three additional words became necessary and which stood in the first section before.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the whole paragraph fixing an age limit for judges is taken out of the bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes; they concur in the amendment made in this House, and make that amendment, as they regard it as a consequential amendment to what was made here.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The effect of the amendment is that that portion of the section which related to the compulsory retirement of judges after they have completed the 75th year of their age, struck out by the Senate, is approved. The Commons have gone further and have eliminated the former part of that clause which is as follows:—

> Every judge of a county court in any of the provinces of Canada shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, hold office during good behaviour and his residence within the county or union of counties for which the court is established.

And then the proviso, which is as follows: "Provided that no person shall hold or retain office as such judge after he has completed the 75th year of his age," is struck out. So that they agree to our amendment and strike out the other part of the clause, namely, that portion which relates to future appointments, leaving the law precisely as it is now.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I must confess that I do not see how one is dependent on the other. I cannot see what object the government could have in objecting to an age limit for the future. I do not very well understand their objection to the age limit for the future, unless it be for the purpose of bringing a bill forward again at another session, in order to have another tussle over this question, and I have no doubt the same result will follow, upon the broad principle laid down by the hon. member from Barrie, that you should not interfere with what are really vested rights, so long as there are no charges against the judges which should lead to their retirement from office.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say to my hon. friend and the House that there would be no object in keeping this age limit in at the present time unless it could be made immediately effective. Under the amendment it would be more than twenty years coming into operation. There was, however, an opinion expressed here, before the bill left the House, that if the retiring allowance to judges over seventy-five years of age was made a full allowance instead of a two-thirds allowance, the House would be disposed to favourably consider the proposition. It was thought desirable to remove this provision of the bill and leave the subject open to be dealt with at another session, if that was thought to be in the public interest

Hon. Mr. DE BOUCHERVILLE—What is the use?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We have in the first place to provide for the constitution of courts in the Yukon country. We have two district courts in the province of Ontario called into existence by the local legislature this session, where before there were stipendiary magistrates, for whom it is necessary to make appointments, and the local government of Quebec can also provide for the appointment of a superior court judge in St. Francis district. There were several new judges to appoint and salaries to provide, and in one instance a new court to create, and so the bill was absolutely necessary, apart from this provision altogether.

Hon. Mr. DE BOUCHERVILLE—But if this provision was struck out, instead of sending this amendment and leaving the bill as it is—

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is precisely what has been done.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I entirely agree with the bill as it now stands. I was not in the House at the time, but I could not support the motion of my hon. friend from Barrie, because I disapprove of the age limit altogether for county court judges. The law now provides a method of retiring county court judges for old age, which it does not provide for in the case of other judges—by means of commission, and although as it has been stated it has not been effective, it could easily be made effective. If the law could be strengthened to implement that provision it would be better. I believe the retirement of judges at seventy-five arbitrarily would work injustice. Long before that age it might be necessary to retire judges for various reasons, while many others would be in the prime of their power at seventy-five. I think an arbitrary retirement at the age of seventy-five is a wrong principle altogether. We should implement the law we have now by which county court judges can be retired for old age. If that law is not sufficiently effective that the government can use it it ought to be made so that a judge can be retired when his powers fail, but, would not absolutely retire a man at seventy-five when doing that would be retiring some who would be in the very strength of their power.

The motion was agreed to.

THE SUPPLY BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (174) "An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial years ending respectively 30th June, 1898, and the 30th June, 1899, and for other purposes relating to the public service."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the suspension of the 41st rule as far as the same relates to this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before this House proceeds to read this bill the second time, I may say that it is usual that we should be favoured with a statement by the members of the government as to what it contains. I understand there is a good deal of money being voted away by this bill, and though we may not have the power to amend a money bill, we have the power to reject it; we have certainly the right to know what it contains, and therefore, it is due to this House that we should have an explanation of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—During the numerous years that I have been in this House, it has not always been the practice for a member of the government to explain the Supply Bill to the House. I know for many years it never was done, but it is a very reasonable and proper request, and I am only too glad to give my hon. friend the information that he desires. In the first place, the supply bill for the supplementary estimates for 1897-98 amounts to $1,463,087 as against $1,777,000 last year. In schedule "B" which is the principal estimate for the financial year now approaching, the total vote on consolidated fund is $28,678,000, authorized by statute $19,124,000, total $47,853,760 as against $45,872,927 for the preceding year, a difference of about two million dollars. The amount chargeable to capital is $6,583,926. The charges that appear for the first time this year and are quite usual in their character, are largely due to both the supplementals for the present year and the amount of the estimates and supplementals for the next year due to the Yukon.

Hon. Mr. DE BOUCHERVILLE—How much does it amount to?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Taking the two years it amounts to considerably over a million. For the coming year in the main estimates, schedule B, salaries, Yukon district, $50,000; North-west Mounted Police, which has been largely increased, as hon. gentlemen know, $346,250. Then it is proposed to have two judges in Yukon district, and the amount is $9,000. Hon. gentlemen are also aware that a very considerable force has been sent up there of the permanent militia. There were some 200 men, what was called the Canadian permanent force. We are keeping those men up there, and it was thought advisable at the time to increase the forces there in order that law and order might be established, at all events for the present year. That involves an extra expenditure of $140,000. The surveys of the Stikine route and the Edmonton route and other expenses charged, about $15,000, making altogether $600,452 in connection with the Yukon. Then there is the plebiscite, which of course is an unusual item. That is $250,000. The plebiscite with the Yukon expenditure, makes $850,450. To gratify my hon. friend, who has asked for it, I may say that there is an item of $180,000 for a new steamer to Prince Edward Island. That, however, he has taken a note of before.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is chargeable to capital account.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not sure.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, it is charged to capital.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think it is. Then the Intercolonial Railway extension to Montreal has involved a very considerable expenditure, and the increase on that to Montreal is $211,000, and the additional rolling stock for the Intercolonial Railway is $600,000. The increased accommodation at St. John dock, making it a winter port, $250,000. There is an item for an elevator at St. John, $75,000, and for an elevator at Halifax, $75,000. Those items altogether make $2,240,000. So that hon. gentlemen will see that the increased expenditure is accounted for. The total increased expenditure, taking capital and consolidated fund, would be altogether—the total for the present year—$47,853,806, as against $45,872,922 for last year, making in round numbers $2,000,000. I have explained the items that aggregate a quarter of a million in excess of that $2,240,450. So that it will be seen, if you take out the extraordinary expenditure connected with the Yukon, the plebiscite and the extension to Montreal, and the necessary increase of rolling stock on the Intercolonial Railway, the amount really voted for the present year is not greater—in fact it is somewhat less—than that of last year, and it is certainly not two millions in excess of the amount voted in 1896-7, which was on the estimate of our predecessors. In 1896-7 the total vote was $46,132,442 as against $47,853,000 for the present year.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Does my hon. friend refer to the estimates that were finally submitted to parliament for 1896-7 by his government?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As the hon. gentleman knows, I think two months after the late government had the main estimates prepared, the government changed.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It was the figure actually submitted to parliament that year?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Projected by the former government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—So that after all there is scarcely justification for saying that the amount is so abnormally increased. The abnormal increase is shown to be for charges that could not very well have been anticipated, and could not very well have been avoided under the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend in submitting these estimates to the House has indulged in comparisons, but I notice, as hon. gentlemen will have noticed, that he confines his comparisons altogether between the estimates for the incoming year and their own estimates for the current year and a very slight comparison with the estimates for the year 1896 and 1897 which were also submitted by themselves to the House. It is true my hon. friend in a quiet way attributes these estimates of 1896-97 to the Conservative government that preceded him, but this point I wish to note, that my hon. friend does not venture to go beyond making comparisons between the various estimates of the present administration. He does not make any comparison with the expenditures of the late administration. That is a very strange change which has come over the tactics of hon. gentlemen in the government. They used to be very fond of comparisons, but they were comparisons between the administrative record of the Conservative administration and that of the Liberal government between 1873 and 1878, and they were able to show in the last year of the Conservative administration that the expenditure had gone up during the 18 years after the time the Mackenzie government had gone out of power by the amount of about twelve million dollars. These were the comparisons with which they were accustomed in those days to deal when discussing the financial position of the country, and we have not forgotten how strongly they condemned that increase from twenty-four millions when the Mackenzie government went out to thirty-six million when the Tupper administration resigned as being an increase of expenditure that was perfectly unjustifiable, that it was an expenditure which had its foundation in extravagance and corruption. These were the grounds they took. Now we all remember that in 1893 my hon. friend the Minister of Justice and his friends met here in Ottawa and they framed a platform for their party. They came together in great numbers and they laid down their policy and they said we do not want to be bound by what Mr. So and So said in this part of the country or another gentleman has said in another part of the country, but we are willing to be bound by what we solemnly declare in this Ottawa conference as our policy if we come into power. Here are the words of that platform as agreed upon at this Ottawa convention :

> We cannot but view with alarm the large increase of the public debt, and the controllable annual expenditure of the Dominion, and the consequent undue taxation of the people under the governments that have been continuously in power since 1878, and we demand strict economy in the administration of the government of the country.

Here was the solemn declaration of the party arrived at after grave consultation and after bringing all their wise men together from the shores of the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean in order to put their heads together and devise a platform, by which they were all to be bound. Following this platform we find that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the leader of the party, spoke in Toronto on the 23rd August, 1894, and he made use of these words :

> Has the expenditure gone down? No; it has gone up. It went up two, three, five, ten millions and more until it is now $38,000,000. And the Conservatives do not shrink from it, but swallow it all. If we come into power, we will follow the example of Mr. Mackenzie, and I say that although we may not be able to bring the expenditures back to what they were, we can reduce the amount two, yea three million dollars a year. (Applause.)

The same hon. gentleman spoke a little later in the same year in the city of Brantford. Here is what he said :

> Do you imagine there is any justification for this increase of expenditure? The Conservatives tell us that there is justification. The population has increased they say. Oh, yes, it has increased nine per cent, but the expenditure has increased 100 per cent. There can be no justification for such an expenditure when, as has been stated, the great bulk is a corrupt expenditure. Moreover, they tell us that if we were in power we could not retrench and economize. But, I do not believe that it will be a very difficult task. (Hear, hear.) It would not be a very difficult task to the extent of one, two, three, and Mr. Mills, the present Minister of Justice, told his constituents a few days ago that it was possible to retrench to the extent of four millions a year.

Now, Sir Richard Cartwright spoke a little later in the House of Commons in 1896, when the last budget was delivered by the Conservative party. He made use of these words in the speech which he delivered in reply to the then Minister of Finance. He said :

I say it is a disgrace and a shame to the government that have been entrusted with our affairs that they come down to us and ask for an expenditure of $38,300,000 a year for federal purposes. Sir, the thing is utterly unjustifiable.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—So it was.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I hope my hon. friend is of the same opinion yet.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Sir Louis Davies spoke in the same session in the same debate and he says :

Now, what is the policy of the Liberal party? Summed up in a few words, it is to reduce the expenditure of the country to the lowest possible point consistent with an efficient service. You tell us that that cannot be done. We have spent hour after hour on this side, going into details and showing how it can be done. In reply to challenges which came from the other side, gentlemen on this side undertook the labour of pointing out the particular departments of the service and which money can be saved and those are all upon record.

Not only could they do it, but they had shown how they could do it and they had pointed out the particular points in the public service where they could bring their principles of economy into practice. Sir Louis Davies continued :

We are ready to go to the country with that statement on which we pledge ourselves that very large and important reductions can be made in the expenditure of the country without impairing the efficient administration of its affairs.

Hon. gentlemen, we know that the Liberal party went to the country, as Sir Louis Davies said they would, with this as the principal point in their platform, and on that platform they received the support of the people of this country and were returned to power. When they met parliament in 1896 they brought down a rather swollen estimate, and the amount was larger than had been presented during any previous year except, I think, the year of the North-west rebellion in 1885, and when the gentlemen in opposition rose in their seats and pointed out to the government that they had gone back on their promises, that they were presenting to the country and parliament larger estimates than those which they had previously condemned as being shameful extravagance, they were answered in this way by the government. Sir Louis Davies said, that the facts—which had been presented by Mr. Foster, Mr. Wallace and other gentlemen with regard to the swollen character of the estimates that were brought down—

The facts are serious, disgraceful I acknowledge, but every atom of responsibility is charged upon the hon. gentlemen for the reckless manner in which they managed the finances. * * * * *
That the people are willing to wait for the development of my hon. friend's policy, which will take place next session, and they will judge the Finance Minister by the policy which he then proposes.

In other words the estimates we are presenting to parliament are not our estimates, we have not had time to go into every branch of the public service and find whether we could carry out our policy of economy, we are not able to do that thing for want of time, we were obliged to take up the estimates as they were prepared for us to a large extent. We admit they are disgraceful, we admit they are extravagant, but we ask the country and the House to suspend judgment upon us till we have an opportunity of presenting estimates of our own. The Hon. Mr. Fielding, Minister of Finance, was more emphatic still and went more into detail in defending himself and his party for bringing in these extravagant estimates in the year 1896. He says :

We had to say in the beginning that we accepted the estimates of the hon. gentleman opposite with a full and clear understanding that we had not an opportunity of inquiring elaborately into the details of the organization of public affairs ; but that our hope and expectation was that we would be able to make some reductions in the expenditure. I have a strong hope that before the end of the fiscal year we may be able to effect some changes in fulfilment of our promises in that direction to show the public that we are able to effect economies which have been spoken of by hon. gentlemen opposite. But it will not be until this first year is completed and until we have paid the debts of hon. gentlemen opposite and entered upon a new year for which we shall prepare the estimates ourselves and have full and complete control of them that we shall be in a position to make comparisons. I have not the slightest doubt that when that time comes a comparison of the records of the Liberal party and the Conservative party will show that the Liberal party is one of economy.

The hon. Finance Minister of the present government longed for the time to come when he would be able to make comparisons, not comparisons between one year and another, or of his own work, as the Secretary of State is now doing, but comparisons between his work as a Finance Minister of this country and the work of the Conservative party in the administration of our financial affairs. They longed for the opportunity when they would be enabled to make these comparisons, but we have now my hon. friend the Secretary of State rising in the House and presenting enormously swollen estimates to this House without making any comparisons save between the years of the administration and management of public finances by his own friends since they have come into power He thinks it is sufficient for the purposes of defence for him to be able to show this House that the expenditure of the incoming year are not so much greater than the expenditure for the present year: that if they will prove to this House that they are not going headlong to destruction and adding tens of millions more to the expenditure of the incoming year than the year through which we are now passing, and for which they themselves have estimates, he feels that if he does this he will have made satisfactory comparisons and the country will be satisfied. As I said when I opened my remarks, the government should be able—as Mr. Fielding said they would be able after they had been two or three years in power—to make satisfactory comparisons between their own administration and the administration of affairs by the Conservatives when they were in power. As my hon. friend has not ventured on these comparisons, I will make a few, and they will be very few. I do not intend to extend my observations, but I cannot allow this opportunity to pass without placing on record some of the comparisons between the Liberal-Conservative administration and the administration as evidenced by the estimates we have now placed before us. I find that for the last complete year of Liberal-Conservative administration, 1895-96, the total expenditure on consolidated revenue was $36,949,142, and I find that the estimates now submitted to the House——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—How much capital account?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I will deal with capital account by itself. I will make distinct comparisons and keep capital account by itself. I am dealing with the expenditure on consolidated revenue and the expenditure for the year 1895-96 was $36,949,142, and I find that the expenditure on consolidated account as contained in the estimates already brought down by my hon. friend for the incoming year is about $41,000,000, an increase from a few thousand less than $37,000,000 in 1895-6, the last year of the Conservatives administration to about $41,000,000 for the year for which we are now making a provision, and with the certainty before us that next year as in all other years, there will be supplementary estimates brought down during the next session of parliament providing for other expenditures in connection with that year. It may be that not quite all of this $41,000,000 that is now being brought down will be expended. It is possible there may be small sums that will not be expended, but I think I am perfectly safe in assuming that the estimates which in all certainty will be brought down during next session of parliament for this particular year with which we are dealing will be greater than any saving which can be effected upon the main and supplementary estimates that are already before us. So that it is now certain that as far as consolidated revenue account is concerned this government is laying out for the expenditure of certainly not less—it may be more—than $41,000,000 for the year 1898–99, and then when we compare that with the expenditure of the Liberal-Conservative government during the year 1895–96 of $36,949,000 we find that there is an increase of over $4,000,000 in consolidated revenue account alone. Here let me point out to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice the position in which he stands at this moment before his former constituents in Bothwell. He promised them, so the premier says, in 1894, that if the Liberal party got into power he would and they would reduce the expenditure on consolidated revenue by $4,000,000 a year—that they would make that reduction. Here we find my hon. friend for the first year in which he is in a position to make estimates, preparing, not only preparing but committing this parliament and the country, to an expenditure of over $4,000,000 greater than what occurred under the Liberal-Conservative government. So that my hon. friend is starting out in his career as a member of the administration by spending, on consolidated revenue account alone, for the first year over $8,000,000 more than he promised his constituents of Bothwell he would spend if he were placed in the government of the country. That is the position in which my hon. friend stands. My hon. friend said something about capital account. I have not these figures in detail. I do not intend to go very largely into them and I notice that the figures that I have are based upon the estimates that were submitted to the House of Commons, and I presume that as the estimates were going through the House some little changes were made, and I notice that the figures that my hon. friend has read, which I have no doubt are based upon the supply bill as it finally went through the House, differ only in some very small particulars from the figures I have in my hand, and I account for it for the reason that some items may have been dropped in the House of Commons. But altogether the difference is so very slight that it is not worth talking about. It only amounts to a few thousand in the whole. Now, we find that in this year there are already estimates brought down for capital expenditure of about $7,000,000. They vary a little for the reason I have already explained. My figures are $6,900,000, and adding these to the figures as I have them it makes a total expenditure of over $48,000,000 provided for in the estimates we have now before us, including capital account and consolidated revenue expenditure. I wish to place these figures on record and I wish to call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the position in which they are now placed before the people of this country in regard to this matter of expenditure. Let us look at the matter of the debt. If I had the resolution of the Quebec conference here, hon. gentlemen would see that it was particularly emphatic on the point that the debt was alarmingly increased. I think the resolution I read made that declaration. Here, we have had the debt going up by leaps and bounds since these hon. gentlemen came into power. We have the expenditure increased on consolidated revenue in two years to the amount of $4,000,000. If that rate is maintained for 18 years in place of the increase, which occurred under the Conservative administration of $12,000,000, or from $24,000,000 to $36,000,000, if that rate is continued for 18 years, it would add to the expenditure of the country on consolidated revenue account, something like $30,000,000 if they keep on as they have been doing during these two years. So that when they complain of the alleged extraordinary acceleration in the increase of the expenditure of the country during the time the Conservative government were in power, it was a mere trifle compared with the extravagant increase which is now going on under their own management. I find the debt on the 30th June, 1896, was $325,717,536.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is gross.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes, that is gross; of course the comparison is fair enough—while on the 30th April, 1898, the gross debt was about $336,702,000, showing at any rate an enormous increase has also gone on, and of course we have to go on when we are voting this year, as I have just shown, about seven millions of capital expenditure. That means nothing else than that an enormous increase shall be effected in the debt during the year that is now coming as has been done during the past year. But my hon. friend the Secretary of State imagines he finds an excuse for a part of this excessive expenditure in the Yukon estimates and in the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal and in the provision that is now made for the plebiscite and some other things which are mentioned. It is true that these casual expenditures are being provided for in the estimates of the next year, but it is equally true that in almost every year the government is confronted with casual expenditures of one kind or another, and the year 1898–99 is not peculiar in the fact that there have been peculiar expenditures of this kind provided for within it. If there is to be a plebiscite in that year there will, I presume, be no general election as we have had in many other years, and if a large expenditure has to be provided for the Yukon there is no North west rebellion to deal with or any difficulty of that kind; and it is quite easy to show that no deduction ought to be made on account of these expenditures to which the hon. gentleman referred, unless, for the purpose of comparison, you go back to former years when the Conservative government was in power and eliminate from their expenditures equally abnormal expenditures that occurred in almost every one of those years. Therefore, for the purpose of comparison there is no use in presenting the statements of the hon. gentlemen to the House unless you are willing to go back, and reshape, revamp, as it were, the expenditure during the Conservative administration, making credit for expenditures which would be fairly compared with these. But while my hon. friend is ready to snatch at Yukon expenditure as a first-rate argument with which to justify himself and his friends before the country for a small part of the expenditure for next year, have we forgotten that during the long time they were in opposition they refused stubbornly to give the Conservative government credit or allowance for the vast expenditures which it had to incur in connection with the acquisition and with the development of the great North-west Territories. When they came into power this great heritage was placed under their care, the postal system had to be developed and an expensive system of Mounted Police had to be maintained; provision had to be made for the surveys of the land and provision had to be made for bringing that vast territory from a lone land such as it was then and converting it step by step until it was prepared to take its place along the line of the provinces of the Dominion of Canada. That was the responsibility that devolved upon the Liberal-Conservative government during all those years, that accounted for much of the increase in the debt which had to be incurred in building the great Canadian Pacific Railway; that was the foundation of the increased expenditure and increased capital expenditure and increased debt during the time the Conservative government were in power. But the hon. gentlemen opposite who now stand pleading that we should exonerate them before the people of this country from their broken pledges, because they had an expenditure of half a million dollars in connection with the Yukon territory: the gentlemen who refused during all those years to give their predecessors the slightest credit for the enormous expenditures they had to incur in development of the great North-west and Manitoba now come and ask the House and the country to forgive them for their broken promises, for their extravagant expenditure and for their swollen estimates, simply because they had to spend half a million dollars in connection with the Yukon territory. Hon. gentlemen, I do not propose to follow these observations any further; I desire, however, to place on record my protest against these expenditures, not only because they are large as compared with the expenditures incurred during the Conservative administration, but because I believe these expenditures are extravagant in themselves. I believe that as time goes on we shall see that our friends in the government have deviated widely from the policy they pursued in opposition and the platform they then laid down. There must be some influences at work in which I would be very sorry to include either of the hon. gentlemen who sit in this House, for I believe neither of them would be capable of being a party to what is corrupt or wrong, but I cannot help believing that for some of these extraordinary expenditures, which this country has now incurred and which will weigh us down with a heavy debt in the future, there are in many cases reasons other than those drawn from the consideration of the public interest. I know my hon. friend is anxious to profess his own honesty and the honesty of the government in reply to these observations. However, I only make them in some way to find in my mind an explanation of the extraordinary expenditures that are being incurred. I cannot understand why this government should vote such extravagant sums of money as they are voting, why they should go back on all their solemn promises, why they should do all this, and do it in the very early days of their adminstration when they cannot have forgotten the promises they made to the people and the warnings they received. I cannot believe they can have done so unless there is in the administration some evil influence that consults other interests than the best interests of the people of this country.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am sure that my hon. friend beside me and myself are very grateful to the hon. gentleman for his promised certificate of character. I suppose when we apply to him it will be given under his hand and seal, and the result will be that the hon. gentleman's friends all over the country, whatever they may say with regard to our colleagues, will always exempt us from the imputations which the hon. gentleman has made on this occasion with so much candour and frankness. The hon. gentleman has told us of the economical tendencies of the government of which he was a member, and declared that all those special charges, those unforeseen requirements which the expenditure of the country from year to year calls for, were quite as frequent in the day of my hon. friend's administration as they have been since. Well, hon. gentlemen, that would require to be the case to justify the expenditure that took place. When these hon. gentlemen came into office in 1878 the expenditure was something less than twenty-three and a half millions; when they retired it was nearly sixteen millions more. I am stating a fact. I can make it as clear as a proposition in Euclid, if time permitted, and I tell hon. gentlemen that that means nearly one million a year increase during the whole period that they were in charge of the government of this country. Let us see what are the expenditures to which the hon. gentleman refers that he says were quite a set-off to those that are being incurred at the present moment. Has the hon. gentleman made any such comparison? Was any new province admitted after 1878 into the Dominion? We know how the expenditure of the government rose between 1867 and 1878, when British Columbia was admitted into the union, when Prince Edward Island was admitted into the union, when the financial terms of union were reconsidered—all these things added to the cost of government, and then the construction of the Intercolonial Railway and the interest upon the increased indebtedness that that structure led to. The same may be said with regard to the canals. It was not until this year that we have had any extra expenditure in consequence of the practical enlargement of the Dominion. The Yukon country has led to an expenditure of $600,000 for the coming year. Is there anything corresponding to that in the past period of the hon. gentleman's administration? My hon. friend knows there is not. He speaks of the development of the North-west Territories, but how was that brought about? By the borrowing of money, by the expenditure of sums on capital account, and the only additions made to the public charges in consequence of that were the sums required to meet the interest upon those expenditures. That is all. And yet I point out to the hon. gentleman that the increase of expenditure amounted to nearly $1,000,000 a year. Then the hon. gentleman has referred to the large expenditure for various other purposes. Take, for instance, the Intercolonial Railway, where $600,000 is required and $250 000 for the rolling stock. The extension of railway accommodation at St. John Harbour, $75,000, and at Halifax, $75,000, and so on. We find the total expenditure specially pertaining to the year is $2,240,000. There was nothing of that sort in any one year when the hon. gentleman was in charge.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—There would have been if he had his own way. There was a tunnel to be run under the Straits of Northumberland, and if he had got his way, how would it have been?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman incurred a very considerable debt for arms and ammunition. That debt the government which succeeded him did not repudiate. That had to be met. The hon. gentleman did not meet that debt and now he says that we have an expenditure greater than was made under their administration. Then let me take the case of the steamer which my hon. friend has referred to, that is being purchased to maintain the communication with Prince Edward Island, costing $180,000. That is an expenditure that the hon. gentleman does not say is unnecessary. He will not say it is extravagant.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—He would sooner have the tunnel.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Let me mention another thing; the hon. gentleman took good care not to make any expenditures in constituencies not represented by his friends. Let me take a single instance. In the county of Bothwell the River Sydenham was blocked, so as to be nearly unnavigable for a series of years. I brought that matter under the attention of the government. For three years in succession the government gave solemn pledges that those obstructions would be removed and that the navigation would be improved, but that was not done. There is, however, in the estimates of the present year $5,000 for that purpose. That estimate ought to be charged to the period of the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, it ought to be charged to the period of the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Suppose we allow you to take that $5,000.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I could name a good many five thousands if time would permit. Let us take the case of the docks and harbours in the maritime provinces, and what happened in the gentleman's own island? Let him look at the expenditure in the Department of Public Works, or in the Department of Railways and Canals in respect to that island, and see what charges have been made during the period that island returned a Reform delegation to the House of Commons. Did the hon. gentleman do his duty by his island?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman says "yes;" then I suppose the hon. gentleman will say that a larger sum is being spent there now than is called for. There is four or five times more required now than a few years ago, because the hon. gentleman neglected his duty, because the hon. gentleman undertook to punish a constituency that would not return supporters to the late administration, because the hon. gentleman, as a minister of the Crown, misused his position for the purpose of attempting to coerce constituencies into supporting the administration. That is the reason why public works, such as breakwaters, were allowed to go to decay, and the present government are expending a very considerable amount of money to bring up the public works of those constituencies to the same level as those in the favoured constituencies which returned supporters of the hon. gentleman. Of course this expenditure will not be required to be continued—certainly not; but the government to-day and next year will be doing work that ought to have been done years ago by the hon. gentleman, if he had done his duty as a minister of the Crown. That is the position of things. Let me say more than that in respect to this expenditure of public money. There are larger expenditures than are ordinarily necessary, but it is because there have been such large expenditures in certain portions of the Dominion, while other portions were absolutely neglected. That condition of things cannot continue. Then, there is another matter. The present government have been hastening the completion of the canals. There is a very considerable sum of money required for that work, and there is a large expenditure on capital account for that reason, larger than there would be under certain circumstances. But does any hon. gentleman say, when the money can be obtained at a low rate of interest, that in hurrying forward the completion of the deepening of the canals the government are not acting in the public interest? And, if it is fair to take a year when that work, which was undertaken, the policy, of which was settled before the government came into office, is being carried out with vigour to completion, that the government is not in these matters acting in the public interest? Then the hon. gentleman spoke about the swollen estimates of 1896. What estimates of 1896 were chosen? The hon. gentleman knows. He, as a member of the administration, prepared the estimates; those estimates were not brought down, but they were ready to be brought down, and the estimate brought down by this government, which he calls a swollen estimate in 1896, is a smaller estimate than that, which the hon. gentleman himself favoured.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I did not speak of the estimates. I said that the reason the government gave for their swollen character, was that it was the Conservatives who were to blame. Anyway they were small compared with what we are getting now.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman says they were small compared with what we are getting now; the hon. gentleman forgets that the controllable expenditure, if he will take the trouble to figure it out, that is the cost of government, is $80,000 less than it was in 1896.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman shakes his head. It is so, nevertheless and I have no doubt whatever that a further reduction can be made, but the hon. gentleman's attempt to mix up appropriations for works that for years had been neglected because they were in constituencies represented by opponents of the late administration, is not, in my opinion, a fair and candid discussion of the estimates which the government have submitted for the consideration of parliament.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think it is necessary to continue this discussion further than to point out this one fact; the hon. gentleman says that during the adminstration of the late government they increased the annual expenditure about $12,000,000. While admitting his statement, for the sake of argument, to be correct, without dealing in detail, we find in the Supply Bill, we have now before us, that they have increased the estimates by $7,000,000. Multiply that by eighteen, the length of time the Conservatives were in power, you can easily arrive at the position in which the finances of the country will be at the end of that time, if the hon. gentlemen should remain so long in power. The hon. gentleman talks about the public debt. Compare the public debt in 1873, when the hon. friends went into power, and the public debt when they went out of power; they increased the gross debt nearly $50,000,000 during the five years of their administration. All you have to do is to look at the figures, and they tell their own story. I am not going to argue this question at present. I have heard the statement made by the hon. gentleman's friends so often on electioneering campaigns, which have been answered so completely and effectively in the past, that it is not necessary for any one to enter, particularly at this moment of the session, into a refutation of what the hon. gentleman has said. There is just one point to which he studiously omitted to refer The hon. gentleman quoted from the speech of what the premier alleges he stated in the campaign when he was contesting Bothwell, that he was going to save in the annual expenditure some $4,000,000. Well, instead of decreasing it $4,000,000 they have increased it about $7,000,000.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Not quite.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is another evidence of what might be called—I would not attribute it to the hon. gentleman, because I know he would not be capable of anything of that kind—what might be called demagogism. It sounds very much like it when you compare the statement made on the stump with the facts as they exist. What I object to strongly is the reduction of the interest paid to depositors in Canada. They are paying two and seven-eighths per cent for the money borrowed in England. It takes about two-eighths to manage that fund in England. I am speaking now by the book. I have made particular inquiry, having looked into the matter in the past. That makes the cost of the money to Canada at the present moment $3\frac{1}{8}$ per cent; yet we hear the boast constantly made, of our being able to borrow at $2\frac{7}{8}$ per cent, while the poor unfortunate wage-earners of this country who deposit in the savings bank are only allowed $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Add, if you like, $\frac{1}{8}$ per cent for management in Canada, and there is a difference between the cost to the country of the money borrowed abroad and the rate allowed the poorer class of people who deposit in the post office savings banks, of about $\frac{5}{8}$ of 1 per cent. Supposing it cost $\frac{2}{8}$ to manage it in Canada, the same as it does in England, then it makes a difference against the Canadian depositors of one-half per cent, I should like to know what the financial basis is, or what good reason there is for that policy, unless it is to appease the demands of the banks.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—All sums under a certain amount are allowed three per cent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If they are allowed three per cent in Canada now, it is the result of the attacks which were made upon the government when the announcement was made by the Finance Minister in his budget speech, because there was no provision for paying three per cent upon small amounts at that time. I am dealing with the figures and facts as they were presented to parliament. If they have been compelled to recede from that position, the outside lender and loan depositor stand pretty nearly upon an equal basis. But I should like to know how small the amount is on which three per cent is allowed. If two and a half per cent only is to be paid to those who deposit larger sums, and I believe the maximum deposit allowed is not to exceed $1,000, what is the limit?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, I think that is it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But I go further than that; I have always held the opinion, and I hold it stronger to-day than I ever did, that you had better pay three and a half per cent for money borrowed from the residents of Canada than get it at three per cent in England, or in any foreign country, and my reason is this: that all the money remitted for interest on money borrowed in another country depletes the circulation to that extent and renders us to that extent poorer.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But the principle comes in.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If you paid to the depositor in Canada one-half per cent more, it would be retained in Canada for the support and sustenance of those people who make the deposits. I think in connection with this question, we might take a leaf out of the book of France, where they have small landed proprietors who loan to the government to an enormous extent, so as to avoid the necessity of going into foreign markets for the money they require to carry on the affairs of their government. What is the result? The result is that all the interest which is paid to the owners of small landed plots remains in the country. It keeps the wealth in the country, and assists them in living in a comfortable state. I believe that would be the best policy for this country. The Finance Minister says "Oh, no; wherever you can get the money cheapest, get it," but when you get it cheaper you send the interest out of the country, and the policy of the present government is to pay to the Canadian depositors less by the sums to which I have called the attention of the Senate than they do to the foreign capitalists. It is a false policy. It may not be strictly in accordance with the doctrines laid down by Adam Smith and other economists and theorists like him; but the practical result is precisely what I have said, and I hope, in the interest of the small depositors in this country, who are really the wage-earners, that the government will recede from the position they have taken, and give as much at least to the Canadian depositor as they do the English lender, and a little more.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—It is really pleasant to listen to a great reasoner and philosopher, and I believe a patriot, even if he be an opponent. I fully endorse the statement just made by my hon. friend. I believe the government of the country would do better if they would borrow from their own people and pay the interest to their own people. It would, as the hon. gentleman has stated, keep the money in the country instead of having it flow out to other countries. I believe that even our municipalities are doing wrong in this respect to-day. The municipality in which I live advertised for $140,000 a short time ago, and the consequence was that the loan was taken from our city and made by a sister city in Canada, and of course as a municipality we will have to meet the annual interest and thereby deplete our income to that extent. The same rule applies, of course, to the general government of Canada. If the government in their wisdom could reconsider their position with reference to the paying of interest, and pay even a larger sum to our own people, it would be well. It would make our people more patriotic, because people who have an interest, either in money or real estate, in the country become loyalists. They become true to their country; they feel that they have something to live for and enjoy, and that they are part and parcel even of the financial system of the country. On this basis I fully endorse what the hon. gentleman from Belleville (Sir Mackenzie Bowell) has just stated. I do not know how the government will take it, but I believe they are wise enough to see there is a strong argument in the position. I trust that they will act upon the suggestion, unless they feel that it would be highly injurious to the interests of the country; but I cannot, for the life of me, see how that can be, because every dollar of interest kept in Canada must enrich the country to that extent.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I do not wish to protract this debate: it has been altogether too long. I am sorry the session is now so near a close. This might have been an interesting debate had the bill been brought down sooner. But it seems to me the policy of the government is to bring the important measures down at the close of the session. We had an important bill before us the other day, and I must acknowledge that I did not do my duty in regard to it—that is, with reference to the payment of money to Manitoba for the construction of their buildings. I intended to oppose it, particularly in the face of the announcement that the question had been settled. I had intended to move that the various Orders in Council and Acts of parliament be brought down. But the bill passed so quickly that I had not an opportunity of touching it.

It is the most disgraceful measure passed this session, and I want to put upon record my dissatisfaction with the way in which these bills are brought down at the end of the session, when one has no opportunity of properly considering them. I had no opportunity of judging of the merits of that measure, and I fully intend to divide the House upon it, to ascertain whether the hon. gentlemen are willing to pay a sum twice over. The hon. Minister of Justice shakes his head. He knows more about it than I do and I think I am entitled to the information that he possesses. If these papers had been brought down, the hon. gentleman might have been able to satisfy us that we were not paying the amount over again. With reference to the question of interest, that has been well settled. Already there has been a great decrease of deposits in the various post office savings banks of this country. It is impossible for poor men to accept so low a rate. Three per cent is low enough, and I should very much like to see a larger amount paid to depositors. It is a policy that should have been pursued long ago. My idea is that when a man has $100 he should be entitled to deposit his money and receive the government security; that is better than depositing it with a bank. Now, however, they are going to withdraw the money from the savings bank and deposit it in the banks of the country. The rate of interest is increasing in England, and here we are decreasing it, and I think it is a very bad system. I hope the government will take the matter into consideration for the benefit of the people. It is too late to enter into the discussion now, but one thing strikes me very forcibly, that when the Reformers held their great meeting in Ottawa in 1893 and promised what they would do, they deceived the people. They said they would do certain things.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—You did not agree with their view.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Circumstances alter cases. But these far-seeing men, who knew what they were talking about, should never have made promises that they would not be able to carry out when they were improper. I am not a politician——

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Oh, oh!

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, oh!

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I merely want to place matters in a proper light before this country. These gentlemen made a promise that they would reduce the expenditure; now they find it is an impossibility. Why were they not honest? They knew all the difficulties they would have to face. They blamed their opponents for the increase in the past, and now they find it necessary to come and ask pity from their opponents for the very assertions they made when in opposition. I hope that another session we will have important bills before us in proper time. If I could have my way, I would peremptorily refuse to consider any measure unless we have time to consider it carefully.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We must have something coming last, otherwise we would have brought the session to a close months ago.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second and third times and passed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

THE PROROGATION.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

"MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:

"The Commons of Canada have voted certain Supplies required to enable the government to defray the expenses of the Public Service.

"In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following bill:

'An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service, for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1898, and the 30th June, 1899, and for other purposes relating to the public service;'

to which bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent."

To this bill the Clerk of the Senate, by His Excellency's command, did thereupon say:

"In Her Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks Her Loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this bill."

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the THIRD SESSION of the EIGHTH PARLIAMENT of the DOMINION with the following

SPEECH:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:
Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I am glad to be able to relieve you from further attendance in parliament.

Whilst all the measures which public interest seemed to demand and to which I invited your consideration at the opening of this session, have not received the concurrence of both Houses of Parliament, I congratulate you on the very important legislation which has been the outcome of your deliberations, particularly the Plebiscite Act and the new Franchise Act, which, it is confidently expected, will work satisfactorily in all parts of the Dominion.

I rejoice that during my term of office, it has been my good fortune to witness the improved relations that have grown up between Canada and the neighbouring republic, and I look forward with much satisfaction to the great benefits that will flow from a settlement of the many questions that have caused irritation in the past.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the liberal provision which you have made for the public service.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:
Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I now wish to express the earnest hope that the work of the session may materially advance the prosperity of the country.

I cannot be unmindful of the fact that this is the last occasion on which it will be my privilege to address you from this seat as the representative of the sovereign.

In bidding you a cordial farewell, I have to return my warm acknowledgments of the parting address, full of loyalty to the Queen and of kindly good-will to myself, which I am officially informed has been unanimously passed by both Houses of Parliament, and which will always constitute a valued token and memorial of my stay amongst you; and in conclusion I desire to express my most hearty good wishes for your personal happiness and for the welfare of the great interests entrusted to you.

The SPEAKER of the Senate then said:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:
Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

It is His Excellency the Governor General's will and pleasure that this Parliament be prorogued until Monday, the twenty-fifth day of July next, to be here held, and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued until the twenty-fifth day of July next.

REPLY OF HIS EXCELLENCY TO THE ADDRESS OF BOTH HOUSES.

The Speaker of the Senate in French, and the Speaker of the Commons in English, read to His Excellency the joint address passed by both Houses.

To this His EXCELLENCY replied as follows:

The source and character of this address combine to render it conspicuous and memorable in my estimation as an express token to be prized with no ordinary sense of satisfaction and appreciation.

The mere fact that this manifestation has emanated from the two Houses of Parliament would render it interesting and significant. But this is not one of those occurrences or proceedings where the action itself is everything, and the manner and method of its performance of comparatively little account. A declaration of your well-known loyalty to the Queen, and of good-will towards her representative, is doubtless something to be welcomed with great satisfaction, but in addition to that aspect of the matter you have offered to us assurances of discriminating kindliness which cannot fail to be gratefully received by those to whom these evidently sincere and cordial expressions are addressed.

It may possibly be within your knowledge, gentlemen, that when entering upon the honourable position which I have been privileged to occupy for nearly five years, I stated, after taking the oaths of office, that it was my clear duty and my aim to make the service of Canada the main principle and purpose of my life while in this country. To be reminded of that utterance is to be reminded of much inadequacy and many omissions on my part; but if in any degree I have been enabled to keep that aim in view, and to endeavour to act in accordance therewith this has been due, humanly speaking, especially and emphatically, to the constant co-operation, the ever ready and suggestive sympathy of one whose devotion to the interests and welfare of Canada you have thoughtfully referred to in terms no less generous than just.

With the manifold experiences of the past five years you can readily believe that no one occupying a public position, and especially the position of the representative of the Crown, in this loyal and hospitable country, could pass that amount of time amongst you in all parts of the Dominion, without acquiring a large amount of information and experiencing a vast amount of kindness and consideration. To leave our many friends and acquaintances adds inevitably to the regret with which we contemplate our departure, but we also feel that those friendships and acquaintanceships are an abiding possession, not to be abolished by absence, and while alluding to this, let me remark that this element in our Canadian experience commenced before we came to this country in our official capacity. We were here in earlier days; and it was during our first voyage hither, before setting foot on your shores, that some lifelong friendships with several eminent Canadians were commenced. It was thus that we met that truly noble man, Sir John Thompson—a man of rare and splendid gifts, and not only so, but one who was imbued with the spirit to devote those gifts unreservedly for the good of this country—one whose sound principles and high standards could not fail to have an ennobling influence on all the phases of public life with which he had to deal.

I allude to him as the first as well as one of the most eminent of all our Canadian friends, and also as one of the three premiers to each of whom I have had the privilege of announcing the bestowal of honours at the hand of the Queen. The last of these was on the occasion of the Diamond Jubilee of Her Majesty, when Canada was so well represented at that historic and memorable celebration by the Prime Minister. I may be permitted to congratulate him regarding those auspicious circumstances, and also, with reference to this address, to thank him, not only officially as the mover thereof in the House of Commons, but personally as a friend, because of the manner in which he has always shown how truly he has been actuated at all times by those sentiments which are here expressed and set forth.

In conclusion, gentlemen, allow me to exchange felicitations with you upon what you have referred to with just satisfaction, as to the marks of progress and prosperity for Canada in various departments of her national life. In alluding to one important feature of these, I am tempted to quote the words of a distinguished predecessor uttered by him in this House, also to a farewell address from the two Houses of Parliament. In the course of his eloquent reply, Lord Dufferin said:

"I found you a loyal people. I leave you the truest-hearted subjects in Her Majesty's dominions. I found you proud of your descent, and anxious to maintain your connection with the mother country. I leave you, more convinced than ever of the solicitude of Great Britain to reciprocate your affection, and of her dependence on your fidelity in every emergency."

And when I have the privilege, in accordance with the mission entrusted to me by you in this address, of presenting to our gracious Queen the assurance of your unswerving and patriotic devotion, I shall, again quoting the words of that former Viceroy, be able to assure her that not a leaf has fallen from her maple chaplet, and that the lustre of no jewel in her transatlantic diadem has been dimmed. (Applause.)
